Every wide-awake Exhibitor KNOWS that "bunk" never gets the money on Serials. You MUST have the story—Stars—Thrills—Props. You must inject that character of photo-play entertainment that entertains, that grips and that makes your audiences come back for more. That's the character of "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring." It is crammed full of exciting action, picturing the fascination, glamour, glitter and lure of the big white tops and the magic sawdust arena. With the famous Serial Stars

GRACE CUNARD & FRANCIS FORD

—playing the leading roles, supported by a huge ensemble of talent you may be assured, in fact, YOU KNOW, without our telling you that this new Universal Serial is "there." No Stars in ANY Serial picture now being shown or ever shown surpassed, or even equaled the drawing power of Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. They are known to millions of people in every part of the world for their matchless work in serial pictures.

Wonderful Box Office ATTRACTION

"The Adventures Of Peg O' The Ring" is a monster Box Office attraction. It will insure 15 weeks of capacity business for you. It will keep your patrons keyed up to the highest pitch for 30 reels of wonderful photo-play, new, novel and different from anything you've ever shown in your House in the way of serial Pictures. Bookings are pouring in to 72 Universal Exchanges. Get busy today. Write or wire your nearest Universal Exchange for booking or reservations, and BE SURE to get a copy of the complete Advertising Campaign Book. F. J. REMBUSH

President of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and Exhibitors' Vice President of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America DISCARDS FEATURES in all of his houses and books the UNIVERSAL Program.

Mr. F. J. Rembush, President Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and Vice President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Board of Trade of America.

THE accompanying half tone cut is that of Mr. F. J. Rembush of Indianapolis, President of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Exhibitors' Vice-President of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, and one of the largest and best known exhibitors in the United States.

It is safe to say that Mr. Rembush has had as much experience in the picture business as any man in the trade today. Hundreds of exhibitors in the Central Western States have been guided by Mr. Rembush's policies. They know how thorough is his knowledge of every angle of exhibiting.

In a letter written to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company from Mr. Schnitzer, manager of the Central Film Service of Indianapolis, and reproduced herewith, is revealed the handwriting on the wall. Read the letter.

"Mr. F. J. Rembush, known all over the United States as the maker and manufacturer of the mirror screen and one of the oldest exhibitors in the United States, called at our office today and admitted that Features were not getting him any money, and made arrangements to go back to the regular Universal Program.

"Mr. Rembush has been away from the service for over a year, but has found to his sorrow that, while the receipts were increased somewhat by putting on Features, they were not increased in proportion to the amount he had to pay for the Features, and the result has been that he has not made any money.

"Mr. Rembush controls several houses, and we are glad to say we have completed arrangements with him to place the Universal program in all houses now using Features."

We could write you a thousand advertisements and give you sales talks from now until doomsday and not begin to equal in weight the fact that Mr. Rembush has discarded all features and has booked the entire Universal Program in all of his houses.

Mr. Rembush is in the picture business for money, not glory, or health. He has tried everything worth while in moving pictures and his latest is "THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM FOR MINE." Heed the handwriting on the wall, Mr. Exhibitor. Book the Universal Program now if you can get it; if not, watch your opportunity as soon as you can. Write or wire your nearest Universal Exchange for more facts and figures that mean money to you. Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Carl Laemmle, President, Largest Film Manufacturing Concern in the Universe, Sixteen Hundred Broadway, New York.

The UNIVERSAL GREATEST PROGRAM ON EARTH

READ THE HAND WRITING ON THE WALL. Prepare yourself for the future. If you can read between the lines—if you are in the picture business to stay—if you want to assure and insure the profits to which you are entitled—BOOK THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM NOW. Next week in this Trade Paper we are going to publish in a full page advertisement the expressions (taken from a letter) from one of the oldest, shrewdest and one of the largest Exhibitors in America, on "The Program vs. the Feature." Look for this coming ad. Study every word of it. Be guided by one of the smartest, most successful Exhibitors in the trade. Our advice to you now, as always, is: If you can book the Universal Program DO IT NOW. If you can't get it now, watch your opportunity and get it at your first chance. To wide-awake Exhibitors who expect to stay in this game, this is valuable advice. Shrewd men will profit by what we say here. On this week's Universal Program are another succession of Box Office Attractions that will pack your house.

Hobart Bosworth in "The Iron Hand." With Jane Novak. Eighteenth Red Feather Production. Directed by Hobart Bosworth. Released May 29. A tremendous story—red-blooded and vigorous, with Hobart Bosworth in some remarkable characterizations. In the opening he is a ward boss who refuses to bow to the will of a big politician. The politician frames him and sends him up the river. Later he gets in line and becomes a powerful and wealthy political leader. He has raised as his own the son of a former crook associate and is broken-hearted when the boy refuses his assistance—with the remark that his money is "tainted." The boy's love for the daughter of his foster father's enemy, a so-called reformer furnishes a complication and a striking climax. The whole production is filled with human interest, and is one of the strongest releases of the season.

Robert Leonard and Ella Hall in "The Silent Man of Timber Gulch." Two Reel Gold Seal Heart Interest Drama. Directed by Robert Leonard. Released May 30. One of popular Bob Leonard's strongest characterizations is this silent man, who under the mistaken belief that he has killed a man, lives a lonely life of self exile. Ella plays the part of his wife, who waits his return, only to pass on from sheer loneliness. Later she appears as the daughter, who unexpectedly finds the father and brings him the glad news that he is innocent of crime. A particularly strong play of most absorbing interest.

"Tough Luck on a Rough Sea." Two Reel L-KO with funny Dan Russell. Released May 31. A side-splitting farce comedy that is unusual in location, situations, characters and plot. The action takes place for the most part on board an ocean liner. It is so crammed, jammed full of pep and action that it will set your audiences wild with laughter. No funnier comedy was ever filmed. It's a wonder. If you are not showing the Universal Program, book this special.

"Two Mothers." With Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson. Two Reel Laemmle Emotional Drama. Directed by Lloyd Carleton. Released June 1. From the strong Saturday Evening Post story by I. A. R. Wylie. Millions have read this unusual tale of maternal love, and every one of them will want to see this great screen adaptation. Two rival opera singers are striving for the same place with a big theatrical production. One is the step-mother of the other's young son, and the action develops a story of sacrifice prompted by mother love that will hold any audience spell-bound. A splendid release.

King Baggot in "Jim Slocum, No. 46393." With Edna Hunter and a strong cast. Two Reel Imp Drama. Directed by Robert Cummings. Released June 2. An unusual characterization even for King Baggot, one of the most versatile actors in the world. As the unfortunate chauffeur who loses his job while his wife and baby lie at home sick unto death, there is a human appeal in this clean drama that will make it go big wherever shown. A fine, human story with the true heart punch and some remarkably fine acting.

"Tammany's Tiger." With Marie Walcamp and Leo Hill. Two Reel 101-Bison Wild Animal Drama. Directed by Henry MacRae. Released June 3. This unusual play starts mildly enough with a doped tiger displayed at a political meeting; but soon the dope loses its effect and things begin to happen. When the extreme limit of excitement seems to have been reached, an entire menagerie is let loose, and the thrills follow in quick succession. A wonderful picture, and one that you cannot afford to overlook.

"As In a Dream." With Sydney Ayres and Doris Pawn. Three Reel Rex Labor Drama. Released June 4. A strong story of the eternal battle between capital and labor. Sydney is a social settlement worker and Doris the daughter of a capitalist who pays starvation wages. She falls from her horse and is taken to the settlement house suffering from loss of memory. Her presence is used to advantage in getting fairer treatment of his employees from her father and wedding bells are promised at the end of a thrilling third reel.

To interest in his theatre a constantly increasing proportion of the available population is a necessity for the exhibitor who not only wants to make money now but wants to keep on making money. The theatre having the right to display the Paramount Trademark is constantly and consistently increasing its profits and, incidentally, widening the circle from which it draws patronage.

"THE WOMAN WHO DARED"

A gripping story of European intrique by

C.N. & A.M. WILLIAMSON

ARRANGEMENT WITH ALICE KAUSER

SIERRA S.F.

¶ "THE WOMAN WHO DARED" is a story of a beautiful woman's Soul, torn between Love of Country, a Defense of Her Honor and the Love of a Man, and showing how fearless a woman can be when a big issue is at stake, and demonstrating fully that a pretty woman is perfectly capable of Changing Her Mind. ¶ No story thus far adapted for the screen is as full of Heart-Interest Thrilling Adventure and spine-curdling Fights, with a tremendous Element of Suspense throughout, as is "The Woman Who Dared"; and the story in every way bears out its thrilling title. ¶ It will appeal to, and hold spell-bound alike, men, women and the younger members of the family. It is a clean and uplifting story, and the stirring action is depicted in rich and beautiful settings; with marvelous costuming and lighting effects.

THEATRES almost everywhere are crowded with multiple part features of monotonous similarity. The sum total of many an Exhibitor's daily grind is "trying to make ends meet."

¶ At intervals in cheerful, yet sharp, contrast the dull monotony is relieved by the timely appearance of a BLUEBIRD production.

¶ And those Theatres that are gradually and surely turning to BLUEBIRD productions are not alone lifting themselves out of the run of the mediocre and commonplace, but are insuring the financial growth and expansion that comes as a sure reward from a constantly growing appreciative clientele, which demands the finer things in life.

"God's Country

Special Blue Ribbon Fea

From the book by James Oliver Curwood

The World.

"God's Country and the Woman," a feature film adapted from James Oliver Curwood's novel, was seen last night. The feature was an interesting story of primitive emotions in the far North, better in quality than the average film of its kind.

The Journal of Commerce AND COMMERCIAL BULLETIN

"God's Country and the Woman"—a drama of the North West—is from the story by James Oliver Curwood. There have been many pictures shown of life in the wilds of the North West, but none that exceed this in interest and artistic treatment. The photography is splendid, and each and every member of the cast is a finished player. The result is one of the best pictures that the Vitagraph Company ever has produced and shown.

The Evening Telegram

Superb pictures of hunting and camping in the Canadian wilds, stirring views of dog teams in action, and a thrilling melodramatic story make "God's Country and the Woman," in the Fulton Theatre, a record-breaking motion picture play.

New York Press

Realism feature of "God's Country." The "atmosphere" and local color of the Northland has been worked to a degree unusual even in this day of feature films, so realistic that nature herself feels pale beside them.

The Evening Sun.

"God's Country," as placed by the new photoplay, "God's Country and the Woman," at the Fulton Theatre, is a land of deep winter and wonderful snowscapes. The drama has no equal on the screen. The acting is of the best and as a whole the picture will be one of the memorial Vitagraphs.

The Sun.

"God's Country and the Woman" is a stirring drama of the Western plains, which proves equally as interesting as its predecessor, which was Edna May in "Salvation Joan."

The Globe AND Commercial Advertiser.

A gripping story of primitive emotions of the far North is told in "God's Country and the Woman," a Vitagraph feature film adapted from James Oliver Curwood's novel of the same name. The interest of the audience is held throughout by the enormous dramatic situations which the play contains.

THE NEW YORK HERALD.

The play is based on James Oliver Curwood's story of the North West and its stirring scenes were well portrayed by one of the Vitagraph's Western companies.

The Morning Telegraph

"God's Country and the Woman" is a production of which the Vitagraph can well be proud, for it embodies qualities of excellence to a degree not always found in the productions that are being set forth these days.

Evening Mail

Exhibitors will receive a startling but pleasant surprise when they see on the regular V-L-S-E program this massive eight-part feature. The writer believes that it is too good for regular program distribution. HE BELIEVES THAT IF THE PROPER MUSICAL SETTINGS WERE GIVEN IT, AND A LARGE ORCHESTRA WAS SUPPLIED, THE PICTURE COULD HAVE A LONG RUN AT $2 PRICES IN A BROADWAY THEATRE. THEATRES HAVE BEEN RENTED ON SLIGHTER PRETEXTS. It is one of the very few stories which are full enough of the right sort of material to make long films, and as directed and acted it is gripping from start to finish. In the final climax, which had been so well prepared for and which was handled in such an uncandidly EFFECTIVE WAY THE SPECTATORS WERE READY TO RISE UP AND CHEER.

SUCH MARVELOUS EXTERIORS AND SNOW SCENES AS ARE IN THIS FILM HAVE NEVER BEFORE BEEN SEEN IN A PICTURE. The film is worth while for them alone.

Keep Your Ear to the Rail!

Remember when you were a small boy how you put your ear to the rail and listened for the oncoming train? You heard the rail click when the train was miles away, long before others knew it was coming.

This is the busy age when conciseness, clearness and terseness are demanded in every line.

If your ear has been on the rail you will have heard the call of the public for Essanay's short classics, its one, two and three reel subjects. They are concise, clear, terse, with action in every foot.

Don't fail to have them on your program. It spells filled houses.

Squad From Station House Swept Aside by Enthusiastic "Movie" Fans

HUNDREDS TURNED AWAY

Curiosity to see Charley Chaplin in his latest Essanay scream, "Carmen," caused such a jam at the Orpheum Theatre, on Monday evening, that Manager Lord was compelled to phone to the police station for a squadron of "cops" to hold the crowd in check.

Although the doors were opened early, the house was quickly filled and a waiting line established. This line grew in numbers every minute, so that in a short time there was a small sized army, packed together like sheep, waiting for the second show. They stood there for nearly two hours, blocking the sidewalk and complaining because the theatre was not big enough

When the first show was over people nearly pushed the doors down in their frantic efforts to get a seat. Attendants were swept aside. So were the police. The second house, both upstairs and downstairs, was soon filled and the show started over again.

Manager Lord says it was the biggest day's business ever done at the theatre. Hundreds, he said, were turned away. During the three days Mr. Lord says over 12,000 people saw "Carmen" at the Orpheum Theatre.

SUPERLATIVE PICTURES

Neither competition, hot weather nor other adverse factors have any terror for V. L. S. E. exhibitors.

They occupy a commanding position. They have stepped above any conditions which hamper progress.

Big Four productions have been their stepping stones.

The advantage which these exhibitors enjoy will be even more manifest during the next few months.

At their call will be a line-up of truly extraordinary offerings, destined to crush lobbies as they have never been before.

These include:

"Sherlock Holmes"
With William Gillette in Seven Parts

"The Combat"
Ralph Ince's Super Picture—in Nine Parts

"The Crisis"
Another "Spoilers" with the Same Cast

"The Iron Trail"
A Rex Beach Master Play.

Chaplin's Burlesque on "Carmen"
The Comedy which is Shattering all Box Office History

"God's Country and the Woman"
A Play which will Re-play Everywhere—in Eight Parts

"The Barrier"
Another Rex Beach Offering of Super Merit

"The Ne'er-Do-Well"
A Success so Big that it Dwarfs any Comment

These are "Special" Features principally, in the sense that they offer extra stimulus to a service which in its general high average has never been surpassed in the moving picture field.

They are offered on the same equitable basis that all Big Four productions are booked; i. e., on their box office value.

Will you be one to share in the added profit which these pictures are certain to insure.

If so, it would be well to place yourself in the position where you will not only have first call on them, but where the prestige gained from Big Four's general releases, will aid you in making the most of these special offerings.

Gentlemen:

I have never had as many people in my house as I had with your last picture, and that is saying a whole lot. The feature was perfect and if there was a better picture ever made, I have never heard of it.

Not only this picture but every picture that I have used of yours has been far in the lead. I have never had a bad one.

If you wish to use this letter, you may, and anyone that doubts what I have said above, can use these pictures, and if I am not right, I will pay his film bill.

If I were to try to tell you all that I know about your features, it would take as much time to do it as it did the Holy Bible. A man who has used one of your features and never uses another one, has something very wrong with him.

If at any time I can help you please let me know.

With best wishes, and all the luck in the film game, as I know you can deliver the goods.

Yours very truly,

J T Hatch

THANKS, MR. BARRETT; THE SENTIMENTS AND MULTITUDE OF YOUR

Chicago, Ill., April 21, 1916.

Without any solicitation from your office and purely from a business standpoint I cheerfully express my opinion of the merits of the Serial "IRON CLAW". In the heart of Chicago, we cater to transient trade only, very few regulars, until the screening of the above named serial. With "THE IRON CLAW" the business assumed abnormal proportions and the fact that the production has been extended to (20) chapters fails to hurt the feelings of the management. We are glad from a box office point of view and our patrons' expressions in favor of the continuance of the "IRON CLAW", to voice our opinion in writing.

Very respectfully yours,

Bessie Barriscale in Not My Sister

May 14th is the week for the release of "Not My Sister," the latest TRIANGLE-Ince Picture in which Bessie Barriscale stars. That this picture will be well received by the public is evidenced by the reception of the other TRIANGLE PLAYS in which she has appeared—"The Golden Claw," "Green Swamp," "Honor's Altar," "Bullets and Brown Eyes," and "The Last Act." And William Desmond, who played with Billie Burke in "Peggy" and in the "Waifs," more than lives up to his reputation in this latest release.

Should a Wife Confess?

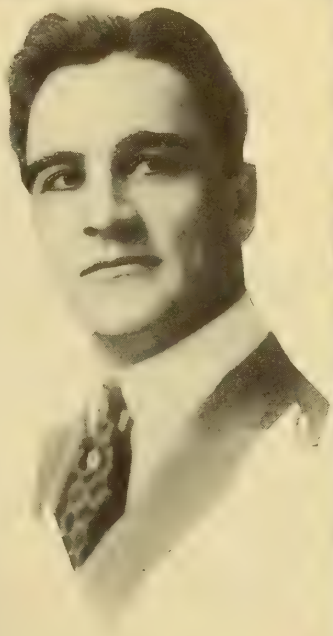
Should a wife happily married confess to a husband a misstep made in her youth? Should she risk her happiness in this way? Your patrons will enjoy answering this question for themselves.

Long, long ago the artist had grievously wronged her, and now he wanted her sister to pose for him as she had done. She couldn't persuade the girl to stay at home, and she dared not tell her husband of the misstep, so daily she went to the studio to protect the younger girl until she had aroused the jealousy of her husband. And then she had to tell him.

TRIANGLE

TRIANGLE PLAYS

Who Killed William Desmond?



He was found with a knife in his heart on the floor of his studio.

When the unhappy wife had told the husband of the misstep of her youth he vowed to kill the artist who had wronged her. The next day the newspaper headings screamed his death. But he never committed the murder.

Your patrons will enjoy this latest TRIANGLE PLAY—they'll love to answer for themselves the questions which this picture brings up—"What would I have done under the circumstances?"

Dorothy Gish in "SUSAN ROCKS THE BOAT"

That's the title of the TRIANGLE Fine-Arts Picture to be released for the same week. This popular star with Owen Moore presents a picture that will go straight to the hearts of your patrons—a picture on the idleness of the rich young girls of today.

Facts and Comments

ALL of us but speak our deepest convictions when we say that the motion picture has made marvelous strides of progress. Very welcome then are great, concrete and unmistakable proofs of this progress. Mr. George Kleine has furnished such proof by the publication of a remarkable book bearing the title "George Kleine's Cycle of Film Classics." It is a book fit to adorn any scholar's library and a gem in the literature of our art. Nor do we allude merely to the splendid appearance of the book. It presents the labors of a man of high literary qualifications and of scholarly taste. It embodies the stories of "Spartacus," "Julius Caesar," "Antony and Cleopatra," "Quo Vadis?" "The Last Days of Pompeii," "Othello," "The Lion of Venice" and "Vanity Fair." The book is the gospel of the screen's higher destiny. We mention it here because more eloquent than a hundred speeches or editorials it proclaims the inestimable value and the unexhausted possibilities of the motion picture as the highest form of education and entertainment. For gala performances in high schools and for the screen of dramatic societies the series is indeed a "Cycle of "Film Classics" precious beyond description, but its value to the high-class exhibitor is even greater. Imagine a series of such pictures as we named above presented as "the great cycle of film classics." Here is an opportunity for a high-class exhibitor to add priceless prestige to his theatre and to realize extraordinary profits. Intelligently advertised and adequately presented the "Cycle of Film Classics" ought to break records everywhere.

RUMORS persist that the Governor will veto the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill. Whether these rumors have any foundation in fact or not we hope the representation of the film interests will appear in full force and make the best showing possible. We must show the world that the film men are unanimous in their opposition to censorship. Suspicion of disunion in our ranks is fatal to every successful fight against censorship.

THE great day for the support of the Actors' Fund will be the fifteenth of May. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is in hearty sympathy with the objects and purposes of this fund. We urge the exhibitors of motion pictures throughout the United States to devote some portion of their receipts on the fifteenth day of May to this worthy charity. Little need be said as to the splendid objects of the fund. The lives of actors and actresses are devoted to their art, the highest ambition of which is and always must be to entertain the public. They are, therefore, in the best and highest sense the servants of the public. In the old days they were the proteges of royalty, but now they must depend on the favor and sympathy of the great masses. The conscientious pursuit of art for its own sake is not conducive to material prosperity; indeed the whole environment of the actor militates against habits of thrift and economy. Thus it happens that many artists find themselves in sore need after their talents and their health have been freely sacrificed on the altar of art. The object of the Actors' Fund is to protect such men and women against distressing want and especially to secure their old age against undeserved misery and privation.

Remember then that this fifteenth day of May offers you a rare opportunity of responding in generous measure to this humane and unselfish call for help. Whatever you wish to donate on that day will be welcome and will accomplish a noble purpose. Make your public share in the donation; advise them of the objects of May fifteenth as well as of the objects of the Actors' Fund and they will swell the receipts of the day. The generosity of Americans is proverbial the world over and a frank and earnest appeal to the public will surely bring results. The Fifteenth Day of May ought to make us all ponder the immortal words: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Where Language Fails

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

ILLUSIONS must sometimes be cherished if we would enjoy life. What else makes Spring so promising, youth so gay, and love so dear? But one of our greatest illusions, that language is a fearful and wonderful thing, has not been well and strong since moving pictures came to town. Fearful it may be, an object of deep solicitude to the boy at grammar school, or to the aspirant for literary honors, but reverence for its sublimity is becoming tainted with disgust for its complexities.

People of great nations are murdering one another by millions for no greater reason than that a confusion of tongues has caused the nations to misunderstand one another, has kept the ideals of one race from the others, has estranged people who would naturally commingle if brought into close communion of thought and feeling by a universal medium. It is not the boundary line that divides Europe into groups, but the clannishness fostered in each group by a confusion of tongues. We are actually the creatures of the language we speak.

We have ample proof that language fails when nations so miserably misunderstand one another, and that it does among those who use the same tongue, when individuals miserably misunderstand one another. What the speaker says may have the best of motives, the kindest of intentions, behind it. What the auditor hears, even without the intervention of a tale-bearing mutual acquaintance, may cause a deep wound, if not lasting enmity. A few moments of conversation leading to misinterpretation may totally destroy a budding friendship or badly scar one of long standing. Few of us escape the chagrin of the parrot after his disastrous scrimmage with the monkey.

It required the work of several thousand scholars during long centuries to make the Bible readable, possibly because the scholar cannot make himself understood as a rule. Either that or he does not care to be generally read. "A scholar," says Pater in his essays on style, "writing for the scholarly will, of course, leave something to the willing imagination of his reader." He lauds the stimulus of overcoming "a delightful sense of difficulty."

Therein lies the ancient idea of a privileged class, one opposed to our democratic ideals, but one supported by Montaigne, when he says, "To go preach to the first passerby, to become tutor to the ignorance of the first I meet, is a thing I abhor." Montaigne can be excused—he lived on the bounty of a monarch—but he represents a feeling that still exists. Scholars still delight in obscurity. Either they cannot find a clear path from their minds to the comprehension of common people or they are investing our medium of enlightenment with some of the dark and hallowed mystery of a physician's prescription.

One has only to consider the "isms" and "doxys" to which we blindly subscribe, irrespective of scientific truth to the contrary, in order to realize that the Able Editor, who stubbed his toe on the screen, is right in his premises, that ignorance and error overwhelmingly prevail where knowledge and truth should be. But how can wrong ideas and ideals be replaced by information as to what is right if the medium requires high intellectual recognition instead of appealing to common intelligence so that all who are taught how to read may become acquainted with what they should know. The way to popularize knowledge is to spread it through a medium at once interesting and easy to understand.

To speak of a medium contemptuously designated by authors and editors as "The Movies" in any manner suggesting comparison with language is to shock those gentlemen. They are among the last to recognize that the sum of effort made in literature is being poured into another mill and ground up for new uses because of any other reason than that "The Movies" offer a cheap and popular form of entertainment. Small wonder that they dread the disillusion, especially after a long period of cheerful egotism and numerous cases of incurable prosperity. It is worse than disappointing to realize that words, while enabling us to chatter more freely, have only enabled us to build a lot of social, political and religious Babels without getting appreciably nearer the Heaven of Truth.

"The commercialized short story writer," says an editor, "has less enthusiasm in writing for editors nowadays. The 'movies' have captured him. Why write stories when scenarios are not only much less exhausting, but actually more remunerative?" A man undertakes literary work as he does the practice of any other profession as a means of earning a livelihood—he uses his time, strength and thought for that express purpose. The same editor says, "a writer should be very glad to accept a small income for many years; he should deliberately keep his fortunes within bounds." What a rare sense of humor!

In order to cultivate more "enthusiasm in writing for editors a writer should keep his fortunes (!) within bounds." If the editor who put those words in print means what he says, he represents the forces which have suppressed the best in our literature—genius must be encouraged—and he is merely sore that creative talent has found a new outlet.

Let us admit that it is less exhausting for an author to tell his story in scenario form—he may give just as much care and thought to it one way as the other—the great point is that he does not have to torture himself for hours over a paragraph or a sentence to meet the exactions of an editor who declares for "cleverness" as superior to story interest. He may tell his story without affectation of any kind, without artificial verbiage, and have the satisfaction of seeing it published where it will reach out to millions of story-loving people in all parts of the world.

No words, no combinations of words, can convey feeling with the intensity it can be shown by a capable screen interpreter. The best we can do in writing is to call up images already formed in the mind, but here they are directly presented and more powerfully than is within human power to suggest. Once that feeling aroused, if there are seeds of thought to be sown, the screen can imprint them quite as well as the page. Then we need not tell of beauty in cold print. It can be placed there where all may see it and be affected by its inspiration.

The painted panel, the sunlight filtering through forest trees, the graven gem, the far-reaching view of field and flower, the carved statue, the sparkling streams, it matters not, the older arts gladly surrender imitative color and formal dimension to the new art, while it may reach out far beyond them into new graces of form and unsounded gladness of scene almost completing the incompleteness of still art by the mystery and delight of motion. Within its esthetic elements and its universal appeal lies a future beyond present dreaming.

Millions for Vitagraph

Pioneer Producing Company, Which Heretofore Has Been Owned Solely by Messrs. Rock, Blackton and Smith, Admits Outside Capital—Campaign of Expansion Already Under Way—The Story of How the Vitagraph Started Twenty Years Ago.

THE Vitagraph Company of America announces the coming of a new Vitagraph Company, with a capitalization of $25,000,000, of which $10,000,000 will be preferred and $15,000,000 common. The news of the enlargement came in a formal statement signed by Albert E. Smith and Comodore J. Stuart Blackton, as follows:

"We take pleasure in announcing the completion of plans for the formation of a new Vitagraph Company, with an authorized capital stock of $10,000,000 preferred and $15,000,000 common. Associated with us in the new company are a number of men of prominence in the financial and business world.

"We plan to make the new Vitagraph Company larger and more powerful than any other element in the theatrical world. This reorganization enables us to carry to success productions more artistic and more ambitious than have yet been known to the picture world. We assure exhibitors and patrons an absolutely consistent program of better pictures than have ever been produced.

"ALBERT E. SMITH,
"J. STUART BLACKTON."

One of the striking factors in connection with the statement is the omission of the name of William F. Rock, who has been associated with Messrs. Smith and Blackton for over eighteen years. Mr. Rock, who ever since the incorporation of the Vitagraph company, has been its president, retires from the active management. He will, however, retain a substantial stock interest. In the new company Mr. Smith will be president, devoting his attention to the business side of the concern's affairs. Mr. Blackton will be vice-president and producing director in chief. The formation of the new company means the passing of the intimate official association of the three men, who were equal one-third owners in the older Vitagraph. The identity of the men prominent in the financial and business world who have become interested in the Vitagraph has not been revealed.

In the formal statement Commodore Blackton said that E. H. Sothern, who is retiring from the stage, is to become a Vitagraph star, and that Edna May, who recently so successfully appeared in "Salvation Joan" would in a few months again take up work at the Vitagraph studio. In the furtherance of the preparedness propaganda in which the Commodore has taken so marked an interest, he will soon begin the making of "The Battle Cry of War," a sequel to "The Battle Cry of Peace."

"A careful investigation of the moving picture field convinces us of the strength and high standing of the Vitagraph Company," said one of the capitalists most largely identified with the new enterprise, "and made us desirous of casting our lot with Messrs. Smith and Blackton. The Vitagraph is the largest moving picture manufacturer in the world. In the sense of having its own factory and other plants abroad it is the only American picture concern operating internationally. The company is one of the very few picture concerns having a record of progress and profits extending over a long period of years. We were attracted to it because of its excellent organization and its sound commercial standing as well as the artistic excellence of its product.

"One noteworthy fact regarding the organization created by Mr. Smith and Mr. Blackton is that they have discovered and developed their own people. Their directors and their stars, with one or two exceptions, have been trained by themselves. We have no plans that look to a consolidation such as has been discussed in theatrical circles."

The New Vitagraph to Expand.

The producing director in chief of the Vitagraph was seen by a World man in the Madison Square Garden at the exposition of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, of which organization Commodore Blackton has been the head from its beginning. When the Commodore was asked if the new company would build more studios he replied that it was quite likely an additional studio would be built at the Brooklyn plant. He said the company had for a long time owned a lot of property as yet unoccupied. It had originally been taken over against the time the company might desire to expand. He said he was working on plans for the new structure which he believed would materially facilitate the taking of pictures with the least loss of time and also on a new system of lighting which he thought would be very effective and of great utility.

Asked as to whether there would be more directors employed, the Commodore said there would be. "There will be some changes in personnel," he continued. "We have a number of stars coming to us soon. The majority of them are screen stars. I would prefer not to mention names just yet, but I am confident we will have a pleasant surprise for Vitagraph exhibitors.

"We have a great number of writers under contract now. Some of them are well known, others are famous; others are not well known in a literary way, but they have made reputations in pictures. Those in the latter category have not as yet come into their own, but they will now, and they ought to.

"Our friends have been kind enough in the past to praise Vitagraph pictures. I am going to assure all of them that our subjects in the future will be even more artistic and meritorious. We are going to be particularly careful not to permit anything in the films that will give occasion for censorship criticism. The past year in our business has been largely a period of experiment. We have sought to determine which class of subjects earn the most money and appear to give the most satisfactlon to the public. We have found in every case that the clean, good, strong, interesting play earns in the long run more money than one that is a little suggestive, for the simple reason that the inherently clean play can be shown everywhere. If a play has in it that which offends the sensibilities of even 10 per cent. of those who see it that play is failing in its proper mission. And every one knows that it is so much easier to make pictures that appeal to the lower tastes rather than to the higher."

Mr. Blackton was asked if his company intended to extend its manufacturing facilities abroad.

"Yes," he declared. "As soon as the war is over we will build a studio in Paris. We have much acreage in a beautiful park in the city, a most desirable site for a studio and one containing a really foreign atmosphere—one that will blend with and balance our program. So, too, if we need foreign scenes for our American-made subjects we can get them. Occasionally now we make use of California scenes in Eastern pictures in order to provide contrast.

"Our output in England is larger now than it was before the breaking out of the war," said the Commodore in response to a question as to how hostilities abroad had affected the company. "Of course, it affected our manufacturing plans in Paris—it postponed their execution. It is, too, more difficult now to ship films. The tax on all films going into England made it necessary to do all printing in London.

"Yes, our output for Great Britain is larger than ever before. In addition to that for our rental business we have just fully occupied a building adjoining our London office. We began on May 1 to rent our feature films throughout the United Kingdom. Up to that time we had never rented a foot of film in England. For our smaller subjects we still maintain the open sales policy. We are renting practically only the Blue Ribbon features."

History of Vitagraph a Film Romance.

The rise of the motion picture industry in the United States has been marked by romance, much of it. The history of no company contains more of that interesting element than does that of the Vitagraph Company of America. In fact, the course of the company has been in large measure the course of the industry. No concern could have started from a smaller beginning. Its progress has been steady, and it was the progress of a leader, not a follower. It carved its own way and it carved the fortunes of its owners. For years the company has been recognized as second to none in the world. In the matter of its personnel—in executive genius, in its ability to dig up stories and prepare them for the screen, in its directors, and in its marvelous stock company, and especially in the latter—there have been many wise in film lore who insisted it was at times the first. It's an old saying that water of its own motion will never rise above its source. It is true in the film world, too, that the productions of a manufacturing company may match but cannot excel in quality the artistic endowments of its chiefs. If the Vitagraph has succeeded it has been because Blackton and Smith knew a good picture when they saw it and knew how to make another good one.

Twenty years ago J. Stuart Blackton was an artist on the Evening World in New York. He also wrote and illustrated special stories. He was given an assignment by the New York World to go over to New Jersey and interview Thomas A. Edison, who was then making motion pictures and motion picture taking and projecting apparatus. Young Blackton was to get the material for a page story and to illustrate with sketches of Edison and his plant. In the company of the inventor he toured the esablishment. One of the persons he saw before the camera was Cissy Fitzgerald, who was dancing and exhibiting her famous wink—the same alluring lid action which nineteen years later was to shine in Vitagraph's "The Win(k)some Widow."

Mr. Edison invited the artist into his office, where sketches of the inventor were duly made in the Blackton book. The inventor was interested. Two hours passed. The office employes began to fear the caller had chloroformed the Wizard. Five minutes was the usual time devoted to one visitor. Mr. Edison had the artist drawing pictures for his entertainment. There were sketches made of David B. Hill, of Levi P. Morton, of Grover Cleveland, of William McKinley, the latter of whom was that fall to be elected President.

"Could you draw those pictures on a large sheet of paper for the moving picture camera?" inquired Mr. Edison.

The artist assured him that he could—and proved it.

The inventor took the artist out to the "Black Maria" and photographed the sketches. The interest of the latter in the plant was growing. A week later the newspaper man went back to Orange to see the pictures, which later were shown at Proctor's. The artist returned to New York, hunted up his chum, Albert E. Smith, and told him what he had seen. The two agreed that moving pictures looked promising. They determined to find out what could be done to secure an outfit and journeyed to Orange. Mr. Edison informed them there was nothing for sale, the Vitascopes were all out on state rights, but that shortly he would have a small machine on the market.

"Let us have one of the first," said the two. About two months later they purchased a Projecting Kinetoscope. For a while they gave exhibitions. Then Mr. Smith, using the same mechanism, transformed the projector into a camera. On the roof of the building 140 Nassau street, where the partners had an office, they took pictures. That was the first studio of the Vitagraph Company, the beginning from which has grown the twenty-five-million-dollar corporation of today.

The partners had not gone far, however, before their activities were brought to a halt by a suit for infringement. Mr. Edison got an injunction, restraining them from making pictures. An arrangement was afterward entered into by which Messrs. Smith and Blackton sold their negatives to Mr. Edison, who in turn paid them a royalty of 2 cents a foot on all positive prints sold. One of the first successful pictures was "The Visit to the Spiritualist," in which appeared as actors both the partners.

Business began to grow. The two were showing pictures in Proctor's Twenty-third Street and Fifty-eighth Street houses. One day they were informed their service would be no longer required. In response to inquiries they were told the houses had made better arrangements. Still seeking information, Austin Fynes said two machines had been engaged from a man named Rock, who had an office in One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street.

The partners took their five fifty-foot subjects, put them in a bag, and looked up the man named Rock. To their competitor they explained the circumstances. They pointed out to him that the three of them were the only men in New York with outfits; competition was foolish; wisdom would seem to dictate that the three get together. Mr. Rock had two machines, the partners had three. The former thought it over and decided to inform the manager of Proctor's houses that the deal was off. Immediately Messrs. Blackton and Smith were appealed to by the theater management. The service was restored, but it was $50 a week more expensive than it had been formerly.

The Spanish-American war came at this time. The three men found a great demand for their war pictures. There followed litigation with the Edison Company, finally resulting in the getting together of the parties, the formation of the Patents Company, and the pooling of patents for mutual protection.

It was in 1900 that the Vitagraph Company of America was formally incorporated by Messrs. Rock, Blackton and Smith. The partnership, for such it has been in fact, has remained unchanged up to the past week. Sixteen years, actually eighteen years, is a partnership record that in the moving picture business probably will stand unbroken for many years.

Director Rupert Julian has completed "Romance at Randon," in which he plays the featured lead supported by Elsie Jane Wilson and Mark Fenton, and the director is now preparing to film a five-reel feature, the title of which has not been announced nor the cast made.

Hearing Before the Governor

Opponents of Cristman-Wheeler Censorship Will Appear in Force at Executive Mansion in Albany.

WHEN the Governor of this state opens the hearing to be held on the Cristman-Wheeler Bill on Thursday, May 11, a strong and thoroughly representative delegation of the film interest will be on hand. It is expected that all the great groups and the leading individuals in the industry will be there. Among the most strenuous opponents of the bill without the pale of the industry is State Senator Argetsinger, who has filed a brief with the Govenor, condemning the proposed law and urging the Governor to veto it. The Famous Players, Metro, Vitagraph, Lasky, World, Mutual, Universal and Paramount will enter their protest. Jesse L. Lasky will be one of the chief speakers.

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures will send the biggest delegation in its history. The following speakers will appear for the board: Lester F. Scott, acting director of the People's Institute, the Rev. Mr. Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board; Miss Mary Gray Peck, member of the Committee on Education of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Dr. Henry E. Jenkins, District Superintendent of Schools of New York; Samuel Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor; Dr. James P. Warbasse, a trustee of the People's Institute.

Tom Mix

THE Selig Polyscope Company claims one of the simon-pure cowboy leads in motion pictures. His name is Tom Mix. According to Selig, all other cowboy heroes, past, present and future, are just make-believe. And the Selig Company puts up a strong argument, as all will agree who have been thrilled by Mix's daring "stunts" pulled off in Selig western productions. Tom Mix productions are not only popular in America, but are leaders in England, France and Germany. One cannot read an English pictureplay journal that does not contain compliments about Tom Mix, the productions he appears in, etc. In London, Eng., "Tom Mix" boots were recently devised by an enterprising show manufacturer and have become the vogue.

Tom Mix.

It will be welcome news to the admirers of this dashing cowboy actor to be informed that a series of one-reel Tom Mix western comedies and dramas are soon to be released by the Selig Company through General Film Service. These pictureplays are said to be filled with daring exploits and each carried a well-defined plot.

Tom Mix is said to be the most daring horseman in motion pictures, or out of them for that matter. He holds numerous medals won in Rodeos, etc., for Mix was formerly a "cowpuncher" up in Wyoming, and there he received his horsemanship training while caring for the great herds of cattle that roamed the plains in that day.

Despite the fact that Tom Mix does not hesitate to take every chance while working in Selig pictureplays, he has never been injured. At least, Mix does not term such injuries as broken wrists, sprained arms, and numerous bruises as serious hurts, although others might view those injuries in a different light. He is always ready to spring the feats of unlooked-for daring, and it has come to pass that his fellow artists and the motion picture public expect almost any spectacular action on the Mix part. The forthcoming series of Tom Mix pictureplays are certain to be popular. The first release will be announced in the near future.

Garden Show Has Successful Opening

Large Throng Present in Big Structure When President Blackton on Behalf of His Associates Welcomes Exhibitors and the Public to the Motion Picture Board of Trade's First Exposition —Decorations Especially Notable—Long List of Exhibiting Manufacturers.

THE first exposition of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America opened in Madison Square Garden at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday, May 6. On the minute two American flags were drawn from the big emblem of the Board of Trade suspended back of the stage. The Rialto Theater Symphony Orchestra under the direction of S. L. Rothapfel, the managing director of the theater, played "The Star Spangled Banner." The largest throng that has attended the opening of a motion picture exposition in this country stood and uncovered. "The Board of Trade March," by the orchestra, followed. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, president of the board, extended formal welcome to the exhibitors and the public on behalf of his associates. Other speakers were Dudley Field Malone, Collector of the Port of New York; Rear Admiral N. R. Usher, United States Navy; Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, famous as writer of stories long and short, many of which have been adapted for the screen, and Dr. Clarence J. Owen, managing director of the Southern Commercial Congress of Washington.

J. Stuart Blackton.

Mr. Blackton's Address.

One half of the great arena of the Garden had been covered with seats, all of which were filled, with several hundred standing about the sides when Commodore Blackton began his formal address. He said:

"It is my honor and privilege to bid you welcome to this, the first national trade show of the Motion Picture Board of Trade. It is, in every sense, a truly representative exposition, for every important branch of the industry, from the manufacturer to consumer, is to-day here represented. The author who writes the photodrama, the actor and actress who portray the author's story, the producer who directs the many and varied scenes in the moving play, the theater owner and exhibitor who shows the finished product to the public, and the wonderful mechanisms made by the projecting machine manufacturers, and last but most important of all, that vast audience of over fifty million motion picture fans, the great American public, all have their representation here today.

"Starting as a mere novelty, a fad, a nine-days wonder, this marvelous combination of literature, art and science, music and the drama, psychology, philosophy, history and romance, has outstripped in gigantic strides all contemporaneous arts, and has resolved itself into the greatest of all the allied arts, unsurpassed and unsurpassable, the photodrama. Millions of dollars are invested in the manufacture of motion pictures; millions more in the theaters that exhibit them. Millions of people spend millions of dollars to see motion pictures, hundreds of thousands are employed by this great industry.

"The Motion Picture Board of Trade stands for progressive protection against the many perils, legislative and otherwise, that beset our great industry, and for the promotion of harmony and unity within, the better to withstand attacks from without.

The greatest peril that menaces the photoplay is the attempt by professional agitators, by hypocritical reformers and office-seeking politicians, to apply the muzzle of censorship to the motion picture, which under the Constitution of the United States of America should and must be as free and untrammeled as the press, the stage and the right of free speech. The attempt to apply official and political censorship to the photodrama is equally an endeavor to deprive the public of its inalienable right under the Constitution to decide for itself what it shall read, what it shall see, to what it shall listen and at what it shall look. No group of five, ten or fifty paid officials has the right to decide what pictures one hundred million American citizens shall see.

"In a few short years the pioneers in the photoplay art have seen it grow in power, in strength and in splendor of achievement to the fifth greatest industry in the world. They have seen its influence extended to the uttermost parts of the earth, and combining as it does every known art and science in its manufacture, the photodrama of the present and of the future will play an all important part in shaping the destinies of the world."

Screen Must Be Free, Declares Mr. Malone.

"The motion picture industry has provided for our people, next to the press, the most effective and the most attractive medium for the dissemination of general information," said Mr. Malone. "Art, after all, is merely the best expression of the life of the people, and that which makes for the higher art and the more complete distribution of useful and better information is a great contribution to the development of the people. We have seen this great industry grow in spite of the initial prejudice against it until by practically the entire population it is recognized as one of the chief sources of information and amusement. It will not have lived up to its chief purpose if it does not strive for higher development — for the spreading of the truth. The great essential, the one above all else, in a democracy is that the truth shall be told, whether of literature, of the classics, of the government or of politics. Don't let the motion picture fall into the control of any group of men. The screen must keep itself free that it may be a useful medium of the American people."

J. W. Binder.

Admiral Usher, in his brief remarks, said it was not the business of admirals to make speeches. "In moving pictures, however," he went on, "we see those things we have not time to see ourselves—certainly it is so with us of the navy. I think we can all agree that the men who are promoting this exposition have been instrumental in promoting our education, and it is to be hoped that they will continue. I hope I have convinced you that the navy does not speak."

"That is all right, Admiral," commented Mr. Blackton, "but we know that when the time comes the navy will act."

In introducing Dr. Brady, President Blackton referred to the writer as a conglomeration, specifying his activities in the navy, then in the army, and as a preacher and a writer.

"It is a proof of the esteem in which I hold you," said Dr. Brady to his audience in the beginning, "that I permitted this man to call me a conglomeration. I may look like it, but I assure you I am not conglomerate." Dr. Brady alluded to some of his experiences in speaking against churches, even mobs, "but never before have I tried to talk against a moving picture exposition in course of making," he went on. "By the noise that is going on here I am in doubt whether this is a promenade concert or a conversazione."

Dr. Brady spoke upon the moral side of the picture. He said that like the wheat and the tares the good and the bad will inevitably grow together. "The motion picture is a thing of to-day—I dare to say, if you please, by the side of the opera and by the side of the ballet." The doctor related his experience at the Russian ballet on a recent evening. He pointed out that this particular ballet leaves nothing whatever to the imagination, and expressed the opinion that anything which gives no stimulus to the imagination is not artistic. He declared that the percentage of morality in the motion picture was vastly greater than in the opera or in the play.

One of the spectacular features that marked the opening was the balloon ascension from the roof of the Garden, by A. Leo Stevens, holder of the American altitude record. It was Mr. Stevens' intention to try to eclipse his mark of 29,000 feet. He made 19,000 feet, but was compelled to descend when in the air less than an hour. The big "Bluebird," for the car was named in honor of the photoplay brand, came unharmed to earth in Canarsie, just on the edge of the Atlantic Ocean.

Garden Artistically Decorated.

The beauty of the decorations of the Garden appeal to the visitor as he passes the ticket takers, many feet from the entrance proper. The entire dome of the big structure is a mass of apple green artistically draped with white ruffled streamers. The adornment was executed by Joe Maston, the decorator of the Garden, under the supervision of S. L. Rothapfel, the art director of the exposition. Three great chandeliers at equal distances across the dome are more than sufficient for purposes of illumination. The two nearer the stage are usually dark, on account of the screen. Aside from the thousands of lamps in the booths of the individual exhibitors additional light is thrown by many direct lamps suspended around the ceiling. These are inclosed in cylindrical metal shades. Many of the exhibitors have unusually elaborate and artistic displays.

There is an excellent orchestra of thirty pieces, under the direction of Patrick Conway.

The office of the management of the exposition is in a pagoda in the center of the arena. On the top is a projection booth, where two Power machines project the many pictures provided by the film manufacturing exhibitors for the entertainment of visitors. Between the improvised office and the screen are many hundred seats for the benefit of those who desire to watch the show. After the close of the Garden Saturday evening the Fire Department ordered a railing placed on each side of the seating space and also decreed that the aisles must be widened as in a regular theater. Between the office and the entrance a large space has been roped off for dancing. On the opening night this part of the arena was as crowded as the remainder of the Garden.

The exhibitors on the main floor, beginning at the entrance and swinging to the right, are the Paragon, the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, which displays pictures of some of the coast studios and many examples of California products; Essanay, Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon Features, Nicholas Power Company, with six projection machines and parts; William Fox, International Film Service, Actors' Fund, Blue Bird and Motion Picture News.

On the opposite side of the Garden are the Mutual Film Corporation, Universal and Red Feather, J. H. Hallberg, Vitagraph Players, Paramount Pictures Corporation, with its contributing companies, the Famous Players, Jesse L. Lasky and Morosco-Pallas; Morning Telegraph.

Many Prominent Film Men in Attendance.

Among those prominent in filmdom noted in the throng on the opening days were Nicholas Power, John R. Freuler Carl Laemmle, accompanied by Herman Fichtenberg of New Orleans; Edwin Earl, treasurer of Nicholas Power Company; Edwin Thanhouser, Walter W. Irwin, Edward A. McManus, J. W. Binder, William M. Seabury, William W. Hodkinson, J. H. Hallberg, Joe Brandt, Sol Lesser, accompanied by Mrs. Lesser; S. S. Cassard, J. H. Hallberg, D. S. Markowitz, formerly manager of the Universal exchange in Los Angeles; George Blair, Samuel Spedon, John M. Lakin, S. L. Rothapfel, who conducted several numbers of the orchestra; Edwin S. Porter, Harry Wolf, F. J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America; M. H. Hoffman and T. M. Alexander.

From Chicago came "Big Chief" William J. Sweeney, just returned from the convention and exposition in Minneapolis; L. H. Frank, Fred W. Hartman and Fred Schaefer The quartet is busy on the big convention and exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to be held in Chicago this summer. Mr. Sweeney said his party was receiving every possible encouragement from the manufacturers they had talked with.

C. A. Megown of Cleveland and W. Clarence Beatty of Pittsburgh were present.

Boston was represented by a party of Massachusetts exhibitors, the guests of the Famous Players Film Company of New England, the Paramount distributors for that territory. They had come over the road in machines to take in the two shows and returned to the Hub on Sunday. Included in the group were George K. Robinson, Hiram Abrams, Dr. Golden and Harry Asher of the Paramount; Jacob Laurie, of the Beacon theater, Boston; Charles W. Hodgdon, Princess, Wakefield; Sam and Nathan Goldstein, Broadway; Springfield; R. A. Gilman, Dorchester, Dorchester; A. W. Bendsley, Waltham, Waltham; E. H. Horstmann, Olympia theaters, Boston; R. J. Donovan, Casino, Taunton, and Harris Ware, Larcom, Beverly.

The attendance on Sunday was not equal to that of Saturday, due probably to the fact that the public had not been sufficiently made aware of the big Garden being open on that day. Those who came were rewarded by hearing some unusual singing by David Bispham and seeing Miss Ethel Gilmore in a solo dance. The two artists appeared in honor of the Actors' Fund, to which organization the Board of Trade had devoted the day. This exceptional entertainment was in addition to that provided by the large orchestra, the Seeburg Theater Orchestra, installed by the Kramer Organ Company, and by the pictures thrown on the screen. Owing to the many lights in the hall the projection was naturally of the in and out order. Attempts were made with varying success to induce exhibitors to use as little as possible of the more magnified form of lighting. But the crowd stuck tightly to the seats in the arena nevertheless.

Mr. Bispham sang three pieces, all of which were applauded heartily. The first was "I'm a Roamer," from "Son and Stranger," Mendelssohn's only opera. The second was Shakespeare's "Seven Ages of Man," the music for which was by Henry Holden Huss, the American composer. "Danny Deever" was the last, and the stirring Kipling verses sung to Walter Damrosch's music had particular timeliness in view of the happenings in Ireland the past fortnight.

The music to which Miss Gilmore danced was a composition by Miss Emma H. Steiner, entitled "Florence Lawrence," the words of which were written around this popular screen star by Miss Margaret I. Macdonald. The song is on sale for the benefit of the Actors' Fund in the space set aside for the Actors' Fund campaign. Miss Gilmore is a pupil of the famous teacher, Mme. Elizabeth Menzeli, and is known as the only genuine "made in America" premiere of the ballet. She was the premiere danseuse of the Canadian grand opera company during its tour through Canada last season and was the successor of Genee in "The Soul Kiss."

EDWIN AUGUST NOW A COMPOSER OF MUSIC.

Among the many other accomplishments of writing over 300 scenarios, author of short stories, playwright, star of the legitimate and motion picture stages and successful motion picture director, Edwin August's latest accomplishment is writing the words and music to the song entitled, "Honey, Teach Me How to Fox Trot." He is probably the only photoplay celebrity that has ever succeeded in publishing a song the words and music of which he has personally written.

Three new two-reel features, starring Margaret Gibson, are shortly to be released through the Mutual. First of these, "The Jungle Outcast," will go to the public early in May. A number of scenarios are now in preparation at the Horsley-Mutual studios especially for Miss Gibson, in which the Bostock animals will be a featured attraction.

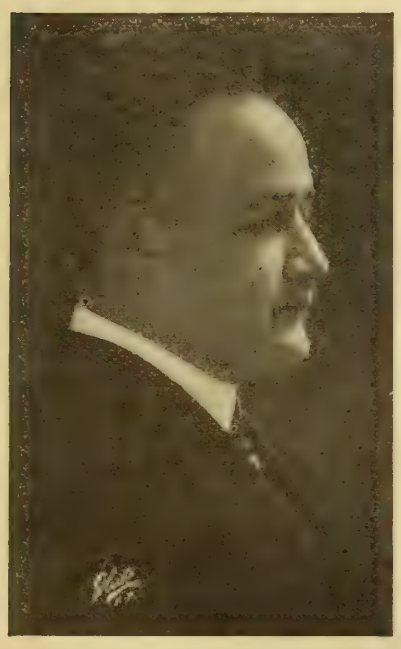
The Exhibitors' Third Annual Exposition.

Successful Trade Show Conducted at Grand Central Palace, New York, by the Exhibitors of New York State and City—Many Interesting Features Mark the Event—Large Attendance by Public Noted.

WITH but eighteen days allowed for the work of preparation, burdened with many and unexpected handicaps, the Exhibitors' League of the City and State of New York has given the industry an exposition which is an unqualified success in every respect.

The management of the Exposition in the joint hands of Lee A. Ochs, state president; Louis F. Blumenthal, local treasurer, and J. A. Koerpel, general impresario, had literally performed wonders. Of course, the previous experience of these men stood them in good stead, the hearty co-operation of exhibitors everywhere and the sympathy of the whole industry aided a whole lot, but the most helpful factor in the success was the ingenuity plus the energy of the actual working forces.

The hall-mark of success was distinctly visible on the first day of the exposition in both the number and quality of exhibits, as well as in the splendid attendance of the public.



Lee A. Ochs.

For the latter the original idea of an amateur scenario with an amateur cast was in large measure responsible. The contest had attracted extraordinary attention and accounted for the crowd of five thousand or more, which took a special interest in this unique feature of the exposition. The amateur cast for the amateur scenario has been finally chosen and consists of the following persons:

Mrs. Ida Sidley, Miss Alice Ashton, Miss Elsie George, John McGraw, Lou Reimer, Raymond Marine, Walter J. Eise, Geo. H. West.

Something must be said about the harmony of the color display in the various exhibits. Of course, there was no previous arrangement, but if there had been no better results could have been obtained. The prevailing colors in the big exhibit blended perfectly and greatly heightened the effect of the decorations which were all in the best style and taste.

The "Art Studio," which is a decided attraction, is located in the northeast corner of the hall, went into executive session immediately upon the final acceptance of the cast. Director Joseph Smiley "got busy" and soon had the first scene of the amateur scenario well under way. The Art Studio was surrounded by a goodly crowd during the whole life of the Exposition.

An Atmosphere of Success.

A full and somewhat detailed description of the most prominent exhibits will be found in another part of this article. An atmosphere of success pervaded the entire hall. There are few locations in or out of New York more conveniently situated than the Grand Central Palace, and none that are equipped with better lighting specialities, both natural and artificial. If you have an exhibit the Grand Central Palace will show it off to the best possible advantage. Nor was comfort lacking. Comfort and elegance were both conspicuous. The "Glad-we-came" smile was visible on visitors and exhibitors alike. So many souvenirs were distributed that "he who walked received" and there was not a souvenir that was other than appropriate and attractive.

A special word of praise and recognition is due to the band which supplied the music. It was Rynn's Broadway Band, consisting entirely of colored musicians. Their work evoked much favorable comment as they know how to specialize in lively snappy airs, with plenty of swing and rhythm to them. The band stand shared the honors of public attention and patronage with the "Art Studio"—the two points being particularly interesting to the general public. It will not do to forget the motion picture shows. They received their share of the public patronage. The announcer standing in front of the theater proclaiming the free admission soon found that his labor was not needed and the crowds kept on pouring in all day long.

J. A. Koerpel.

Organized Exhibitors Enroll at World Booth.

The exposition had not been open long when a committee of the organized exhibitors of the city and state of New York decided to make the booth of The Moving Picture World their headquarters for the week. Chief Organizer Cole consequently was much in evidence in the World booth, and many a membership application was filled out on top of a pile of Moving Picture Worlds. The register kept at The Moving Picture World booth filled up in a rather rapid sort of a way. It showed names not only from every part of the state of New York, but from points far beyond the boundaries of the Empire state.

Contest of Quality in Projection Room.

One of the best features of the exposition and one that spoke well for the popularity of high grade films was the friendly but keen rivalry among the producers. The big special projection room was open to all on a basis of fair rotation and each producer was anxious to offer his best. There was such a persistent battle for quality that the visitors all agreed that they had never seen better pictures—and never a greater variety. Vitagraph, Fox, Paramount, Pathe, Metro, Mutual, Universal, World, all were in the friendly contest. Incidentally the Vitagraph Company gave the public something very new and very entertaining. It came in the shape of a miniature motion picture screen, three feet square, which was set up at one end of the company's booth. From behind this, one-reel comedies were projected toward the passing throngs. Of course the passing throngs at once came to a halt. In spite of the fact that the hall was brilliantly lighted the pictures were absolutely clear and distinct.

How the Days Were Divided.

To impart variety to the program and to create that interest which variety alone is capable of creating, the management of the Exposition gave to each day its own individual character. Thus, Monday was the Allies' Day. The British War Relief Fund had a most interesting display in a special booth assigned to them alongside of the booth of the Moving Picture World. A handsome amount was realized for the War Relief Fund. The British Society of New York had appointed the Reception Committee for Monday. Tuesday was devoted to the benefit of the Jewish War Sufferers. There was an address by Felix M. Warburg, while the music of the day was furnished by the Jewish Orphan Asylum band. The results, as far as this worthy charity was concerned, were entirely satisfactory. Wednesday was German Red Cross Day. The purposes of that day were made clear by Mr. Louis W. Weickman, executive secretary of the German Red Cross Society in America. There were interesting illustrations and demonstrations by Red Cross nurses of Rushing First Aid to the Wounded, and of methods on the field of battle generally. Thursday was claimed by particularly fine charity, the Asylum for the Crippled and Orphan Children. The ladies in charge of this day, led by Mrs. A. Goldsmith, expressed themselves as well satisfied with results. Many of the little wards of the asylum attended the exhibition on Thursday and greatly enjoyed the sights. Friday was called California Day and Frolic Night. Friday lived up to its name, especially the Frolic Night part of it. The seven-reel film, which won first prize at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, depicting the wonders of the golden state, was shown. The last day, Saturday, was most appropriately devoted to the benefit of the Actors' Fund. The exhibitors showed a fine spirit in giving their best night to this noble purpose which has in such large measure enlisted the sympathy of the best men in the theatrical and in the screen world.

A Whirlwind Finish.

Interest in the Exposition grew apace as the day went on. The attendance of the public had been most gratifying from the start, but by Thursday and Friday night "the gate" had exceeded the fondest expectations of the management, while Saturday night brought a whirlwind finish. From eight to ten o'clock it was most difficult to move about on the floor. When the throng was at its height, on Friday night, a sensation was caused by the appearance of filmdom's daintiest star, Billie Burke. The sweet and radiant beauty was accompanied and escorted by George Kleine, who has been her sponsor since when she stepped across the threshold of filmdom. Billie Burke was easily the star of stars. The throngs followed her and at times enthusiastically acclaimed her. All these popular demonstrations did not ruffle the young woman in the slightest and everybody enjoyed her demeanor of unaffected simplicity. Friday saw one of the great features which had been arranged in connection with the Exposition, an aeroplane flight over and around Manhattan Island by Miss Vera Pearce, the film star, and P. C. Millman, the aviator. Miss Pearce dropped bombs, which contained invitations to the Exposition. The bombs used by Miss Pearce were small vari-colored balls, stuffed with cotton, and attached to an envelope containing several complimentary tickets to the Third International Exposition of Motion Picture Art. A very curious incident occurred early Saturday morning. It concerns the genial director, Joseph Smiley. Director Smiley had been having his troubles with the amateur cast's acting of the amateur scenario, and he was just about to pass a vote of thanks to himself for his Job-like patience, when a smart-looking individual handed him a legal-looking document, which, upon examination, was found to be a summons, demanding Director Smiley to appear in court and explain why he should not pay the sum of Fifty Dollars, true and lawful money of the United States to one Paul Kohloff. The said Kohloff claims that he is entitled to at least that much money for services rendered by him as an actor in the cast. Kohloff was supposed to take the part of a counterfeiter. Director Smiley declined to comment on the situation further than to say that his hope in the male amateur screen actor had been shattered beyond repair. "Some of the girls I have in my cast show real talent," he said, "but the male members of the cast were not conspicuous for histrionic talent."

The Exposition closed with a grand ball on Saturday night.

NOTES OF THE EXPOSITION.

The World booth on Saturday afternoon was the scene of a most interesting meeting between the national president and the three state presidents of New York (Lee A. Ochs), Pennsylvania (Ben Zerr) and Massachusetts (Ernest H. Horstmann). Matters of great interest were discussed and without betraying any confidence the Moving Picture World man may say that "Great events cast their shadows before."

One of the busy men about the building was Mr. Arthur M. Brilant, the special publicity man of the Exposition. It looked at first as if his great "stunt" of having "bombs" thrown from an aeroplane would fail. Mr. Brilant persisted and the bombs, containing complimentary tickets to the Exposition, were duly thrown from an aeroplane flying over New York.

The State of New York was represented by exhibitors from every part. Likewise the states of New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

The success of the Exposition which was hurried in such extreme fashion is due in no small measure to Richard G. Hollaman, the president of the International Exposition Company, whose past experience with such affairs as the Buffalo, Jamestown and St. Louis expositions enabled him to give expert counsel to the management.

THE EXHIBITS.

Metro Leads.

Easily the most striking exhibit was that arranged by the Metro Pictures Corporation. It was by far the most generous in size, but the first prize was awarded not at all on the ground of size but altogether on the ground of quality. It was by far the most attractive and lively exhibit in the Palace and soon became a popular rendezvous for "Who's Who" in motion pictures. On the opening night the Metropolitan, which was a faithful reproduction of the audience chamber of the world-famous palace of Louis XVI at Versailles, was filled to overflowing. The furnishings of the period formed the decorative scheme, but naturally the paintings were replaced by portraits done in oil and pastel of many of the noted Metro stars. Of these many have won their way into the hearts of audiences and the throngs of "fans" who attended the Exposition were made happy to see and greet them in the flesh. A garden fence artistically hidden behind vines and American beauty roses kept the crowds from an actual invasion of the Metro enclosures. The Metro contingent was headed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison, who had been hurried north from North Carolina, where they were making "The Masked Rider." They scored ovations and tributes galore and will at the end of the Exposition return at once to the South to finish the exteriors for this production, which is their next offering on the Metro program. The entrance of Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison was little less than a sensation. They arrived late in company with President Richard A. Rowland and Mrs. Rowland, accompanied by Joseph W. Engel, the treasurer. The artists were kept busy distributing autographed likenesses of themselves. Others busy with their pens were Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, who certainly proved their immense popularity with the crowd. Mr. Drew was signing his name right and left until nearly midnight, when his wife dragged him away. Another popular star who was one of the newest members of the Metro happy family was little Viola Dana. She was so little in all her cuteness that many in the crowd called upon her to stand on a chair so they all could get a look at her. Margaret Snow was another favorite and attracted thousands of admirers Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Rolfe-Metro studios, Charles Maddock, guiding spirit of the Columbia Pictures Corporation, Edward Shulter, Metro technical director, and many others from the Metro studios and offices were no hand. Mabel Taliaferro, the star of "The Snowbird" and "Her Great Price," charmed all who were presented to her by her husband, Thomas J. Carrigan, also of the Metro playing forces. Grace Valentine, one of the most popular of the younger stars, won many new admirers who were presented to her. Evelyn Brent, who was seen in "Playing with Fire" with Mme. Petrova, was voted one the the prettiest girls present. Among the Metro directors who stood on the firing line were Edwin Carewe, William Nigh, John W. Noble, Charles Horan, Burton King, Edward Lawrence, John Collins and David Thompson. B. A. Rolfe, art director of the Exposition and also owner of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., was another frequent occupant of the Metro section. Arthur James, director of publicity, accompanied by his wife, was very much in evidence in the course of the evening, looking after the wants and comforts of all interested in Metro. William E. Atkinson, business manager of the Metro, and Harry Cohen, the Metro's lithograph man, acted as masters of the reception ceremonies, keeping the crowd moving and in good humor at the same time. One of the most interesting features of the Metro exhibition was the department devoted to advertising and exploiting the Pictures Magazine, published chiefly in the interest of the Metro wonderplay. This department was presided over by Henry James, business manager of the publication. Mr. B. A. Rolfe, art director of the Exposition, was responsible for the decorative scheme of the Metro booth.

Vitagraph.

No exhibit came in for more favorable comment than that of the Vitagraph. It challenged admiration, in the language of Miss Rose Tapley, who gracefully presided over the exhibit and gave a courteous welcome to all visitors. It typified the great and popular elements of the famous Vitagraph school. It speaks of elegance, of simplicity, of home atmosphere and of refinement. It suggests livable rooms in a lovable house. This old English fireplace you see was used in Silver Shells, as were the candlesticks with the silver bars in the center. The Oriental rugs with their soft tones and their neutral shades add to the charm of the tapestry decorating the background.

"Bright smiling faces of the well-known stars," quoting the ideal hostess, Miss Tapley, of the Vitagraph Company are here to welcome everyone and each individual feels himself a personal friend of his or her favorite. In fact, the booths and the people in it typify the standards which the company has always striven to uphold—conservative, dignified, conscientious efforts to please a discriminating public. They have never attempted to call attention to their productions by a fanfare of trumpets, or by sensationalism. Quality and real value has held them close in the hearts of the public, who appreciate and love them for sincere and earnest efforts to produce clean, wholesome interesting stories, well played and carefully directed.

Anti-Censorship Booth.

The International Film Service had Booth 73, and it was one of the busiest and most important on the floor. Why?—because it was the center of the anti-censorship agitation. Here petitions against the Cristman Wheeler Censorship Bill were signed by the hundreds. Aaron A. Corn was one of the busiest little workers thereabouts getting petitions signed.

General Electric Company.

The General Electric Company's booth, in charge of Mr. Julian Speer, displayed several of their latest types of compensarcs and mercury arc rectifiers for motion picture work. The most interesting feature of this exhibit was a motor generator compensarc connected to two projecting machines in such a manner that the two arcs could be maintained at the same time, thereby allowing the pictures to be dissolved from one machine to the other without the loss of illumination on the screen.

The American Seating Company.

The American Seating Co. of Chicago and New York had a wonderful collection of the latest ideas in opera chairs on exhibition at the Palace show. Their booth, which was located on the left, next to Metro's big display, was the gathering place of exhibitors from far and near, among the most prominent being Daniel Frohman, William Fox,

John C. Eisele, Jas. J. Lyons, of Morristown, N. J., and his friend, Hen Schwab, also of the Lake City. Many important large orders were booked and both Leo J. Gafney and Harry A. Flynn, who are in charge, reported fine business, especially connecting upon the re-seating business which has developed. The New York office of this firm has just removed to 119 West 40th St., New York, where a fine suite of offices and show rooms is occupied by L. N. Olmsted, the resident manager, and his official family.

Menger & Ring.

Menger & Ring, manufacturers of lobby display frames, had a beautiful booth representing the theater lobby as it should be. Arnold Kornicher, their representative, is being besieged with requests for the tape measures which are, without doubt, the finest souvenirs being distributed at the Exposition. Mr. Kornicher reports business as interesting for the latter part of the week.

Red Feather.

The Red Feather exhibit was voted one of the prettiest and most colorful on the entire floor. A large handsome booth, it commanded instant attention as the visitor came up the main stairway to enter the hall. The magnificent Universal film trophy to be presented to the winner of the great auto race at Sheepshead Bay occupied the center of the booth, standing on a fine black mahogany pedestal, which, in turn, rested upon a rug composed of red feathers. A chaste and very pleasing because subdued shade of the prevailing color, illuminated every part, showing off the handsome black furniture to special advantage.

Blue Bird.

The twin of Red Feather, both in location and decorative beauty, was the Blue Bird exhibit. A Blue Bird in flight shining through a glassy surface and giving a stained-glass effect, was the object of much admiration. The Blue Bird souvenirs were in special demand, both the dainty Blue Bird pin and a very artistically finished image of the Blue Bird. If it was the intention of the designer and builder of the booth to convey an idea and to spread an atmosphere of Blue Bird happiness, he certainly succeeded. Both the Red Feather and the Blue Bird exhibits were haunted by the fair sex which was undoubtedly attracted by the pretty color arrangements in both exhibits.

Triangle.

The dominant notes in this exhibit were elegance and simplicity. A happy combination of these two elements is extremely rare, but it was unmistakably present in the Triangle exhibit. The tapestry hangings deserve special mention and the whole furnishing idea of the booth was aptly characterized by a lady visitor who spoke of it as "the neatest and niftiest affair" she had seen on the whole floor. The Triangle exhibit was in charge of the capable and courteous William Burnstine.

Novelty Slide Company.

This booth was quite a center of attraction every evening around nine o'clock. About that time there appeared an artist, who painted pictures of exhibitors and visitors generally. This fact, however, was not the cause of the crowds. What attracted attention and caused the throngs to collect was the fact that the aforesaid artist was masked. The masked marvel was supposed to be one of the most celebrated artists in the city, but whatever attempts were made to penetrate his disguise resulted in failure. His identity remains undiscovered to this minute. Two automatic revolving slide racks, showing the finest specimens of the slide maker's art, formed an attractive part of this exhibit. The exhibit was in charge of J. H. Coupal.

Automatic Film Recording Company.

Though one of the very last to arrive, the exhibit of the Automatic Film Rewinding Company was one of the best frequented and most successful. The demonstrations at this booth were always watched by a good crowd of whom many lingered to make special inquiries. It was generally said that the product of this company would find a big market. The exhibit was in charge of M. W. Pickens, of Harrisburg.

Wurlitzer.

THE WURLITZER exhibit was well in keeping with the high reputation which this name carries with it. It was in charge of L. J. Ryan. The particular instrument on exhibition was styled "The New Wurlitzer Sensation, Style O, Piano-Orchestra-Organ." This instrument contains all the big and little motion picture effects. It can be played by hand or automatically. Among the effects are cymbals, drums and all the sounds in the register of the trap-drummer. A very beautiful golden harp, placed for decorative purposes only, caused not a little favorable comment. The Wurlitzer exhibit had many successful demonstrations.

The World Film Company.

A simple exhibit but one of great elegance and beauty was that of the World Film Company. The booth was a veritable triumph of the florist's and the decorator's art. Portraits of the great World Film stars alternated with floral effects in the decorative scheme of this booth. All the portraits were splendidly executed and did full justice to their famous originals. Among the portraits were seen those of Alice Brady, Ethel Clayton, Kitty Gordon, House Peters, Gail Kane, Holbrook Blinn and Robert Warwick. The exhibit was in charge of the charming and hospitable Miss Jane Graham.

Essanay.

The familiar signature "Essanay" in gigantic letters appears above this exhibit, accompanied by this legend, "The First to Standardize Photoplays." The exhibit is small but is very tastefully decorated and came in for much favorable comment. Flowers and handsome furniture are the distinguishing characteristics of the exhibit which was in charge of the courteous and over-active H. B. Thompson.

Mutual.

The Mutual exhibit has used its small space to the utmost advantage showing a very large gallery of famous Mutual players, among them many of the first magnitude. The decoration is simple but elegant, the color effects are altogether pleasing. Many mutual friends and Mutual fans made this exhibit their headquarters during the Exposition.

Pathe.

The reason the Pathe exhibit was constantly surrounded by interested crowds was simple enough. It was snakes. Not real snakes, but remarkably good imitation wrigglers. The Pathe souvenir was easily the most sensational on the premises, and the most talked about. Everybody wanted to see the green little vipers. The original way of advertising drew attention to Pathe's great series, "Who Is Guilty?" A group of wax figures representing a scene from the famous "Iron Claw," was another unique method of advertising. The Pathe exhibit was never entirely deserted and every visitor was sure of a welcome and—a souvenir.

Fox.

The exhibit of William Fox was undoubtedly one of the most artistic and the most impressive. The designer had hit upon a very original idea of construction, the architectural effect being that of an Egyptian temple. The structure was oval in form, wonderfully decorated with exquisite flowers, the latter in the most lavish profusion and above the thick garlands of living flowers loomed handsome oil paintings of the great Fox stars. Among the latter was Theda Bara, who, for the time being, had entirely cast off her vampire expression and presented a charming appearance. The booth was in charge of a handsomely uniformed attendant. Being well located right at the entrance of the grand second isle, the Fox exhibit was much admired. It was the general consensus of opinion that this exhibit was second to none. In the center of the pictorial gallery of artists was a portrait of William Fox flanked on either side by a dainty little bird cage in wich live canaries intoned their tiny anthems from time to time.

Nicholas Power Company.

Here was another very busy spot. Machines of almost every vintage were on exhibition and the demonstrators had their work cut out to explain and illustrate the progress of the Power's machine from the early days to the present moment. Perfection in the control of the arc lamp was the dominant note in the lectures. On the walls of the exhibit were shown the portrait of the head of the house and certificates showing all the awards and medals won by the famous house of Power's. The Power's exhibit was visited by every exhibitor who attended the Exposition, the chairs in the booth, though numerous, being seldom empty. Two Six B models were in the booth for demonstration purposes and they were constantly surrounded by eager spectators and listeners. Few exhibits showed more business during the Exposition than the Power's booth.

Picture Theater Equipment Company.

"In our booth," said Mr. Edwards to the World man, "we are exhibiting practically everything in the Palace with the exception of films. Here you can find the Power's 6 B and 6 A Cameragraph complete, and attached to a line service a picture may be shown immediately on the Minusa Gold Fibre Screen that measures 9 x 12 feet.

"We also have on display there the Simplex Projector complete with type S. Lamp House, a new mechanical speed control and regulator. On the right hand side of the booth entering we have the New Edison Super-Kinetoscope Projector, which is the highest priced machine on the market to-day; while on the left hand side of the booth we have a Wotton Rexolux connected on a single phase current feeding a Power's 6 B machine with an arc and 6 A machine with an arc and the spot lamp with an arc.

"We also have there the Motiograph 1916 model machine complete with motor, etc., etc.

"In the center of the booth we carry Menger & Ring display frames, Caille ticket venders and ticket choppers. We also have there on display Piteco Condensing Lens System of which we have sold several sets to the leading exhibitors who have called at our exhibit.

"We also have on display a complete line of projection material such as used in the general photoplay houses."

Arthur Leslie's Exhibit.

Exhibit No. 144, on the south, elevated promenade, bore the legend in bold letters: "Arthur Leslie's Publicity Headquarters." Unusual in character was this booth, as it showed the various processes of the newspaper syndicate art. Being "Publicity Headquarters" it was the nerve center of publicity activity. Alice Joyce, Pearl White, Edwin August, Edmund Breeze, Edward Martindel and many other screen stars received the public at this booth and distributed handsome sepia autographed portraits and other worthwhile souvenirs. The most effective novelties were varicolored balloons bearing the portrait of Edwin August. Five thousand were distributed and lent a carnival touch to the passing crowds. Mr. Leslie's advertisement in the New York newspapers for "a refined red-haired young woman to blow up five thousand balloons" created unusual interest and comment.

At this booth was prepared the daily column "Hoo's Hoo in Filmland," which appeared in the Exposition official newspaper. Mr. Leslie is known throughout the industry as "the man who put the motion picture on the newspaper map" as he was the first newspaperman to inaugurate a motion picture department in newspapers throughout the country.

Wm. L. Sherry (Paramount).

The genial, smiling confidence of Wm. L. Sherry, the exhibitors' friend, fitted in well with the atmosphere of good cheer and hospitality which pervaded this handsome exhibit. Mr. Sherry, though an everlastingly busy man, contrived to spend much of his time in the Grand Central Palace and seemed to delight in the part of host and master of ceremonies whenever there was a chance to welcome a visiting exhibitor. Portraits of distinguished actors and actresses in the Lasky and Famous Players formed the background of the exhibit. The rest of the decorative scheme consisted of well chosen flowers and very elegant furniture. There were many baskets of flowers that called forth exclamations of joyous surprise, and these were interspersed with handsome vases. Much literature was given out by the charming young women, who assisted in making visitors welcome. Dainty souvenirs were likewise given away in generous quantities. Mr. Sherry expressed himself as well satisfied with the Exposition.

Westinghouse-Cooper-Hewitt.

This booth was one of the most businesslike in the entire Exposition, and likewise one of the most active. In the course of the day there were several most interesting demonstrations. A very clever young man, who evidently knew what he was talking about, gave a demonstration of the Westinghouse-Cooper-Hewitt Mercury Arc Rectifier for changing alternating to direct current for motion picture projecting. This process and the uses of the machine intended for that purpose, were set forth in clear, plain language, intelligible to any layman who had at least a smattering of machinery and electricity. It was noticed that many operators and exhibitors were deeply interested, and their inquiries were answered in the most painstaking and thorough manner.

Here was a distinctly successful exhibit. Speaking to a representative of the Moving Picture World, the manager of this exhibit said: "I wish to emphasize again that the Photo-Player is an instrument specially built and adapted for the uses of motion picture theaters, and is not to be confounded with the ordinary automatic instruments. If an exhibitor has anything like a first-class house, where the audience demands the best, the Photo-Player will supply the need, in a more effective and less expensive manner than any orchestra possibly could. The Photo-Player needs the services of but one operator. There is no limit to the variety of music which may be played on this instrument. We have been supplying exhibitors with these instruments for the past two years and now many of the best theaters in New York and other big cities are using them. One man who owns seven theaters was so well satisfied with his first experiment with a Photo-Player that he now has the instrument in all of his theaters. In his case the Photo-Player superseded an orchestra of seven pieces. Our best customers are the men who have tried the Photo-Player because they know it saves them money and increases their profits."

Paramount.

The Paramount exhibit in this Exposition was remarkable for its extreme simplicity. It entails no strain on the descriptive artist. It simply consisted of an illuminated sign, very similar to that which one sees at the tail end of Paramount pictures. This sign, done handsomely in colors, rested on a platform flanked on either side by a tall cypress tree. The rest was austere simplicity.

Typhoon Fan Company.

This was the one exhibit which in the most literal sense of the word made itself felt as you entered the Palace. There were three fans of gigantic size, one weighing 2,200 pounds, and they agitated the air with practically no other assistance than that of the breeze in the hall. The big fan with its ball bearing arrangement and its minimum of friction was suggestive of coolness, even when it was not in motion. Ordinarily this hugh fan is propelled by a 15-horsepower motor. Various types of fans were represented in the exhibit. In addition to the types displayed in the exhibit, there is the Twin Typhoon, the Square Type, the Round Type, and the Brick Set Type, all of them highly efficient.

Simplex.

In the very heart of the Exposition and likewise in the best strategic position was the generous and busy exhibit of the Simplex Company. The World reporter in quest of technical information to bring out all the big points in the exhibit, found it extremely difficult to get access to the booth, for at all times there was an earnest and attentive throng listening to lectures and demonstrations made by Mr. A. U. Birkholm and others. Here were to be seen models of every Simplex machine ever put out from number one, built in April, 1911, by Frank Cannock, to the very latest model of today. The improvements of this latest model were shown in great detail and precision by the able lecturers. Three of the machines were painted red, white and blue, imparting a touch of patriotism to the exhibit. The great progress of the Simplex has been along the line of obtaining a perfect control of the art at all times, making it easy to operate the arc lamp. There were displayed on the walls of the exhibit various diplomas, among which a certificate of a gold medal and grand prize at the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego, in 1915, formed a most prominent part. The prettiest feature of the exhibit was a row of Ionian pillars in wood which were surmounted by glass globes bearing the inscription Simplex. The booth was crowded every evening and there is no doubt that this exhibit will prove profitable to the Simplex Company.

National Cash Register Company.

The National Cash Register Company had a well audited exhibit (15 x 30) demonstrating their two-color 1916 tickets, printing, recording and issuing machines. These machines attracted large crowds and resulted in many sales. Their film, which ran for a time in their auditorium, was received with great applause. This film showed the working and the organization of the National Cash Register Company. Little Miss Jane Lee, connected with one of the big film companies, attracted much attention at the National Cash Register exhibit operating one of their two-color ticket machines. She certainly succeeded in showing the simplicity of the register.

Frank Netschert Company.

This well known decorating company set an example in the art of decorating. The exhibit was a specimen of the decorator's best art, and there is no doubt that this company won golden opinions from the numerous exhibitors who were attracted by this exhibit. Many pretty effects were crowded into this small space, but none was more charming and natural than the set showing the entrance to a Roman garden. This effort was a masterpiece in every sense of the word.

STREYCKMANS OUT OF MIRROR.

H. J. Streyckmans, the man who built the Mirror studio and launched that organization successfully in the production of pictures, has resigned as assistant general manager. Mr. Streyckmans is a pioneer in the moving picture business and held high executive positions with such companies as the Mutual Film Corporation, New York Motion Picture Corporation, etc.

Herbert Brenon's Remarkable Career

Producer of the New Annette Kellerman Picture Started as Crier of Racing Program in "Sporting Life."

SINCE D. W. Griffith flashed on New York in February, 1915, carrying with him the twelve reels of "The Birth of a Nation," there has been no personal event in the film world more interesting than the arrival of Herbert St. John Brenon from Jamaica last month with the completed reels of what some folks think will be styled "A Daughter of the Gods." His days and nights, exclusive of attention to callers, have been devoted to the cutting, assembling and titling of film. With proper modesty he does not care to talk about his picture, but says that he prefers to have the public and the critics appraise it. It is interesting to recall, however, some facts of the director's career in view of his coming offering.

Herbert Brenon.

In 1896, or thereabouts, R. A. Roberts was staging the English melodrama, "Sporting Life," at the Academy of Music, where William Fox now reigns supreme. Much vexed because a minor actor did not suit the part, he called out: "Is there anybody here that can shout 'Program of the Races?'"

"Program! Program! Buy your Program of the Races!" bawled a small boy in the last row of supers. Mr. Roberts ordered the under-sized youth to the front and immediately engaged him as the stage program boy at a salary of a dollar a day. The boy was young Herbert Brenon, not very long before that landed here from the Old World to seek his fortune.

"I started in America," reminisced Mr. Brenon the other day, "as a Pittsburgh office boy at $3 a wek. After the family moved to New York, Joseph F. Vion, the vaudeville agent, offered me $4 a week as his office boy and promised to give me $4 a week more for ushering at night at Weber & Fields' Theater."

Next, George White, the Super King, picked Brenon for one of the cadets of Gascony in a Cyrano de Bergerac production Augustin Daly was making with Sydney Herbert and Ada Rehan. Kyrle Bellew kindly introduced the lad to Day, and Augustin Daly made Herbert Brenon his call boy. Thus the future director worked for the prince of American managers through the seasons of 1897-1898, the observation of his chief inspiring him with ambition to boss the stage himself. But all he got was $10 a week.

After the death of Augustin Daly, Mr. Brenon developed into a good road actor and assistant stage manager, playing with Walker Whiteside, Harry Lacey and other stars and enacting the chief juvenile in "Sporting Life" only two short years after he had been the program boy. Then followed several valuable years in stock as actor and assistant stage director, leading up to his active direction of the Lyceum theater, Minneapolis. To round out the experience, Mr. Brenon and his wife, Helen Downing, whom he married in 1904, put in four years in vaudeville.

In February, 1913, Julius Stern, of the Imp Studio, engaged Mr. Brenon as a scenario writer at $75 a week. Within six months Mr. Stern gave him the first opportunity to direct a picture, and three months later he had made the Imp's first three-reeler, "Leah, the Forsaken," followed by the first four-reeler, "Absinthe," and later by the Universal's first seven-reeler, "Neptune's Daughter." On the making of this last picture Herbert Brenon's fame as a foremost producer was secure. For Fifteen months past he has been working for William Fox, culminating in the great commission he has now finished. But his activity and success are also shown by such Fox films of his as "The Kreutzer Sonata," "The Clemenceau Case," "The Two Orphans," "The Soul of Broadway," and "Sin." With this record it is not to be wondered at that Mr. Fox entrusted him with the gigantic task of filming the great Kellerman production in Jamaica.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS BUSY.

Many Activities Hold Their Attention as the Summer Season Approaches—Better Films Movement.

A MULTIPLICITY of outside activities is keeping Cleveland motion picture exhibitors more than busy as summer approaches. Increased admission prices, July closing, the "better films" movement and the proposed attack on Sunday exhibitions by a group of church leaders are some of the problems the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has been striving to master. Now the League members have embarked on a "baby-saving" campaign in the interest of the Babies' Hospital and Dispensary, and they are putting the vigor and "pep" into the movement which augurs well for its success.

The exhibitors became interested in the "baby saving" campaign after Walter Greenwood, a trustee of the dispensary, appeared at a meeting in the League quarters and asked their aid. The exhibitors will run films showing the work the dispensary is doing in saving the lives of hundreds of sick babies of the poor, and will aid the movement further by permitting society girls, garbed as nurses, to collect funds in the theater lobbies when the films are run.

Johnny Ray, of the Reserve Photoplay Company, has agreed to make the films at cost and contribute the services of himself and his director. The films will be shown in 152 theaters in Cleveland and suburbs. The campaign is designed to present to the public the need for more nurses and more funds to carry on the work of the dispensary during the coming summer.

Elwood Street, assistant secretary of the Cleveland Federation for Charity and Philanthropy, who was one of those who addressed the exhibitors on the plan, declared he had little sympathy for a certain group of reformers who, he said, had expended much time and energy in decrying the evil in motion pictures while closing their eyes to the great good which motion pictures were doing.

Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the League; Adolph Mahrer, of the Milo theater, and Frank M. Kenney, of the Clark theater, are members of a special committee which will push the "baby-saving" campaign.

Better Films Movement.

Miss Genevieve Cline, president of the Cleveland Federation of Women's Clubs, which inaugurated the "better films" movement now being tested in seven picture theaters, addressed the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at a meeting May 2.

"Your Responsibity to the Public" was the subject of her address, and so favorable an impression did she make on the exhibitors that she was promised the freedom of the floor at any future meeting.

"There is nothing that can exert so great an influence for good or evil in this community as your organization," she declared. "You motion picture men have shown a disposition to place your business on a high plane. You have shown a disposition to build well and surely. You are pioneers in this work, and the greatest thing in the world for you at this time is to let the public know the character of work you are doing.

"You have not been receiving just treatment because you have been misunderstood in many ways. The legitimate stage went through the same struggle in the early days of its development. You now have an opportunity to write your names high on the honor roll of history.

"Cleveland exhibitors have taken the lead in the 'better films' movement, and the representatives of the Cleveland Federation of Women's Clubs will so report at the meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs in New York City next month."

Miss Cline lauded the Cleveland League for its forebearance when assailed by misguided persons, and gave high praise to President Benjamin J. Sawyer and Charles A. Megown, special representative, for their courtesy in dealing with the club women.

FIGHTING CENSORSHIP IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Exhibitors' League Will Conduct Campaign Against Movement Before Board of Supervisors.

THE Exhibitors' League of San Francisco, which was recently reorganized, and which now has an active membership of more than forty live-wire exhibitors, has commenced a determined fight to prevent, if possible, the passage of the drastic censorship ordinance which has been in the hands of the Police Committee of the Board of Supervisors for several months. Members of the organization have attended many meetings of this committee, but it is becoming apparent that their arguments against censorship have not been effective and that in all probability the committee will recommend the adoption of the ordinance.

In order to be in readiness to appear before the Board of Supervisors and to formulate a campaign for immediate action, a meeting of exhibitors and film exchange men was held in the offices of the organization recently fitted up on the eighth floor of the Mechanics' Bank building on the afternoon of April 27th. The Exhibitors' League was represented at this gathering by President T. F. McCullough, Secretary Emil R. Friedberg, Mark Cory and Sam Gordon; the film exchange interests by Fred Peachy, Louis Reichert, X. K. Stout, Morris and Abe Markowitz, Harry W. Oviatt, H. L. Knappen and W. J. Citron. The vaudeville interests were represented by Sid Grauman, manager of the Empress Theater. It was decided that one of the best means of blocking the censorship plan would be to arouse the general public on the danger of having their amusements judged for them by a few. Slides are to be used in all of the local theaters calling attention to the proposed ordinance, and speakers are to be sent to make short talks on the question. Following these talks petitions are to be circulated, and it is believed that sufficient signatures can be secured to impress the Board of Supervisors with the fact that censorship is not desired.

Funds for carrying on this work were arranged for at this meeting, Sid Grauman heading the list with $50. In all about $500 was pledged, and this sum will doubtless be added to by exhibitors and some of the smaller exchanges not represented at the gathering.

CO-OPERATION PAYS.

Oklahoma City Exhibitors Tested Competition First, Then They Decided to Get Together.

"WE JUST got together, that's all." This was the simple explanation of the local exhibitors of the curing of badly demoralized business conditions in Oklahoma City, Okla., this spring. As a result, prices have been advanced in several houses, the number of reels shown has been reduced, and practically all the exhibitors are making money.

The exhibitors are keeping together, by meeting weekly at luncheon. There is no organization, there are no rules or penalties. Co-operation for mutual and individual benefit is entirely voluntary.

Since the first of the year the situation in Oklahoma City was enough to make angels weep. There were several houses using second-run material, running six and seven reels, that were getting nice business. Somehow or other the houses using first-run got started on a campaign of competition, with the second-run houses, and with each other. Two vaudeville houses were giving five acts and six pictures for a dime. One picture show was giving ten reels of the very best features for 10 cents. Another house was giving nine reels of first-run features for 5 cents. They had reached this condition gradually—and the development finally reached the point where nobody was making any money. There was good patronage, but no profits.

Through all this campaign of competition there was no overt ill feeling, however. Each exhibitor merely felt that he had to protect his own business, and was willing to go a little farther than the other fellow to keep his patronage.

Then a few of the exhibitors got to talking about the situation. They decided that if they kept on, some of the houses would have to close. There was no possible outcome except ruin. Naturally, no one wanted to be the "goat."

So the word was spread around that there would be a luncheon to be attended by exhibitors. And the owners of the more important houses came. They quickly found a basis of mutual interest. They declared that they would go ahead with their shows in a business-like way, to make money for themselves, and without a desire to monopolize the trade.

The manager of the five-cent house that was running nine reels of first-run features, went back and cut down his number to seven—and raised the price to 10 cents! The manager of the ten-cent house reduced his program to eight reels from ten, and the vaudeville houses raised their prices to 10 and 20 cents.

They discovered that they did not lose business by the process. In fact, their business improved, and became steadier, more dependable. Since the beginning of this new era, a new house has opened, running Triangle for 10 and 20 cents—and it has got good patronage, without diminishing the returns to the other houses.

"It pays to get together," they say in Oklahoma City.

PITTSBURGH EXHIBITORS IN NEW HOME.

Making Arrangements for State Convention and Exposition in June.

THE Pittsburgh Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania has moved into its handsome new home at Penn avenue and Ninth street, where the members met for the first time on last Thursday. The quarters are most conveniently located in the center of the new film section. More than double the space is afforded for the assembly room and offices.

The first meeting in the new quarters was largely attended and much important business was transacted. President G. W. Sahner occupied the chair. Plans were gone over for the coming state convention, which the league has decided to hold in Pittsburgh, June 26, 27 and 28. According to all indications a large number of delegates throughout the state will be present, as well as many exhibitors from the neighboring territory of West Virginia and Ohio. The members of the State League expect to make the Pittsburgh exposition the biggest thing ever pulled off outside of New York, and are working up an active interest within a radius of 200 miles, in order to assure a large attendance. Arrangements are progressing rapidly, the local committee reported, a conference having been held with the Chamber of Commerce last week. It is likely that the Western Pennsylvania exposition buildings, at the Point, will be selected for the sessions, and the exposition.

The officers of the State League are as follows: B. H. Zerr, Reading, president; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburgh, National vice president; G. W. Sahner, Pittsburgh, first vice president; James Delves, Pittsburgh, secretary; Charles Segal, Philadelphia, treasurer. These men constitute an executive committee which will have charge of the convention, other committees to be appointed in the near future.

EXHIBITORS AND OPERATORS MEET.

Occasion Is Anniversary Dinner of Local 384 at Hoboken—Notable Speech on Projection by F. H. Richardson.

THE Hudson County (N. J.) Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 384, I. A. T. S. E., held its anniversary dinner on the night of Saturday, May 6th, at the New Odd Fellows' Hall, 412 Washington street, Hoboken. The exhibitors of Hudson county had also been invited to the affair and many of them responded, among them Dr. H. Charles Hespe, the president of the organized exhibitors of Hudson county. Among the invited guests who attended were Nicholas Powers, an honorary member of the local; Edward Earl, the treasurer of the company; William Smith, assistant general manager, and E. A. Reed, superintendent of the repair department; Frank H. Richardson, J. H. Hallberg, who is another honorary member of the local; W. Stephen Bush, Robert J. Emory, of the Baird Machine Company, and Howard Coles. Mayor Wittpenn had been invited to attend, but he was prevented at the last moment and was represented by his secretary, who made a neat little address. Close to two hundred operators and exhibitors were in attendance.

The meeting did not begin until about 1 a. m., and it was very near daylight when it ended at naff-past four. Ira G. Sherman, president of the union, acted as toastmaster and made a felicitous address of welcome. He called upon Mr. Power to speak and Mr. Power responded with a most delightful and instructive address about the early days of the industry and about the progress of the operators. He spoke in most entertaining fashion of some of the incidents in his own early career and assured the audience that his highest ambition now was to be useful to all who were interested in projection. At the end of his speech he was presented with a handsome engrossed copy of his certificate of membership. He thanked the toastmaster briefly and then with a few well-chosen words presented a fine silver loving cup to the toastmaster. The silver loving cup, suitably inscribed, was a gift from the union to its president. The latter made a pleasing speech of thanks and then called upon Mr. Hallberg to say something. Mr. Hallberg spoke very briefly, but much to the point, and at the conclusion of his remarks was presented with a certificate of his honorary membership. Other speakers were Mr. Emory, Mr. Earl, W. Stephen Bush, Dr. H. Charles Hespe, Howard Coles, William Smith, Mr. Reed. The chief speaker of the evening was Frank H. Richardson, the projection editor of The Moving Picture World. Although the hour was well advanced, he held his audience for fully ninety minutes. His talk was stricty technical, intended for operators primarily and for exhibitors incidentally. He illustrated his lecture with numerous photographs and told of the results of important experiments made by him with the assistance of The Moving Picture World. At the end of his lecture Mr. Richardson was presented with a certificate of honorary membership and with a vote of thanks.

The officers of local 384 are Ira G. Sherman, president; Walter A. Bemis, vice president; Edward W. Bordmann, secretary-treasurer, and Conrad Daubener, Jr., recording secretary.

FILM CLUB OF BOSTON CELEBRATES.

First Dinner and Entertainment of Organization a Very Successful Affair.

WITH several guests, more or less connected with the pictures, the new film club held its first dinner and entertainment at the Brunswick Hotel Friday, May 5. Miss Marion Howard Brazier, the club founder, was toastmistress and presented as the first speaker, Prof. Hugo Muensterberg of Harvard University, whom she introduced with a tribute to his native country as an art centre. He spoke for nearly an hour extolling the photoplay as a distinctive art in itself, but subject to improvements. He pointed out some of the present defects and causes and offered suggestive remedies. In his new book, "The Photo Play," just off the press, he goes at some length in a discussion of the future of this new art. Gustave Frohman told of what he hopes to accomplish here in an effort to produce clean, wholesome plays for children in the Copley theater, which he had taken over after its various vicissitudes, and which opened Monday, May 8, in the presence of a notable company which enjoyed "The Fairy and the Waif." Other speakers were Frank Vine of the new International Film Co., George Baldson of the V-L-S-E., Mrs. Claire Curney, vice-president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, and Myron Zobel, a Harvard student from California and a scenario writer. There were recitations by Kate Ryan, the veteran actress; arias by a member, Mrs. May Shepard Hayward, and piano solos by A. Beers. Greetings were received from S. L. Rothapfel, Richard Rowland, Walter W. Irwin, all of New York; from Robert Edeson, Forrest Robinson and May Irwin, all playing here; from Forrest Izard, Boston correspondent for the New York Dramatic Mirror. Undine Reed, formerly with the Metro Film Co., a club member, spoke briefly, as did Mrs. Alice Carroll, the newest member who paid a high tribute to the founder and president for her work in the Moving Picture World. The souvenirs, designed by Miss Brazier, were in the shape of a slide, and bore these words: The Film Club of Boston stands for Free Speech; Free Press; Free Screen.

Miss Brazier announced that she had been invited to speak at the Biennial of Women's Clubs in New York this month at a session of the Civics Committee when moving pictures will be discussed. She was given a rising vote of thanks for arranging the details of the evening.

"Love Quarantined" is the title of a one-reel comedy being produced by Director Allen Curtis, with Gale Henry and William Franey playing the leading roles and supported by Lillian Peacocke, M. Moranti and C. Conklin.

Exhibitors of Northwest in Minneapolis

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest Votes Down Immediate Affiliation with the National League, But Will Come in Later--Election of Association Officers for Ensuing Year—Exposition a Big Success

By JAMES S. McQUADE

THE second annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest was opened at the National Guard Armory, Minneapolis, at 12.45 p. m., May 2, by Mayor W. G. Nye, and the exposition, which occupied the entire space on the floor of the spacious drilling hall, was declared open at 9 o'clock p. m., by J. A. A. Burnquist, Governor of Minnesota.

An imposing parade marched from the Radisson Hotel to the Armory for the opening of the convention, headed by a number of cowboys and cowgirls of the Great West Film Company. Following these was a long line of automobiles, in which were Mayor Nye, Carl Laemmle, James Gilosky, president, and D. W. Chamberlain, secretary of the association; F. J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America; W. J. Sweeney, national vice president of the League for Illinois, and representing the Motion Picture Board of Trade; David Rodgers, Minneapolis, president of the Minnesota State League; Jay E. Gould of Glencoe, Minn., on the convention reception committee; Fred Nemeck, of St. Cloud, Minn., a member of the state executive board, and a number of film exchange managers, and others connected with the distributing department of the business, in the various states included in the territory covered by the Northwest Exhibitors' Association.

James Gilosky.

A picturesque and attractive feature of this parade was the Minneapolis Tribune girls, "twins" of celebrated moving picture stars, all dressed in character costumes and with careful make-ups that enabled one to trace the resemblance of each to the star she represented. These young ladies were winners in the Tribune's contest for the best likenesses of moving picture stars, and were entertained throughout the convention and exposition by the association.

The stars represented (in several cases with startling fidelity) were: Mary Pickford, Beverly Bayne, Theda Bara, Mae Marsh, Helen Holmes, Dorothy Bernard, Anita Stewart, Edna Purviance, Blanche Sweet and Lottie Pickford.

Arriving at the convention room in the armory, President James Gilosky called the meeting to order and introduced Mayor Nye, a genial gentleman of facile speech and ready wit, and a great friend of the moving picture. Mr. Nye declared that he esteemed it a great privilege to be present and to ring up the curtain on the convention. He was glad to welcome the visitors, more particularly because their meetings had to do with organization. Just as in nature every element is bound together with others to carry out and fulfill nature's purposes, so with individuals organization, wisely conducted, works for the betterment of any calling or business and its conditions. To be successful, organized effort must be educational and must be able to improve the business to which it is directed.

The Mayor then referred to the proposed federal board of censors for moving pictures, and he stated firmly that he had no time for such censorship. He believed that such censorship was not best for the business; but he did believe that it would be wise to have in every community a body of men and women that made a study of moving pictures and who would counsel and advise with men in the business. Such a helpful advisory censor board would be good.

The chair then called on Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Corporation, and on the president of the National League, F. J. Herrington, for a few remarks, after which the convention adjourned until 2 o'clock.

The afternoon session was brief and the business included the roll call of officers and the appointment of the credentials committee.

The roll call showed that the officers of the association at present are: President, James Gilosky, St. Paul; vice president, V. B. Valleau, Albert Lea, Minn.; secretary, D. W. Chamberlain, Minneapolis, and treasurer, C. E. Van Duzee, Minneapolis.

The state vice presidents of the association are: Jay E. Sherwood, Madison, Wis.; C. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. Dak.; J. M. Freeman, Hillsboro, N. Dak.; J. E. Boyle, Dubuque, Ia.; V. B. Velleau, Albert Lea, Minn., and Mrs. Myrtle Vinton, Bridger, Mont.

The members of the executive board are: Chairman, W. A. Scott, Red Wing, Minn.; Henry P. Green, Minneapolis, and Fred Nance, St. Cloud, Minn.

On the credentials committee were appointed: Chairman, Chas. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. Dak.; Clyde Hitchcock, Minneapolis; C. L. Graham, St. Paul, and James Agnew, Minneapolis. The committee was instructed to report Wednesday, May 3, at 11 o'clock a. m.

At 9 o'clock Tuesday evening Governor J. A. A. Burnquist opened the exposition. A large gathering was present notwithstanding the downpour of rain, and listened attentively to a short and eloquent speech by the chief executive of the state. The Governor spoke of the remarkable growth of the moving picture industry and of the great educational value of moving pictures. He emphasized the importance of their influence on the great democracy of America along the lines of education and morality. Louis W. Hill, who had promised to attend, was evidently deterred by the extreme inclemency of weather.

Beginning at 10.30 p. m., a cabaret show at the West Hotel, the first of the entertainments provided, was continued until an early hour, with a large attendance. This entertainment was arranged and donated by Sherman and Elliott, who own the rights of "The Birth of a Nation" in 17 states.

Wednesday's Session, May 3.

The first business was the reading of reports by the officers. D. W. Chamberlain, secretary, in his report stated that the association had now a paid-up membership of 190, and that a retrenchment in expenditures was necessary. He hinted at his resignation of his office and strongly recommended that in future the secretary should be elected and serve without salary. On motion the report was accepted and placed on file and a vote of thanks to the secretary was carried.

C. E. Van Duzee, treasurer, next read his report. A motion that it be accepted and placed on file was opposed by Mr. Steffes, the former treasurer, who proposed instead that it be referred to an auditing committee and a report be made on Friday.

At this juncture Mr. Chamberlain moved that the convention go into a meeting of the whole, which was seconded and carried. Mr. Chamberlain then moved that the by-laws be amended so that retiring officers' terms do not expire until 30 days after the convention and the succeeding officers take their places. This was afterwards put in the form of a resolution and passed. Another resolution by Mr. Chamberlain, to the effect that the by-laws be amended so that the secretary serve without pay and that an assistant secretary be chosen by the executive committee, to remain in service at their discretion, and salary to be named by them, was also passed by the convention. The convention then resolved itself back into executive session.

Telegrams of congratulation and good will for the success of the convention were then read by the chair. The senders were: Leo Oaks, president of the New York State League; the Illinois State League, Jay E. Sherwood, vice president for Wisconsin of the association; Miss E. J. Chalmers, treasurer of the Chalmers Publishing Co., New York; W. Stephen Bush, editor of the Moving Picture World, and the Gold King Screen Co.

The sergeant-at-arms then announced the arrival of Carl Laemmle, and the chair appointed C. E. Van Duzee, David Rodgers and Thomas Furniss, of Duluth, as a reception committee to conduct him to a seat. Mr. Laemmle had promised, after much persuasion, to address the convention before leaving the city, and just how hard it was to win his consent can be gleaned from his opening remarks.

"I am not much of a speech maker. I don't know how. I am reminded of a joke. A traveling man who knew nothing about the clothing business was appointed as salesman in a clothing store. A customer came in one day and the new man showed him a suit that cost about $10 wholesale.

"Is it all wool?" asked the customer.

"You know a d—d sight more about the business than I do. How should I know?" was the reply.

Mr. Laemmle then, in a meek way, advised the convention that it was not a good thing to ask a manufacturer to send stars to an exposition because of the great cost entailed, since, if they were engaged in a production at the time, it meant the laying off of the entire company during their absence, while the salaries went on just the same.

He stated that he wanted to hear from all exhibitors, as he had often received many good suggestions from small-town exhibitors, and that he is working to meet their wishes. He extolled the pay-in-advance policy for film service as the best policy, because it means better service for exhibitors and lower prices. He then assured the convention that Universal would never join any merger, notwithstanding newspaper reports.

A rising vote of thanks to Mr. Laemmle for his visit was then passed, on the motion of Thomas Furniss.

Mr. Whipple, an exhibitor and newspaper man of Pearce, S. Dak., was then given the floor, and speaking directly to Mr. Laemmle, declared that "The big salaries paid stars is all a mistake. The business should be put on a real commercial basis. The worthy exhibitor should be given the same consideration as is extended the worthy customer in commercial business."

After Mr. Laemmle's departure F. J. Herrington, president of the M. P. E. L. of A., was given the floor. In a strong appeal that abounded in convincing arguments and telling illustrations, he showed the assembled convention the wisdom of joining the national organization. He was applauded again and again and had evidently created a strong following by his speech.

Mr. Furniss, who followed Mr. Herrington, advocated warmly the affiliation of the association with the national body, as the exhibitors' interests would be protected more effectively and efficiently. He pressed that steps be taken at once in the convention before Mr. Herrington left the city for New York.

President Giloski, in a statement that showed his friendly disposition towards affiliation with the national body, counselled the deferring of final action until Thursday or Friday, when a larger attendance could participate in the proceedings.

Wm. J. Sweeney then addressed the convention, and as a representative of the Motion Picture Board of Trade conveyed the cordial greetings of that body to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest and best wishes for a successful convention and exposition. He also reminded them that another object of his visit was to extend a hearty invitation to attend the national convention and exposition of the M. P. E. L. of America, in Chicago, in July.

The convention adjourned at 3.30 p. m., until 11 o'clock Thursday morning.

Thursday's Session—May 4.

Thursday's session opened at 11.45 a. m. The auditing committee, to which the treasurer's report was referred, reported that owing t the absence of several missing books, which were at the home of an out-of-town exhibitor, the report would not be made until Friday's session.

Unfinished business was then taken up. The chair announced that although over 200 exhibitors had come into the city from surrounding towns and states, they seemed to be very slow in making their appearance at the convention hall. The officers of the association had done their duty in every way, but lacked the proper support, and yet when any business of importance was transacted the charge of "railroading" was made by the absentees and others.

"Affiliation with the National League will have to be made sometime," said President Gilosky. "The prohibition wave sweeping over the country and the uncertainty of war, with the consequent taxes involved, should prohibition win and war come, should make exhibitors alert in preparing means of protection, as no doubt the government tax to raise money will fall heavily on exhibitors and the trade generally."

Chas. W. Gates, of Aberdeen, S. Dak., chairman of the credentials committee, then moved that affiliation of the association with the national body be made at once. The motion was seconded by Anton Gilles, of Breckenridge, Minn.

W. A. Steffes, of Minneapolis, the former secretary of the association, gained the floor and stated that he was not in favor of taking such action until the National Convention at Chicago had decided what the per capita tax would be.

It was explained that Mr. Herrington on Wednesday, while addressing the meeting, had given out that the tax at present was $2, but that it would be changed to $1 at the Chicago Convention.

D. W. Chamberlain then proposed an amendment to the motion of Mr. Gates, as follows:

"That we affiliate with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America with the proviso that the per capita tax be reduced from $2 to $1, such affiliation not to take place until this is done."

David Rodgers, of Minneapolis, then got the floor. He was outspoken against affiliation, not because of Mr. Herrington, but because of the former treatment the Minnesota league had received from the national organization. "The national organization has neved done anything for us and never will," he emphasized. "Why should we be dictated to by Pittsburgh, New York or any other city. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest is strong enough to stand alone and be independent."

Mr. Steffes then asked Mr. Gates for information concerning the cost of the charter for affiliation with the national body. Mr. Gates replied that it would be $35.

"Any five men in the state of Minnesota can get this charter, but the resolution calls for the giving over of the entire association to the National League. We can deliver the state of Minnesota to the national body, but that is as far as we can go legally," said Mr. Steffes.

Thomas Furniss then reviewed the work done by President Herrington—all at his own expense, as he had never received a cent of salary nor even expenses—and showed what a national organization really is and the vast power it wields as compared with a merely territorial body, and strongly advocated the necessity for immediate affiliation.

Panoramic View of the Second Annual Convention of the Motion

Mr. Rodgers declared that he had no doubt of the sincerity and worth of Mr. Herrington, but that burned children dread the fire. He questioned if fifteen people in the "Twin" Cities would pay the national tax of $1. He favored the drafting of a resolution by the association, offering Mr. Herrington, as a man, its support, both moral and financial, but that "we cannot deliver over the association of the northwest, without first having the due representation present to vote on the matter. We cannot vote for the delivery of the charter."

After taking a vote on the Chamberlain and Rodgers' amendment, the latter was accepted. When announcing the result, President Gilosky said: "The vote shows that the amendment of Mr. Rodgers stands; but affiliation will come later."

Thomas Furniss next moved that a vote of thanks be passed by the association to W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World; W. A. Johnston, of the News, and Ed. Mock, of Motography, for their valuable services and assistance to the cause of the exhibitors. A vote of thanks was also extended the press of Minneapolis and St. Paul, and it was ordered that a letter of thanks to each of the trade papers be sent by the secretary.

The "pay-in-advance" policy in the matter of film service was next discussed, and several stormy passages occurred; but no wrecks resulted. This discussion has the privilege of business in a closed meeting, and so must not be exhumed.

Adjournment was made at 3.30 p. m. until 11 o'clock Friday morning.

The Banquet at the West Hotel.

The big banquet arranged for Convention and Exposition Week was held in the West Hotel from 9.45 p. m. until midnight, Thursday evening. Thomas Furniss was toastmaster, and among the numerous speakers were ex-Governor Eberhardt. Anna Held, playing in one of the theatres here, was invited to be present and she made an interesting speech on France.

All eyes—and there were nearly a thousand of them, or 500 pairs—were centered on the Minneapolis Tribune's "twin" sisters of famous photoplay stars. The young ladies were toasted and otherwise honored until they must have begun to think that they were the real thing. Miss Eugenie Young, the lucky "twin" sister of Mary Pickford, was transported into the seventh heaven by a real telegram from the real Mary, which congratulated her and the other "twins" on the happiness of the idea and on their successful impersonations.

Friday's Session, May 5.

The convention was called to order at 11.45 a. m., and the first business taken up was the reading and discussion of the auditing committee's report. It read as follows:

We, the auditing committee, beg leave to report as follows: That we have information to the effect that $70 was received from the National Carbon Co. for space at the 1915 Exposition, and the same has not been placed to the credit of the association.

After discussion, the former secretary, W. A. Steffes, made a motion that the books be submitted to the auditor who had checked up the accounts of the Exposition for 1915, and that if any deficit were shown he would be ready to make it good. He was certain that there was an oversight somewhere, but that he was ready to clean up the accounts in the manner stated. The motion was carried.

President James Gilosky then recommended that every member of the association should consider himself a member of the committee on legislation and carefully watch and combat as strongly as possible any measure inimical to the trade that may be brought up during the approaching deliberations of the various state legislatures, in the territory covered by the association. Bills of censorship and others affecting the exhibitors' business should be strongly opposed.

The election of officers of the association for the ensuing year was next in order. The chair appointed as tellers: Anton Gilles, Breckenridge, Minn.; Wilbur Forsyth, Minneapolis, and J. E. Hipple, Pierre, S. Dak. Mr. Gilosky then called Chas. W. Gates to occupy the chair while the election of the new president was proceeding, as he was a candidate.

After James Gilosky and Chas. Campbell, both of St. Paul, were placed in nomination, the list was closed. The result showed that Mr. Gilosky was again chosen president by a handsome majority. His election was made unanimous on the motion of Mr. Campbell.

For vice-president of the association, Chas. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. Dak., had no competitor and was elected unanimously.

Wm. Koenig, Minneapolis, and W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, were placed in nomination for the office of secretary, and the vote showed the election of Mr. Koenig. His election was made unanimous on the motion of Mr. Steffes.

C. E. Van Duzee, the present able treasurer of the association, was nominated to succed himself and the list closed. It was moved and carried that the secretary cast one ballot for the nominee, which was done.

The following were unanimously elected as vice-presidents of the five states in the territory of the association: J. E. Hipple, Pierre, S. Dak.; Jay E. Sherwood, Madison, Wis.; J. E. Boyle, Dubuque, Ia.; Anton Gilles, Breckenridge, Minn., and James Cavanaugh, Grand Forks, N. Dak.

For membership in the executive committee, the following eight men were placed in nomination: J. Reisman, St. Paul; F. E. Nemeck, St. Cloud; W. A. Scott, Red Wing; H. P. Green, Minneapolis; Thomas Furniss, Duluth; Henry J. Breilein, St. Paul; Jay Gould, Glencoe, Minn., and M. H. Cary, Willmar, Minn. The first five named were elected, after which adjournment was made sine die.

The Grand Ball.

With the great convention hall brighter than it had been throughout the sessions, 1,500 spectators gathered in the Armory to witness the last and best offering of the program Friday when the grand march, led by stars of the screen, set the grand ball in motion.

First in the long line, which included many of the leading figures of the moving picture trade in the Northwest, were Valeska Suratt with Bryant Washburn of the Essanay Company as her partner. They were greeted with hearty applause as they paraded through the crowding onlookers and at last began the steps of a fascinating waltz. Immediately following them were Edwin Arnold, another Essanay star, who had as his partner Mrs. James Gilosky of St. Paul, wife of the president of the Northwest Exhibitors. They also were the recipients of much applause.

Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, at Armory Hall, Minneapolis.

Miss Eugenie C. Young (Dorothy Bernard), Mrs. Hoople Provan (Beverly Bayne), Miss Hazel Wise (Theda Bara), Miss Mabel Byrnes (Mary Pickford), Miss Veronica Kiley (Mae Marsh), Miss Belle West (Helen Holmes), Miss Evelyn MacDonald (Anita Stewart), Miss Ruth Severson (Edna Purviance), Miss Violet Ellsworth (Blanche Sweet), Persis Johnson (Lottie Pickford).

The ten Tribune girls, picked because of their resemblance to screen stars, appeared near the head of the line with partners and attracted great interest among the spectators.

The appearance of the Essanav stars from Chicago saved the day for the convention management, who nearly faced the predicament of disappointing their patrons in the feature number of the program. Miss Suratt was available because she happened to be playing at the Orpheum in St. Paul.

Exhibits in Exposition Hall.

The National Guard Armory is located on Kenwood Parkway, just outside of the heart of the city. It was attractively decorated and suitably arranged for the accommodation of the display booths of manufacturers and supply companies in attendance.

The Seeburg Piano Co., Chicago, was represented by J. E. Gerlick, sales manager, and R. L. Steffins, demonstrator. The force of the Osburn Piano Player Co., the company's Minneapolis representatives, also assisted in the exploitation of the Seeburg instruments. Mr. Gerlick reported the sale of a style R demonstrator on the opening day of the convention.

The American Seating Co., Chicago, was represented by P. S. Dickinson, manager of the opera chair department, assisted by Messrs. Blackwell, Briggs, Carlson and Stanley, of the Minneapolis office of the firm. This company was also showing its line in its Minneapolis quarters, at 702 Boston Block.

National Cash Register Co., Dayton, O., represented by A. S. Palmer, manager of the firm's St. Paul office, who demonstrated the latest model of the National two-color ticket issuing machine.

National Carbon Co., Cleveland, O., represented by W. C. Kunzman and I. B. Cressman, Minneapolis representative, showing the new silvertip D. C. negative carbon and a complete line of moving picture carbons in all sizes for D. C. and A. C. current.

Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis, represented by Fred S. Meyer, manager, and Messrs. Lederman (division manager), Van Husan (Omaha), Homer (Fargo, N. D.), Gardner (Wis. Div.), O'Brien (Minn. Div.), Coon (South Dakota Div.) and Messrs. Muir, Barnheim, Blumberg, assistants to Mr. Meyer in the local office. G. A. Stiles, from the company's New York office, also came on for the show.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., Minneapolis, represented by Manager J. H. Margolas, and D. O. Hoye, assistant.

Triangle Film Corporation, Minneapolis, represented by Manager R. E. Bradford, and Messrs. Jackson and Woskie.

Metro Pictures Service, Minneapolis, represented by Manager O. N. Davies, and Messrs. May, Hoyt and Kuhn.

Independent Film Corporation, Minneapolis, represented by A. R. Nelson and G. E. Moore.

General Film Service, Minneapolis, represented by Manager J. P. Van Meter and Messrs. Montgomery and Knapp. G. M. Tyler, exploiting Essanay's "Mary Page" serial, was also present at the General Film booth.

Supreme Features, Minneapolis, represetned by Manager H. Rathner and M. H. Conhin.

V-L-S-E, Inc., Minneapolis office, represented by Manager C. W. Salwin and Messrs. McVey, Flynn, Maxwell, Fox and Drum.

National Film Co. and New Film Corporation, Minneapolis, represented by Harry Rowe.

Northwest Weekly Service, Minneapolis, represented by President Wm. A. Lochren. Here was demonstrated the DeVry commercial projector, with a complete miniature moving picture theater for window display advertising purposes.

Cushman Motor Works, Lincoln, Neb., represented by R. N. Cleveland, electrical engineer. Mr. Cleveland reported a recent sale of sixty-six Cushman engine generator outfits to the United States Government for the instruction and entertainment of the soldiers at their different army posts.

Twin City Scenic Co., Minneapolis, designers and builders of scenery and stage equipment, represented by E. L. Erickson.

Kimball & Cobb (Kayancee) Film Mfg. Co., Minneapolis, represented by Messrs. Kimball and Cobb.

Monogram Slide Co., Minneapolis, featuring Rexolux motor generator, represetned by R. L. Hunt, manufacturers' agent.

Sterling Electric Co., Minneapolis, electrical supply dealers, represented by M. V. Rutherford and S. Calhoun.

Pathescope Co., Minneapolis, demonstrating latest model Pathescope home projector, represented by Gordon T. Bright, sales manager, and V. L. Truitt.

Williams Lobby Display Frames, Minneapolis, showing a line of lobby frames, represented by Guy Williams, proprietor.

Arcus Ticket Co., Chicago, represented by S. E. Peterson. Mr. Peterson informed us that the exhibitors with whom he did business were using more of the reserved seat style of tickets because of the demand for them by the public on special feature nights when there was an increase in admission.

American Coupon Association, Minneapolis, represented by F. J. White and H. S. Atwood.

The Hertner Electric & Mfg. Co., Cleveland, O., displaying the Transverter motor generator.

Unicorn Film Service, represented by J. C. Woolf, manager of Minneapolis office, and Izzie Schlank, traveling representative.

Feature Film Co., St. Paul, Minn., dealers in supplies, represented by S. R. Thompson, president, John C. Moore and Walter Groner.

Electric Engineering Co., Minneapolis, ventilation specialists and dealers in power supplies, represetned by C. E. Frailey, Tom Mullin and Charles Holton.

Excel Feature Film Co., Minneapolis, feature state right buyers, represented by E. V. Bartle.

The Great West Film Co., St. Paul, represented by Messrs. Coburn and Cooper.

Peerless Electrical Co., Minneapolis, electrical supply dealers, represented by Wm. N. Ness.

Collins Advertising Co., Minneapolis, advertising specialists, represented by Frank and Ralph Collins.

Force Brothers, Minneapolis, official convention photographers, represented by Frank Force and W. H. Buckley.

W. J. Dyer & Bros., St. Paul, featuring the "Fotoplayer" musical instrument, represented by A. L. Brown, manager, and Messrs. Kyle, Greibler and Clark. Leo Weissenbach, president of the Photo Player Co. of Illinois, with offices in Chicago, was also seen at this booth, working in the interests of the "Fotoplayer."

Favorite Feature Films, Minneapolis, feature state right buyers, represented by Manny Gottlieb, manager.

Friedman Film Co., Minneapolis, represented by Ben Friedman, manager, and Messrs. Izzie Friedman and E. A. Copilovich.

Enterprise Optical Co., Chicago, represented by O. F. Spahr, vice-president and general manager, and John A. McAuley, traveling representative. This company had on display the 1916 model of the Motiograph machine, and occupied a portion of a booth with the Rialto Theater Supply Co., of Minneapolis, the latter concern being represented by S. A. Louis.

Famous Players Star Feature Film Service, Minneapolis, controlling Paramount productions for Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota, represented by B. Barnett, Sr., and Messrs. Yentsch and Wiesner. Leo Eckstein, manager of the Milwaukee branch of the Paramount, was also present.

Northwestern Motion Picture Equipment Co., Minneapolis, represented by David G. Rogers, general manager. The Precision Machine Co., represented by Walter W. Evans, Jr., displaying the type S Simplex projector, and the Nicholas Power Co., represented by R. W. Horn, displaying models 6A and 6B Power's projectors, occupied two booths jointly with the Northwestern Equipment Co. The entire display room was finely decorated.

Mutual Film Corporation, Minneapolis office, represented by W. H. Stafford, manager, assisted by R. C. Herman, of the Sioux Falls office, and F. B. Benno, of the Fargo, N. D., office.

Pathe Exchange, Minneapolis office, represented by S. B. Sampson, manager, and Messrs. Pierce, O'Bannon, Malone and Truitt.

The Bartola Musical Instrument Co., Chicago, demonstrating the Bartola orchestra, represented by Charles C. Pyle, general sales agent, D. W. Barton, inventor and general manager, and Messrs. Waise, Owe and Cowhan.

Amusements, a local trade journal published in Minneapolis, represented by Thomas J. Hamlin, managing editor, Charles G. Bramham and T. E. Mortensen.

There were two moving picture theaters erected temporarily in the exposition building which were at the disposal of the film manufacturers who desired to run off subjects for the pleasure of the public and exhibitors. No admission was charged, and the exhibition ran continuously from the opening hour in the morning until night. The "theaters" were named after the Simplex and Power's machines, respectively.

Convention Notes.

C. C. Baker, owner of the Strand theater, Britton, South Dakota, was seen by me at the convention. Mr. Baker built the Strand theater last year. It seats 300 people, and General Film Company's service and miscellaneous features comprised of V-L-S-E, World and Fox makes are offered his patrons. The regular program costs 10 cents and the feature program 25 cents. Mr. Baker has the only theater in his home town, which has a population of 1,000 people. He is doing very good business.

Anton Gilles, owner of the Grand theater, Breckinridge, Minn., was an energetic figure in the convention session. Mr. Gilles has been in the business for seven years, and is a very well posted man in his line. He shows two Mutual master pictures twice a week, and V-L-S-E and Equitable features for the balance of the week. He also uses the Mutual regular service. His programs are four reels and six reels, the latter being used when a feature is shown. The prices for the regular program are 10 cents, and for feature days 10 and 15 cents. Mr. Gilles stated that business was very good, and the profits for the year thus far show a handsome increase over those of last year. Mr. Gilles has been a reader of the World ever since he has been in the business.

Just by chance I gained the acquaintance of H. J. Breilein, who owns and manages the Faust, Verdi and Victoria theaters in St. Paul. The Victoria was opened Saturday, May 6, but Mr. Breilein found time in the midst of his labors to attend the convention meetings regularly. About ten years ago Mr. Breilein opened the old Dreamland theater in Minneapolis, on Plymouth avenue and Fourth street. In those days C. E. Van Duzee and Mr. Breilein were the only exhibitors in the city, Mr. Van Duzee owning the Scenic, the Joy and Wonderland. At that time they ran two reels to a show and an illustrated song as a chaser. Mr. Van Duzee charged 5 and 10 cents for a three or four-reel program, and Mr. Breilein charged 5 cents for two reels of the General Film Company's product. At the present time in St. Paul Mr. Breilein charges 5 and 10 cents in his three houses, and sometimes 25 cents for exceptional features. Mr. Breilein stated that the present business in St. Paul, so far as the exhibition of pictures and freedom from excessive censoring is concerned, are the most wonderful in the United States. The members of the local association are working harmoniously with the city officials and no friction occurs. The exhibitors of St. Paul believe that pictures passed by the National Board of Review are good enough for them. Mr. Breilein reported excellent business. He has used the Moving Picture World ever since it was founded, and has it on file for over four years back. Mr. Breilein is still hale and hearty and looks as prosperous as he is hearty.

F. J. McWilliams, owner of the Casino and Strand Theaters, La Crosse, Wis., was seen for a moment. He told me that business is very fair in La Crosse, and that his victorious fight to run moving picture shows on Sundays in the Strand has been very popular with the people in the city. The Sunday shows are always crowded, and he offers good clean programs that always make a hit.

I ran into J. G. Heywood, owner of the Moveum, Aitkin, Minn., one day on my rounds at the convention. Aitkin is a town of 2,200, and Mr. Heywood is its king, so far as the exhibition of moving pictures is concerned. The Moveum seats 400 people and is the only house in the town. Programs of four reels are offered at 5 and 10 cents. Mr. Heywood swears by the General Film Company's regular program, and in addition offers feature programs comprised of V-L-S-E and Metro features once a week, at 10 and 20 cents. "We don't need a censor in Aitkin," said Mr. Heywood, "as I am strictly guided by the reviews and comments of pictures in the Moving Picture World. The Moving Picture World has been my guide in these matters for six years and more. Before booking a film I always look up what the World has to say about it, and I have found that I can absolutely rely on the accuracy of its reviews."

Valeska Suratt was an extraordinary magnet at the Fox Film Company's booth in the exposition hall on Wednesday afternoon, May 3. Miss Suratt was playing in the Orpheum in St. Paul, and responded to an invitation by the local manager of the Fox Film Corporation to come over and greet the crowds at Armory Hall. She was kept busy handing out souvenirs during her two and a half hours' stay at the exposition. These were chiefly confined to photographs of herself, and many hundreds carried them away with a pleased and satisfied air.

SELZNICK LEASES SUITE OF OFFICES.

Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, has leased the entire fourteenth floor of the new film building at Forty-ninth street and Seventh avenue for general offices. Work has begun on the division of the 10,000 square feet of floor space into the various suites. The new offices will be the home of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation and the headquarters of its distributing company, Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc. The architect has been given instructions to spare no expense in making the offices as luxurious and handsome as any in the city. Mr. Selznick and his forces, who have been operating temporarily at 130 West 46th street, will move immediately into the new Forty-ninth street buiding, occupying temporary quarters until their own floor is ready.

Smith-Hughes Bill Radically Changed

In Form in Which It Will Be Favorably Reported to House Are Many New and Striking Features.

THE amended Smith-Hughes Censor Bill, about to be submitted to the House of Representatives with a favorable report, shows numerous and radical changes and few will recognize in the amended measure the crude workmanship of Wilbur F. Crafts. All the changes are of great importance. All the suggestions made at the hearing and in briefs submitted by manufacturers and exhibitors have been carefuly considered by the committee, and a good many of them have, in some form or other, been incorporated into the amended bill. The report of the minority opposing the bill, and indeed every form of censorship of motion pictures, will be filed with the clerk of the House when the bill is reported. The minority report is said to be very strong and logical and will be printed in full in the next issue of The Moving Picture World.

The substantial provisions of the Smith-Hughes Bill as it has finally emerged from the House Committee on Education are as follows:

There shall be five commissioners, who are to be appointed with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $7,500, except that the annual salary of the chairman shall be $8,000. The commission shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of deputy commissioners and such other employees as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties.

The principal office of the commission shall be in the city of Washington, but it may establish and maintain offices or bureaus wherever efficiency, economy and the public interest require. Each bureau or office which, for the aforesaid reasons, is designated by the commission as a place for the submission of films shall be in charge of a commissioner or a deputy commissioner, who shall be vested by the commission with authority to issue licenses and permits, as hereinafter described, in all proper cases.

The commission shall promptly license for interstate and foreign commerce every motion picture film submitted to it as herein required, unless such film or a part thereof is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, or is a reproduction of an actual bull fight or prize fight, or is of such a character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or incite to crime. If the commission shall not license any film for any of the above reasons, it shall furnish to the applicant a written report clearly setting forth the reasons for its refusal and a description of each rejected part of any film not disapproved in toto, and upon the applicants filing in the office in which the application for license is filed, a statement under oath by the owner or lessee of said film that the part or parts described have been eliminated from the film and all copies thereof, a license shall be issued forthwith. But any license obtained upon a false or misleading affidavit or application shall be wholly void ab initio. A copy of such license, or a certificate of its issuance, shall be provided by the commission to accompany each copy or duplicate film so licensed.

The commission shall, without inspecting it, issue for any motion picture film which has been publicly exhibited in the United States prior to the date when this Act is approved, a permit to enter interstate and foreign commerce, only if and when application therefor, in the form and manner prescribed by the commission, is made within sixty days after this Act goes into effect. No fee shall be charged or collected for such permit.

The commission may at any time issue a permit for the entrance into interstate and foreign commerce of any film, portraying current events and not otherwise prohibited by law without inspection thereof, provided that when any application for such permit is made the chairman shall designate three commissioners, of whom a majority shall determine whether the application shall be granted: Provided, also that any permit so granted may be revoked by the concurring votes of any two commissioners upon ten days' notice in writing to the applicant. Thereupon the film may be submitted to the commission for license, as though no permit had ever been granted or revoked.

Any person, firm or corporation desiring a Federal license or permit for interstate or foreign commerce for any film shall first make sworn application in writing in the form and substance prescribed by the commission. Every such application shall immediately be given a serial number, which, except in the cases of films publicly exhibited before and for which applications for permits are required to be made within thirty days after the approval of this Act, shall by the producer or manufacturer be made a permanent part of the principal-title portion of the corresponding film and every copy thereof in such style as the commission shall prescribe.

Within one day of the filing of an application as in Section 6 provided, a time for the submission of the film shall be set, which time shall in no event be more than three days after the date of the filing of the applications. At least one of the commissioners or one of the deputy commissioners shall attend upon and be present throughout the exhibition of the film submitted. The applicant may present such evidence in addition to the film as may be necessary or proper to make clear the purpose and intent of the film. All oral evidence shall be recorded by the commission. The license applied for shall be granted or refused within one day after the hearing.

All motion picture films of a strictly scientific character, intended for use only by the learned professions, shall not be required to be presented to the commission for examination and license, provided that the owner thereof, either personally or by his duly authorized attorney or representative, shall file with the commission a description of such film together with a statement under oath that the said film is not to be exhibited at any private or public place of amusement.

That the commission shall collect from each applicant for a license or a permit, except as otherwise expressly provided in section five of this Act, a license fee of $2 for each one thousand feet or fraction thereof of film and 50 cents for each additional copy thereof, licensed by the commission: Provided, however, that upon the expiration of six months from the date of approval of this Act, and from time to time thereafter, as circumstances warrant, the commission shall revise and fix the fees at such sums as will produce no larger income than is necessary to support the work of the commission, including salaries and all other expenses.

The revocation or cancellation of any license or permit issued shall not entitle the guarantee thereof to the return of any fee paid; but the amount of any permit fee paid shall be credited upon the amount otherwise due for any subsequent license fee for the same film.

All fees received by the commission shall be paid monthly into the Treasury of the United States.

Any applicant for a license shall, in case of refusal, have the right of review by the full commission, whose decision shall be determined by the concurring votes of a majority thereof within five days of the filing of the application for review and submission of the film. On such review the party shall not be limited to the evidence upon which the first refusal was had.

Should a license be refused after such review by the commission the applicant may, at any time within ninety days from the date of such refusal, appeal from the ruling of the commission to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. Such appeal shall be perfected in the following manner: that is to say, a petition verified by the applicant shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the said court, setting forth a description of the film and a complete record of the original application for license, the initial action thereon and the action of the commission on the application for review. The court may, on the hearing of such appeal as a part thereof, attend throughout an exhibition of the film and receive such other evidence as shall be offered by the applicant and by the commission.

No person, firm, or corporation shall carry or transport or cause to be carried or transported, any motion picture film from or into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, unless there is for such film, at the time in full force and effect, a valid license or permit of the Federal Motion Picture Commission, as in this Act specified; Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the carriage or transportation of any film consigned to or by the commission: Provided further, That the provisions of this Act shall not be construed to prevent the carriage or transportation without license or permit, by or for the producer of his own original film, in good faith for any purpose other than for exhibition for hire and before said film shall be wholly or in part copied, reproduced, or in any manner made the subject of duplication.

Any change or alteration in a film after license or permit, except the elimination of a part or except upon written direction of the commission, shall be a violation of this Act, and shall also make immediately void the license or permit therefor.

No motion picture film shall be exhibited in any place of amusement for pay or in connection with any business, either in the District of Columbia or in any territory of the United States or in any place where the local police power is under Federal jurisdiction, unless there is then in full force and effect for such film a license or permit of the Federal Motion Picture Commission.

A violation of any of the provisions of this Act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both, and all films transported, exhibited or changed in violation of the provisions of this Act shall be confiscated.

The commission provided in this Act shall have the power to issue licenses or permits for motion picture films for adults only, and no such film shall be exhibited to children under the age of sixteen years.

This Act shall take effect thirty days after its approval by the President.

Walter K. Hill

WALTER K. HILL, an experienced circus fictionist, has been engaged to create a narrative of show-life, under the title of "Peg o' the Ring," that will soon be presented to clients and readers of the Western Newspaper Union. It will be published in serial form, with every episode so complete in itself that the separate chapters will form a story by themselves—"Peg o' the Ring"—will, indeed, be a story within a story, forming a composite of fascination for young and old.

Walter K. Hill.

The author has had a world of experience with the principal circuses of the United States. His travels have carried him into every state in the Union, his experience has embodied every necessary detail of circus life and environment. Mr. Hill knows a circus like a book, and into "Peg o' the Ring" he will inject the circus spirit and the circus atmosphere in such detail that every reader of the story will know more of circus than they have ever known before.

The opportunity for interesting descriptions that the big circuses present is unlimited. In a traveling community of 1,500 people, comprising the roster of any of the bigger shows, there is every element of human nature that is possible to assemble. The struggles and trials of the circus profession are as great and as humanly interesting as are the joys and sorrows of the people in any community.

Mr. Hill will take advantage of all these opportunities for fictionizing his story of the circus. Collaborating with him will be Joseph Brandt, another writer of experience, who knows circuses and circus life as well as he knows the road to his own door. These two writers will turn out a narrative that will touch every chord of human emotion and thrill with the sureness of excitement that the very thought of circus life inspires in the average American.

This will be no tawdry appeal to the sensationalist; it will be a day-by-day reflection of the inner life of the circus as it passes from town to town. There will be intimate descriptions of the inner workings of a great comercial machine; of the domestic and social side of circus life—and compendium of authentic descriptions and details, compiled in narrative form, to give the reader an illuminating reflex of life with a great and thoroughly typical American institution.

Griffith, His Book

Slanting Perspective Nullifies the Work of Producer.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH contributes to the censorship discussion his personal views on the censoring matter in the shape of "The Rise and Fall of Free Speech in America," which is rather too pretentious a title for the work. Mr. Griffith deals with the censorship of film and the Russian press more exhaustively than he does with the matter suggested by his title. To put it in a nutshell, Mr. Griffith's book views even the matter of film censorship with distorted vision. The keynote is sounded in this paragraph, which does not occur in the running story, but as a side note:

> Suppress "The Clansman" ("The Birth of a Nation") and there is no longer room on the stage for "The Merchant of Venice."

In a word, Mr. Griffith approaches his subject with too strong a bias of personal animosity. His individual resentment shows too strongly to permit any of his arguments to have weight with the reader who has no personal interest either in or against the censorship. He is writing because his own ox is gored; not because his impersonal sense of fair play is outraged, but herein he differs not at all from a host of other writers on either side. He views his subject too large. He makes the wrong approach. His arguments are, for the greater part, not upheld by facts. It is his book, published at his own expense, and therein he is at liberty to say what he will, since free speech is not yet dead, but it is not a book that will bring conviction to the unprejudiced mind; least of all to those newspaper publishers whom he repeatedly threatens with a like annoyance if film censorship continues.

This, with due respect to Mr. Griffith and very many other writers, is tommyrot. There is not a lawmaker in the land who does not know that the press is greater than the politician. Now and then some immature statesman, seeking cheap notoriety, will present a State or National bill curbing the powers of the press, but even he, for all his righteous indignation, does so knowing that the publishers will feel only a mild contempt for his motives and knowing, also that a sufficient number of his confreres will kill the bill, either in committee or on the floor. Newspaper publishers are not afraid of censorship and are not to be scared with the bugaboo. The aid they lend in meeting the film censorship is purely due to a sense of right and not to a fear of an extension of the evil to themselves. Here a great lesson might be learned. Make the motion picture a political power and the pictures will enjoy the same immunity as the press. As Mr. Griffith himself says, "Intelligent opposition to censorship in the beginning would have nipped the evil in the bud." Start now, at any rate.

Clearly the censorship is an invasion of the constitutional rights of the American people, an invasion of the rights of those who make, exhibit and witness film stories, and within the three classes may be comprehended a majority of the citizens of the entire country, but it is absurd to argue that free speech is indeed dead because a single form of expression is temporarily under illegal restraint. In view of the performances of most of these censor boards ridicule and not indignation is the more valuable weapon. Mr. Griffith has said much that is of value. Because of his position in the art, the expression of his opinion is doubly of value. It is to be regretted that he writes too much from the viewpoint of the producer of "The Birth of a Nation" rather than as an artist pleading for the salvation of his art.

Dixon's "Fall of a Nation"

Author Has Found a New Way of Presenting the Vast Sweep of Historical Events Covering Three Hundred Years.

ALTHOUGH the synopsis of Thomas Dixon's historical epic, "The Fall of a Nation," has not been given out, advance descriptions indicate that it blazes the way of revolutionary progress in motion pictures, especially in the prologue, which has almost the importance of an independent work. Dixon's previous "Clansman" scenario, out of which Griffith wrote "The Birth of a Nation," told the long history of slavery days very succinctly. But in the prologue of "The Fall of a Nation" Mr. Dixon undertook the far more gigantic historical task of tracing in a thousand feet of film the progress of the world's struggle twixt liberty and tyranny from 1550 A. D. down to the present.

The successive flashes will show the human aspirations toward freedom culminating in the proud heritage of the American Republic. Neither race nor creed nor form of servitude is spared or omitted in the delineation. Church of England persecution of the Non-conformists; Catholic persecution of the Huguenots by revoking the Edict of Nantes; Russian Greek Church persecution of Jews and Catholics in Poland; the English Catholics' winning of freedom by founding the colony in Maryland; the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers in Massachusetts; the exile of Roger Williams by the Congregationalists to Rhode Island and his friendly welcome by the Indians; the reading of President Monroe's historic message to Congress whereby he made both the Americas nurseries of freedom—these are the links of a strongly welded chain of historic events working up to the big aim. For America is the new home of all the oppressed nationalities and sects, the realization of their dream, and the heritage for which they must fight should the Old World, swollen by the arrogance of recent military conquest, strive to impose its ideals upon us.

"The motion picture," observed Mr. Dixon, who arrived not long ago in New York from Los Angeles with "The Fall of a Nation" film, "is the finest vehicle of historic exposition ever devised. I can teach more history in fifteen minutes of motion pictures than in six months of the library or the class room. It is not necessary to burden the mind with the petty, piffling details of dynasties and kings, of wars and rumors of wars. A single picture and a strong, condensed title, such as that of the Catholic colonization of Maryland or the reading of the Monroe Doctrine message, impress indelibly the great event and its meaning. I have tried to show what America means to us, namely, the polyglot nationalities of which we are composed. A rapid survey of nearly 400 years of history serves the purpose and leads up to the story of 'The Fall of a Nation' proper, which tells what these polyglot peoples did when threatened by the extinction of the national life."

Mr. Dixon added that, mindful of the personal element so essential in popular entertainments, he had interwoven a love story with the main plot. This latter is said to turn at the end on the heroism of American women in coming to the rescue of their country when in the hands of a foreign emperor leagued with traitors within our gates, and in particular with a modern Benedict Arnold, whose love of gold and power and whose foreign financial affiliations have caused him to espouse the imperial side and have made him the Viceroy or Governor-General of "the province of the United States."

Evidently the Dixon story contains new imaginative twists that mark it out strikingly from the ruck of preparedness films. It was staged during the last eight months at and around the Dixon studios at Hollywood, Los Angeles, with Arthur Shirley and Lorraine Huling in the leading roles, the redoubtable Percy Standing as the Benedict Arnold, and C. E. Geldert as the imperial commander. Many of the types of the nationalities, such as the Polish, Italian, etc., were used in the picture. In all, twenty thousand people took part in the battle arrays, mob and conspiracy scenes. A battery of sixteen cameras was employed. The military costumes were all executed from designs of the uniforms now used in Europe and America. New 40-centimeter guns were invented and patented for use in the greater scenes. And meantime, as announced in this paper last week, Victor Herbert was composing the music, which will be in active rehearsal in New York within the next ten days. A production will be made at a first-class Broadway theater in June, and simultaneously another production will be put on at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles. The executive offices are in the Longacre building under the style of the National Drama Corporation.

Review Board Again Sees "Children" Picture

Declares Production Demonstrates Fallacy of Arbitrary Censorship—Three Out of Four of Special Audience Approve Universal Film for Adults.

THE National Board of Review, which in March considered the film of the Universal's "Where Are My Children?" and expressed its disapproval of the picture as a subject for mixed audiences, has again passed upon the production. Sixty out of eighty-one members of representative organizations approved the film for adult showing. The following announcement from the board is self-explanatory:

The film, "Where Are My Children?" was submitted on March 16 to a review committee consisting of eight persons. The result of the discussion emphasized that under certain conditions regarding its exhibition the photoplay might have social value. As a matter of policy, however, the picture was referred to the board of appeal for final action. In the past the National Board has reviewed pictures designed for exhibition before mixed audiences, that is, audiences composed of adults, young people and children. On account of the nature of the theme—the limitation of families—presented by the picture, "Where Are My Children?" the National Board felt that the wisdom of having the film presented to both sexes of young and unmarried people might well be questioned. Adopting a conservative point of view, the board condemned the film for audiences which might include young people and children. On the other hand, the producers state that the photoplay was not designed for young people, and will not be exhibited in theaters where they are allowed to attend. Accordingly, the picture was exhibited at the Globe theater, Forty-sixth street and Broadway, New York, to adults only, with the permission of the local Department of Licenses.

In order to arrive at a well-defined public opinion regarding the film the National Board gave a private review of the picture before a selected audience invited through invitations distributed by such representative groups as the Citizens' Union, Merchants' Association, Bar Association, League for Political Education, American Social Hygiene Association, Society for Sanitary and Moral Prophylaxis, Federation for Child Study, Neighborhood Workers' Association, Economics Club, Drama League, Educational Drama League, and others, and attended also by guests from Philadelphia, Boston and other cities. A ballot was distributed for those present to vote upon the film, with the following result:

Approved for audiences which include young people and children.	34
Disapproved for audiences which include young people and children.	47
Approved for adults.	60
Disapproved for adults.	21

The National Board's attention has also been drawn to the fact that a number of well-known clergymen have indorsed the film for exhibition to adult audiences. It therefore appears from the above tabulation of the ballot that the National Board was wise in refusing to pass the picture for the usual exhibition to mixed audiences, and that the opinion gathered through the private review is favorable to the exhibition of the film for adults only.

The National Board believes, however, that "Where Are My Children?" is the type of picture which demonstrates the fallacy of any attempt to create an arbitrary censorship. It is inevitable that local public opinion will vary widely regarding such exhibitions. Any endeavor to express or enforce one opinion for the whole United States as regards a picture of this character is impossible. The National Board, therefore, places the result of its effort to estimate enlightened public at the disposal of its correspondents, realizing that there is bound to be a wide divergence of opinion regarding the picture on the part of thoughtful people.

ANITA STEWART AT PHILADELPHIA FILM BALL.

Anita Stewart, the beautiful and popular young Vitagraph star, was the principal figure of interest at the big Film Ball held in Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia, on the evening of Tuesday, May 9. Miss Stewart went to Philadelphia for this occasion on the urgent request of her admirers there. She led the grand march and was the guest of honor of the local committee.

Actors' Fund Campaign Finale

Big Benefit Performance at Metropolitan Opera House. Grand Opera Stars to Participate.

CROWNED with such a dazzling diadem of stars as never before adorned any stage on a single occasion, the final public event in behalf of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund will take place on Tuesday, May 16, at the Metropolitan Opera House. It is to be the greatest show ever given for any cause at any time anywhere. The most prominent members of the musical profession will lend the best of their powers to make up a program such as was never before arranged.

This mammoth tribute performance will mark the close of the series of affairs in all parts of the country in the interest of the most unusual and most remarkable undertaking this country has ever seen—the raising of $500,000 in fifteen weeks by the people of a single industry for a single charitable cause.

Since its inception the movement of the motion picture business to collect half of the prospected endowment of that worthiest of all charities, the Actors' Fund, has attracted the greatest amount of attention ever granted a humanitarian undertaking. It is now determined to wind up its career with such a blaze of fireworks as will make the Motion Picture Campaign a landmark in the history of canvasses of this kind.

Through her notable double association with both the films and opera stage, Geraldine Farrar will be the bright particular light of the Metropolitan affair. Miss Farrar will present the second act of "Madame Butterfly," assisted by Signor Scotti. The accompanying orchestra will be conducted by Signor Polacco. Such artists as Mme. Alda, Lucca Botta, Fritz Kreisler and Leopold Godowsky will complete the musical offerings to the vast assemblage that will be present to do the Actors' Fund and the people of the screen honor, and, incidentally, enjoy the greatest entertainment ever devised. It is only necessary to announce that the affair is under the personal direction of Daniel Frohman, the distinguished president of the Fund, to intimate what is to be expected.

At the Garden this week an added feature will be provided in a series of delightful dancers and soloists to render the now famous film song, "Florence Lawrence," which was sold at the Palace for the benefit of the campaign. The following will give attractive renderings of the words and music of the Misses MacDonald and Steiner: Miss Ethel Gilmore, premiere danseuse of the Metropolitan-Canadian Grand Opera Company; Miss Irma Summa, Miss Florence Tappan, the well-known Brooklyn soloist; Miss Helen Coyne, of the Metropolitan Ballet; Garry McGarry, of the Vitagraph Company of America; Miss Alice Fyller, and the Misses Marguerite and Mary McNamara, the charming Newark dancers.

While so much is being done in New York just now to boom the film people's great humanitarian undertaking, the efforts of the rest of the country in the cause must not be forgotten. The Motion Picture Campaign is the truest kind of a national organization. Every community of importance in the country is engaged with might and main in the competition of cities to see which can do the most for the Fund. San Francisco is one of the leaders in the movement and is giving evidence that it intends to stand high on the final roll of honor. Mayor Rolph, of the Golden Gate City, is a member of the honorary executive board of the campaign and honorary chairman of the local branch committee working under the direction of Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the National Executive Committee. A most representative body has been gathered together for this local organization. It is composed as follows: Chairman, Herman Wobber; secretary, Mark M. Leichter; director of publicity, Louis Levy; Irving Ackerman, Morris Meyerfeld, Sid Grauman, Alexander A. Beyfus, John Partington, C. Langley, Eugene Roth, Sam Harris, Joseph Levin, Ralph Pincus, M. J. Getz, George Davis, Homer Curran, J. J. Cluxton, Sam Levin, Sam Gordon, Thomas O'Day, Mark A. Lasky, Selby Openheimer, William Citron, Ralph Clark, Louis Reichert, R. Quive, H. H. Hicks, F. K. Stout, M. L. Markowitz, H. W. Ohive, R. S. Simpson, H. W. Stebbins and Sam Loverich. Great things are expected of San Francisco and its organization when the final tally is made up.

VITAGRAPH HAS NEW LEADING MAN.

Rollin S. Sturgeon, the director-general of the Vitagraph company's western studios, is wearing a smile that won't come off and his chest measure has increased three inches. This is the effect and the cause is the arrival of a little son whose voice, the proud father declares, has the self-same tones of protest and authority which were so noticeable in Booth and Kemble when they were infants.

The potential Vitagraph leading man and Mrs. Sturgeon are doing well and father and mother will have to hire a special secretary to answer all the notes of congratulation being sent. Mr. Sturgeon is very popular in the Los Angeles film colony.

Essanay June Releases

Will Have Many Good Short Length Subjects on General Film Program.

ESSANAY is issuing an unusual number of exceptionally good short releases for the month of June. It also has two strong multiple reel feature subjects for that month. The announcement of the releases has just been made by George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay company.

Among the strong three-reel releases are "Our People," featuring Bryant Washburn and Gertrude Glover; "Fool's Gold," featuring Darwin Karr and Nell Craig; "The Promised Land," and "The Little Volunteer," featuring Joyce Fair, the 11-year-old star, who made such a hit in "The Little Samaritan."

Among the two-reel releases are "Orphan Joyce," featuring Joyce Fair; "Putting It Over," featuring Marguerite Clayton and Harry Beaumont; a reissue of "The Girl at the Curtain," and "The Voice in the Wilderness," both featuring Francis X. Bushman.

The one reel releases include Canimated Nooz No. 11, Wallace A. Carlson's cartoon drawings on news events of the day; a sketch book of Berlin by Vernon Howe Bailey, showing all the points of interest in the German capital, including the Kaiser's Palace, the Kaiser himself and his special bodyguard; and one of George Ade's famous fables, that of "The Undecided Brunette."

The multiple reel features include "That Sort" and "According to the Code." In "That Sort" scores of scenes show action at Monte Carlo, in the Riveria, on the Spa, and mid-ocean scenes taken on the liner Imperator. These scenes are actual motion picture photographs, taken, not of course, at the present time for this picture, but by Charles J. Brabin a few month's prior to the breakout of the European war. Mr. Brabin, who directed "That Sort," made a tour of the continent shortly before the war broke out, making motion pictures of all these scenes. He only left Europe at the outbreak of the war.

These scenes are wonderful in their spectacular effect and so interwoven with the picture that they form a perfect continuity. This photoplay features Warda Howard with Ernest Maupain, Duncan McRae, John Lorenz and Betty Brown.

The other multiple reel feature is "According to the Code," a drama which takes place in both the Civil War period and the present time. This features Lewis S. Stone, the masculine lead in "The Havoc," and a well known speaking stage star, and Marguerite Clayton, one of Essanay's leading women. The part covering the Civil War period was taken in the exact locations in which the action took place. E. H. Calvert, the director of the play, took a company of players to Chattanooga, Tenn., and from there they went back into the Tennessee range of mountains, taking scenes on Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Chickamauga Park, Signal Mountain, and other famous battlegrounds of the South.

The northern scenes were made in New York City and in Chicago.

BERNSTEIN RESIGNS.

Isadore Bernstein, director general of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation since the organization of that concern and producing manager of World Film since the re-organization of the two companies, resigned his position with the latter company this week, to take effect immediately. It was upon the advice of his physician that Bernstein gives up his place and retires for the time being, at least, to his farm at Saddle River, New Jersey.

Bernstein, justly famous as the conceiver and builder of Universal City, has been an exceptionally busy man at the various World and Equitable studios. Refusing assistance, insisting upon giving his own attention to every detail assigned him by the company, he will hie himself to the farm, there to consider a number of offers he has received since rumor stated he was leaving World Film.

Mr. Bernstein carries the best wishes of the entire organization with him. He has been indefatigable and untiring. Night and day Bernie has gone along, burning the candle—until this forced rest is taken and he gets a chance to regain some of his old-time vitality and energy.

REEL PROGRAMS FOR SCHOOLS.

Outline of a Proposed Co-operative Plan of Educational Film Service on an Economical Basis.

By Prof. Hardin Lucas.

AMONG the characteristics of reel programs planned for use in schools should be variety and balance. These features are, in fact, made necessary by the range of ages usually represented in the school assembly. Moreover, even the pupils in a given school grade are always studying along more than one line of interest, and of course the film program should not fail to render its helpful service to any department of studious effort that can be made more effective by means of reel lessons.

Considerations of cost also argue for varied and balanced programs. Certain factors of expense seem to be inherent that thousand foot standard reels will ever be as cheap as in the use of films. Apparently we should entertain no hope phonograph discs, nor can they be made of material equally durable. Quite the contrary. The ordinary celluloid of which most films are made is a perishable product; the non-inflammable acetate of cellulose doubly so. As they gradually dry out they are increasingly fragile. Consequently reels can be used for a greater total number of runs if kept in almost continuous circulation while still in their months of infancy, so to speak. When we realize that the cost of raw celluloid per thousand feet is about forty dollars and that the actual wear of this material involves an expense of nearly one cent for each minute of actual running, we are forced to the conclusion that—with other inevitable expenses added—an assembly of considerable size is absolutely necessary if the per-pupil-per-year cost is to be kept within reasonable figures. It all becomes a matter of simple arithmetic.

If about a quarter of a million pupils can be assembled in groups of about seven hundred and fifty and at hours and places so ordered that a minimum of time will be lost in transportation of films from station to station, the item of rental on forty weekly programs of five educational reels each can be fixed at just ten cents per pupil—yes, only ten cents apiece for the entire school year series of forty! Surely there is not a city of even only five thousand people than cannot muster itself in under such a banner.

Upon the supposition, therefore, that for the sake of low per capita cost the pupils are to be assembled in groups of at least a few hundred, the reel programs for schools that take advantage of the opportunity to secure economical educational picture service under my co-operative plan will be both varied and balanced. For example, a three reel drama based on literature or history; a travel, nature, science, or health reel; and an industrial, civic, sports or miscellaneous reel. Perhaps, also, if funds permit, a short wholesome comedy. As a concrete illustration: Dickens's "Tale of Two Cities" (3); "Trip Thru Japan" (1); "Cotton Industry" (1). The entire series of forty weekly programs will not be finally arranged until the number of runs contracted for by subscribing members shall warrant the research and labor required. Suffice it now to state that practically all of the standard negatives in existence (except, of course, those whose positives are still in active circulation among theaters) have been pledged to me as available sources of fresh positives to be printed specially for this Educational Picture Service.

It should be added that each program will be routed for the entire circuit in advance, and thus each member will know before the beginning of the school year precisely which reels will be available for his use during each of the forty weeks. This information, together with the series of pedagogical leaflets containing, as explained in my last article, suggestions, reading references and other helps, will enable educators to plan many excellent correlations between other school activities and the reel lessons.

It is even possible that specialized yearly programs may be arranged to fit the special needs and interests of any given type of institution—high schools, normal schools, Y. M. C. A.'s, or any other species of non-commercial members—provided only that their purchase of reel-runs reaches the necessary aggregate. Obviously the specialized reel program cannot run ahead of a tangible co-operating clientele. Moreover, and also obviously, the best way to move toward a yearly program specially selected for your particular needs is to subscribe for a general, varied, balanced series without delay. Write me for a detailed subscription contract blank.

Reel Criticisms Invited.

Educationists everywhere are invited to write to this department expressions of their views as to whether certain films they may name are fit or unfit for use in connection with regular school studies. I shall be glad to publish extracts from such communications as may be relevant to topics selected for treatment here. Your name, address, and present or last school connection should be stated, but same will not be published if you expressly so request.

Although I view every one of the confessedly educational reels as currently released by the various producers, there may appear without my notice occasionally a good feature or even a comedy containing parts, at least, that might be desirable for school use later. Please assist me in calling to the attention of other educationists any reels likely to interest them because of possible uses in school work. If you care for my views on any film you have not yet seen, just write me the title, producer, and approximate date of release and I may be able to view it and provide a criticism very shortly.

If you know of any particularly effective methods of utilizing reel programs or single reels in harmony with the best principles of modern educational theory and practice, send them in for publication so that others may try them out and report their results. How many schools are there, I wonder, in which not mere picture shows but definitely instructional exercises with the aid of motion-pictures have already been conducted. The problems of reel pedagogy do not appear to have been isolated for scientific investigation. Do they deserve to be?

Standard Projectors in Universities.

An advertiser on another page states that he can supply the addresses of nearly 25,000 picture theaters, but nobody claims to know yet just how many non-commercial institutions are equipped with standard projectors. I shall welcome specific information that will help me to publish installments of such a list.

Among our universities and colleges the following are known to have procured machines. Makes indicated, in case of our advertisers, by letters: A, Atlas; B, Baird; E, Edison; M, Motiograph; Pp, Portoscope; Pw, Powers; St, Standard; Sx, Simplex.

Harvard University (Pw); Berea College, Ky. (Pw); University of Wisconsin; University of Nebraska (Pw); Pennsylvania State College (Pw); Iowa State Teachers' College (Pw); Cornell University (Pw); University of Cincinnati; St Francis Xavier College, N. Y. (Pw); Belmont Abbey College, N. C. (Pw); St. Francis College, Pa. (Pw); Georgia State College of Agriculture (Pw); St. Peter's College, N. J. (Pw).

Lists of normal schools, high schools, etc., will also be published, with additions to each as information is received. When it is considered that projectors for standard film can now be had at prices ranging from about one hundred and twenty-five dollars up to six hundred, it would seem that no school need be without its own motion-picture machine any longer. If prospective purchasers will write me briefly as to size of hall and distance between projector and screen, mentioning also limits as to cost, I shall gladly supply their addresses to makers of machines likely to fall within or near their requirements.

A SCHOOL CONTEST.

Prize Winning Moving Picture Essays of Pupils of the City High School of Troy New York.

By the Rev. W. H. Jackson.

THE city of Troy, N. Y., is to be commended for presenting to us the good example of the best use of the educational pictures in their local schools. Nowhere, as far as we know, have better uses been made of the moving pictures together with a most wise direction of the scholars in the study of the same; here at least fault finding and pleas for censorship, have not been the one cry of the authorities. While we do not know if those responsible for these contests are readers of the Moving Picture Educator, we rather suspect that they are, because this kind of use of the pictures has been so frequently advocated by us that it becomes a rare pleasure for us to give a full notice of this unique contest, so that it may be more widely known, and that, in other towns and schools, a similar series of contests may be held. This is not only a method of trying to find the good in pictures, but it goes further, in that it turns that good to the most profitable account, with the addition of a reward to those who prove themselves most benefited thereby. Again the value of composition writing is given an impetus in the local schools by these contests, although it is distinctly stated that this is a secondary object, it is nevertheless valuable and important. The main object of the competition as given, "The ability to see with understanding, and to tell what is seen," certainly gets at the heart of the educational purpose and the value of the moving picture. We herewith publish a copy of the conditions of the Troy contest, together with the prize answers of two young people, in the hope that they may stimulate others to follow the example. Will not those readers who can, in the interest of educational pictures, bring this to the notice of those to whom it will be helpful; thereby spreading the growing importance of the right and best use of the moving pictures among the young and in the schools?

The following prize essays on the picture entitled "The Baby Fortune Hunters" is reprinted to give an idea of the way in which young people may express their powers of perception and grasp of the purpose of the story of the picture.

MOTION-PICTURE ESSAY CONTEST

FOR

Public School Pupils of Troy

The Troy Times Art Section offers two prizes each week for the best essays written by pupils of the public schools of Troy telling the story of the feature picture shown each Saturday in the educational motion-picture performances held in the Central School auditorium under the direction of the Troy Parent-Teacher Association.

This contest has received the endorsement of the school authorities of the city and the Motion-Picture Committee of the Parent-Teacher Association. The contest is intended to develop the perception and quicken the interest of the hundreds of Troy boys and girls who attend and enjoy these motion pictures each Saturday.

This is not a contest in grammar or literary skill, but in ability to see with understanding and tell what is seen.

The stories of the motion-picture plays submitted will all be read by a competent committee of unbiased judges who will award the prizes on the merits of the essays, not as literary efforts, but on the ability shown by the young writers to grasp the important points of the pictured story and to describe what they have seen, simply and accurately. The contest is open to all pupils up to and including the eighth grade. The conditions do not bar the younger pupils, who may be able to see, and tell what they see, just as well as their somewhat older schoolmates. The pupils who tell the story of the play best in the opinion of the judges will get the prizes.

Rules of Contest

1—All pupils of the public schools of Troy up to and including the eighth grade are eligible to compete. The schools designated are: Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20 and the Central Grammar School.

2—The story essay must be about the particular feature motion picture, shown at the Central School auditorium each Saturday, which is selected and announced for that week.

3—The story must not contain more than 500 words. Length will not count, however, in making the awards.

4—Write on one side of the paper only and number the pages.

5—The essay entire must be the work of the pupil, solely and unassisted, and the signing of it by the contestant will be taken as a guarantee that this rule has been complied with. Any pupil known to receive assistance in the preparation of the essay will be barred from receiving prizes.

6—A pupil once awarded a FIRST prize will not be eligible to compete again during the season.

7—Each essay must be signed by the pupil who wrote it with the name, home address, age, grade and school, and must also have the signature of the teacher or Principal of the school.

8—The manuscript must be mailed in a sealed stamped envelope, not later than the next Wednesday night following the Saturday on which the picture is shown, to the

FIRST PRIZE ESSAY.

The story of the motion pictures of "The Baby Fortune-Hunters," which is awarded first prize, was written by Miss Alice Kautz, a thirteen-year-old pupil of the Eighth Grade of School No. 16, and is as follows:

The first picture showed a peasant's hut of Europe. In front of it are many sheep, geese and other animals. There is also a table and two benches in front of the hut. Sitting on the benches, one on each side of the table, are two children; the larger a boy, the smaller a girl. They are both discontented, or certainly look so. A man and woman come out of the hut with some farming implements on their shoulders. They stand and smile at the children, but the babies take no notice of them; even when they stoop down in front of them, they merely turn their heads. The mother and father go off to their work in the fields.

The two babies, for such they really are, decide to run away to seek their fortunes. They embrace one another and go into the house, which is very rude and bare. They put their clothes in bundles and put on frocks and hats. They tie the bundles to stout sticks and prepare to leave home. They tiptoe to the window and the boy climbs up and drops the bundles out of the window. He jumps down and helps his sister. They take their bundles and go down a hill, turn a corner and go through a gate onto a highway. They walk along the road till they reach a village. They enter a yard and knock at a door, which is opened by a man. The boy manfully tells him "We want work!" The man is much amused and laughs heartily, but the children are in dead earnest. Soon a woman, apparently his wife, comes up and he tells her. She smiles and they agree to take the children.

We next saw the man harnessing a yoke of oxen to a plow, and the boy and girl appear. The boy shakes hands with the man and the woman greets the little girl. The boy takes the plow and the girl a stick by which she guides the oxen. The man and woman laugh at the two babies, who are going to the field which they are to plow and sow with grain. Upon reaching the field the boy had a hard time to manage the plow and the little girl is obliged to run in order to keep ahead of the plodding oxen, but at last, to my astonishment, the field is plowed and they sow the seed broadcast.

In the meantime two officers of the law are sent to interfere with the hiring of such young children. The woman answers their knock and takes them to the children. The men are much amused when they see the little tots industriously threshing grain with flails. The children look up, and when the boy sees the men, he puts his arm protectingly around his sister. The men take them back to the house, and the man and woman give them a bag of money, which the boy puts in his blouse. The people bid them goodby and seem sorry to see them go. The officers take them back home and the boy runs to his mother, the girl to her father; then they change, the girl going to her mother with whom she stays. The parents are very glad to get them back and they all sit at a sort of table in front of the hut. The boy takes the bag from his blouse and says proudly, "We have made our fortune."

SECOND PRIZE ESSAY.

The second prize is awarded to Miss Clara Otto, aged eleven years, a Seventh Grade pupil of School No. 14, for the following story of the pictures:

In the first picture there were two children sitting at a table outside a hut. They look discontented. Their mother and father come out of the house and try to get the children to go to the fields with them, but they pay no attention to them. Their mother and father go away with their farming implements. When they are gone the boy tells the girl his plan. They go into the house and get ready to go away. He puts on her dress and they put on their hats, take their bundles, climb out of a window and go along the highway. At last they come to a large house. The boy knocks at the door and a man comes out. The boy, pointing to his sister, says: "We want work." Then the man's wife comes along. He tells her and they take the children to their home.

The next picture shows the oxen hitched to a plow. The boy comes with a bag of seed. The girl takes a long pole and steers the oxen while the boy steers the plow. As they go the man and woman begin to laugh. The children go up and down along the field. Then the oxen are in the background and they are going along scattering the seed.

In the next picture two officers come and ask about the two little children. The lady points into the distance, then takes the officers there. The two children are threshing grain with flails. She calls them and the children stop, come up to the lady and the two men and take off their hats. Then they go back to the house. The lady goes into the house and brings out a bag of money. She shows it to them. Then the lady ties it up and puts it into the boy's waist. The children are crying and pay little attention to her. Then she kisses them good-bye. The officers put handcuffs on the children and take them home to their parents. When they reach the children's home the officers take the handcuffs off and they run to their parents, who are eating. Then the boy says, "We have made our fortune." He takes the bag of money from his blouse and shows it to his parents. Then he opens it and shows them its contents, which I think all enjoyed.

Spokes From the Hub

By Marion Howard.

IF asked to submit a list of very high class plays for children and adults alike, I'd place "Little Mary Sunshine" way up, for it is one of the best of this season's offerings and reflects credit on the Pathe folks and also on the Fenway theater for producing it. Reviewers will tell the story better than I, but it is the little things in this play that count, and one is the absolute naturalness of the tiny star, Marie Osborne, a mere baby; another the wonderful trained bear put through so many stunts by the tiny star; still another the artistic work of Henry King, the lead, and who directed its every detail. "I bet that man is a father, for the tenderness shown the baby is so natural," said my companion, who has a baby the age of little Marie. Anyhow, we went twice to see the play, and I hope every theater will show it. Then we were treated to some good work on the part of Andrew Arbuckle, who was mistaken by many there for his brother, Macklyn, so strong is the resemblance. The Drews' "System Is Everything" went well. Among the servants whom the system-mad husband interviewed we noticed Katherine Franek, the woman spy in "The Battle Cry of Peace," and her get up (in rig) was some sight. She is given a "fat" line which is sure to provoke laughter. Another treat on the bill was "The Devil, the Servant and the Man," a Selig three-reel offering, capitally done, especially the outdoor scenes, so well photographed amid mountainous snow. Again does the little child figure delightfully.

Score another for the Gold Rooster in "The Woman's Law," put on for three days at our Fenway. Florence Reed is so favorably known in the Hub that her name is sufficient to draw and she is well fitted for such roles. You know the story of the picture, but do you appreciate the remarkably clear impersonation by Duncan McRae of two distinct types of men, and what a double exposure that was! I've seen few pictures to compare with the details in this one, especially in the house interiors and that dear boy in the scenes with his supposed father.

On the same program we had a reissue of "The Three Wise Men." The house program stated that it was the "greatest three-part picture ever produced," and so we expected much. Truly it is reverently done, and daringly, a splendid picture for Christmas or Easter. Then, too, it pictures clearly the manger scene wtih a tiny baby holding up its chubby hand. One or two features stand out—the three men on camels, always in action, either in silhouette or going toward the star. Another is the crucifixion, a tableau most impressive. The heroine, Bessie Eyton, a Salvation Army lass, went about doing good, even entering a cabaret scene just before midnight on Christmas Eve, where she told the story all have heard at our mother's knee. It struck home tellingly with the degenerate, whose victim she had taken in and ministered to when her child was born. It surely has a lesson for any theatergoer, and the uniting of two lost souls at the end caused many moistened eyes. Churches might with profit utilize this Selig picture, for it speaks louder than any words and is convincing.

I have seen of late two other remarkable pictures put on by the Metro, "Her Great Price," with Mabel Taliaferro as the star, supported by Henry Mortimer and other equally good players. There was a "Trilby" atmosphere at the outset with the three young artists and their protege who thought herself a failure. The play progresses to the very last with no suspicion of the real ending. As in the play, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," the climax came suddenly, and the dear young fans at the matinee heaved sighs of relief that little Mabel did not really commit suicide. Equally high on the list of great plays is "The Wall Between," showing Francis Bushman at his very best. You have all read about it ere this, and isn't it a good expose of the snobbery that sometimes exists in high places? I liked especially the title showing a pictured wall, a sort of demarkation line between gold lace and the privates in the ranks. Then, too, nothing has been written about the first picture, the coming to the front of the screen of a procession headed by three men, illustrating the famous picture, "Yankee Doodle," and behind them the Betsy Ross flag of '76. This got a big hand. Such a picture inspires the youth and is a lesson in rising superior to snobbery and the maintenance of dignity which makes the real soldier and the man. It has a pleasing story and is highly commended for the youth to see. Miss Bayne's task is an easy one in this picture and as usual she makes good.

Well, "The Soul Market" is one big film sure to take, and what a well balanced company the Metros have here! Arthur Hoops and Wilmuth Merkyl certainly do fine work each in his line and so well worth while. What I like about these films is the absence of anything to offend the most critical in plot or working out. Mme. Petrova is a treat to the eye ever. In this we have a dream during which we see her auto go over the precipice. Then when she awoke there were audible sighs of relief on all sides. These films certainly do grip one tremendously.

It is good to note the fine screen dramatization of Eleanor Abbott's "Molly Make-Believe," put on by the Famous Players with that favorite star, Marguerite Clark, as the heroine. It has novel features to interest young and old and is so well photographed. Thanks, also, to the Paramount for "The Eternal Grind," about which I would like much space, for it is so intensely human and so well done by "Little Mary." It served to pack two of the largest houses here and could run much longer. This sort of play should be repeated often for its lesson and its sanity in showing up conditions confronting thousands in various states. There were some quite inconsistent features of a melodramatic nature which might with profit be cut, such as the scene between the heroine and her sister's seducer. It is a mistake to introduce the sex problems in any Pickford or Clark reels. It jars on one's sense of the fitness of things in connection with these clean-cut, natural young stars. I am voicing the sentiment expressed even by old timers on this one point.

"Peggy" is all right so far as Billie Burke goes, and didn't they give her a stunning send off in California according to the first pictures in the play! I think it was too bad in the author to marry her off to that prig of a Scotch minister. A sequel is due us to see how she managed him and if he was converted to her merry views of life. He was a good-looker, and for a moment we thought it was Gillette masquerading under another name. The play is full of bits of brilliancy and novelty and the music, too, was most appropriately rendered by the Fenway symphony orchestra. We liked Peggy in her semi-pajamas (for the upper part was a "nighty" top, not a jacket), but best of all the very naturalness of Miss Burke was what impressed all in that crowded house. It was some sight when she arrived in Uncle's presence at the church door on the Sabbath Day after frightening the entire population (including animals) in her race-about, regardless of speed laws. All should see this picture for the photography and types presented, to say nothing of the rain scenes and the pictured fairy tales. It is human all through. A figure to stand out clearly was Peggy's Scotch aunt, so in contrast to the village cats of women.

"The Heart of Nora Flynn," done by Marie Doro and her new husband, Elliott Dexter, showed the former in an entirely new character; the two children were a delight. I hope the producers will continue to give us children and animals in the pictures, for they give such a human touch in the home life. The nursery scenes in this picture caused a broad smile all over the house, which was crowded as usual, for the Park has a very large following. Lotta Crabtree, the owner, goes to all the plays even away from her theater.

We are to have "Ramona" at the Colonial theater in May, the earlier the better, and all anticipate a treat. Helen Hunt Jackson, the author of the book, was widely known here, and the literary set will turn out en masse for this masterpiece (according to all we hear).

"Well, Bushman and Bayne will make a dandy pair as Romeo and Juliet," said an enthusiast on Shakespeare after reading of the coming release by the Metro. We hear that the rehearsals began last August and I predict this picture will be a strong feature in the tercentenary celebration so countrywide and will draw tremendously.

"The Ne'er Do Well" has been seen and admired here. We appreciated the Panama Canal scenes and the finished work of Kathlyn Williams. In the husband we recognized our old friend, H. Gittus Lonsdale, billed as Henry, and in another reel Harry. He came to the Hub years ago in support of the late E. S. Willard and was his understudy. He liked us and remained in this country. He supported the late Richard Mansfield one season and was a member for a while of the old Museum stock company. Being gifted musically he appeared in a number of light operas, and while living here went about socially. He is the "ex-hubby" of Alice Lonnon, the English actress.

A party of us, including President Mayer of the American Feature Films and Manager Soriero of the Park theater and others were invited to a run-off of the V-L-S-E office the other night to see "God's Country and the Woman," reviewed in these columns. It did not seem credible that the scenery was not truly Canadian, but actually done in California, which is truly God's Country. The wolf dogs must have been imported from Alaska, where they are used so extensively. Nell Shipman gave great pleasure through her artistic impersonation of the heroine. The sudden injection of a baby was quite a "pill to swallow" at first and somehow it might have been introduced differently without the sex attachment—but there might not have been that happy ending.

Vernon Howe Bailey's picture book is taking here and we had a treat in seeing Paris through his pencil drawing, and done so well that those of us familiar with the city could at once tell the particular building he was making. I was sorry he did not show Napoleon's Tomb in the Invalides, or the Venus de Milo in the Louvre, but we hope for interior scenes later.

I say amen to the amendment on the final censorship leader, for now we see the word "Review" substituted. I'd go farther on a secondary amendment and strike out the entire wording. Why boards of anything? The intelligent public is all-sufficient.

M. J. C. Kornblum

M. J. C. KORNBLUM is one of the youngest film men, not only in western Pennsylvania but probably in the United States. He was born in Pittsburgh in 1885, received a common and high school education and then plunged at once into newspaper work. He earned his journalistic spurs on the Pittsburgh Press where he was quickly promoted to the position of assistant sporting editor. Later he joined the staff of the Pittsburgh Leader as a full-fledged sporting editor and for some time past he has been connected with the Rowland & Clark theaters as advertising manager. Mr. Kornblum is corresponding secretary of the Screen Club and has earned the esteem and gratitude of the film men of western Pennsylvania by the prominent and successful part he has taken in the fight now being waged against censorship.

JANET PRIEST JOINS METRO PUBLICITY STAFF.

Janet Priest, a magazine writer and dramatic critic of national reputation, and formerly identified with the speaking stage in several notable productions, has accepted a position with the Pictures Magazine, and will write special articles on Metro stars and productions for that publication. In addition to her special stories Miss Priest will write each week a fiction story adapted from a five-reel screen feature. Miss Priest was born in Maine, but removed to Minnesota with her parents when she was four years old. She was graduated from the University of Minnesota with the degree of Bachelor of Literature.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY CHANGES.

The General Film Company announces several transfers and promotions of their employes as follows: T. Y. Henry, of the Salt Lake City office, assigned to management of Denver branch; W. H. Cree, formerly manager at Denver, has been transferred to Los Angeles in the same capacity; W. H. Hepburn, who was formerly an assistant in the Los Angeles office, will take charge of the Salt Lake City office.

BRITISH NOTES

DETAILS of the working and administration of the new admission tax to motion picture theaters, which becomes operative on May 1st next, are now available and their publication removes most, if not all, the anticipated difficulties. Total exemption from the tax is, for instance, to be conceded to children's performances where the charge for admission does not exceed one penny and to performances where the entire proceeds are for some charitable purpose. The importance of the former of these concessions can be gauged from the fact that most of our suburban and country exhibitors hold matinees on Saturdays and holidays expressly for the kiddies, to which the principal charge is the modest penny. If the tax had applied to these it would on its minimum scale have involved a 50 per cent increase in admission charges. As stated last week, the impost is graduated from one halfpenny to one shilling upon admissions between twopence and twelve shillings and sixpence, with additional increases upon higher values at the rate of one shilling for every ten. The exact taxes as they will affect the motion picture theaters are announced as follows:

Upon admissions not exceeding twopence	½d.
Upon admissions over twopence but not exceeding sixpence	1d.
Upon admissions over sixpence but not exceeding half a crown	2d.
Upon admissions over half a crown but not exceeding one crown	3d.
Upon admissions over one crown but not exceeding seven shillings and sixpense	6d.
Upon admissions over seven shillings and sixpence but not exceeding twelve shillings and sixpence	1/

Upon admissions over twelve shillings and sixpence an additional 10 per cent.

The tax will be collected by one of three methods, from which the exhibitor will presumably make his own choice. Either by the issue to patrons of special tickets bearing over the admission price an embossed war stamp of the necessary amount; by the fixing of adhesive stamps to surcharge an ordinary ticket to the amount of the tax, and by automatic registration barriers. In the case of the two first mentioned expedients the necessary embossed tickets and adhesive stamps are already being issued to exhibitors from the Inland Revenue officials for the different monetary denominations along with similar stamped tickets for transfers from one part of the hall to another. These have to be paid for at face value by exhibitors at the time of issue.

The London exporters of second-hand films, and there is now quite a community, are being inconvenienced in their business through the State restriction of celluloid export to such a degree that not a few of them appear to think the effect of the legislation will be to drive them entirely out of business. Two or three leading American houses have recently copyrighted their output in countries to which second-hand stock is extensively shipped, and from this certain exporters infer that American business motives are behind the new exportation orders. It is now settled that film to be exported must be first examined and sealed by he British Board of Film Censors, which is in this matter acting in conjunction with the Government Department. Before film can be exported at all a general license to export has to be obtained from the B. B. of F. C. and then each consignment after examination will be sealed and passed by the same board before proceeding to the port of shipment. The general license is sufficient for shipments to the colonies and allied countries, but for Denmark, Norway, Greece, Holland, Switzerland and Sweden special licenses, supplemented by a guarantee from the purchaser that the films will not be re-exported, are required.

Particulars of the constitution of the Fox Film Co., Ltd., as filed at Somerset House (registry of joint stock companies) show that the registered share capital of the British concern handling Fox productions is limited to £2,000 in shares of one pound each. This is probably on account of the Treasury restrictions upon the formation of new companies. The only persons mentioned so far as directors are William Fox and Ernest Reed (manager). W. A. Fenning, the founder of the exchange of that name, has been appointed town manager of the Fox Co.

Children's Matinees.

HAVE you given real thought to the subject of Children's Matinees? It is worth thinking about. The Majestic theatre, Cleveland, offers some interesting figures. They worked with a committee of men and women who were interested in child welfare and gave a portion of their receipts to ten local societies. In the course of these ten morning performances 5,741 tickets were sold through the box office and 18,210 through the efforts of the societies, a total of 23,951, representing total cash receipts of $1,197.55 and a prestige such as no other house in the city possesses. Of the two the latter is the greater asset. For one performance, the last of the series, 5,700 tickets were sold. The series has been brought to an end, but now is just the time to run these special matinees and to prepare for a series of special summer performances. It is the most practical way of combating the proposition that all pictures must be censored down to the intelligence of a child of twelve and it will prove, as can be proven in no other way, that the pictures are adapted to all.

Along the same lines the United Film Service, of Memphis, Tenn., sends in the names of five houses, the Comus, Tupelo, Miss.; Majestic, Grenanda, Miss.; and Majestic, Memphis, using Saturday shows and the Wigwam, Muskogee, Okla., and the Pastime, Carbon Hill, Ala., offering Friday performances. Cain and Troy, of the Comus, are quoted as saying:

> We found that the Special Children's and Ladies' Matinees are a great deal more successful than we anticipated, and it seems that we are destined to make a big thing out of it.

Get in line, and be the first in line in your town. It is not merely that features are unfit, morally, to be shown the children. Parents want light programs that will not tire the youngsters. Our own small son was taken to a Kid matinee the other day and came home delighted. A week later he was taken to a five-reel show and disgraced himself. There was nothing in the dramatic society play to interest his active mind. It is here more than in its effect on the censorship question that the child matinee will win friends. Mothers will appreciate the proper sort of program; one that is light and lively.

Stylish.

"Royal Photoplays" is the title of the program of the Royal, Calumet, Mich. It is 4½ by 6 and goes into a special envelope with one fold. It does little more than give an intelligent resume of the program for the week with one small display ad for a feature. It is printed on a good quality paper, and through its treatment and general style has almost the intimacy of a letter personally written. The first issue carries this very much-appreciated notice:

> You probably wonder how we know when a picture is good or bad. Well, the reviews used in this issue of Royal Photoplays are taken from the ones published in the Moving Picture World, and represent the ideas of experienced critics, uncontrolled by any influence. We have read the Moving Picture World reviews for some years now and have found that they write truthfully and fearlessly. Many others are passed as "fair," and when a picture is called good, it is good.

Most managers find that this paper gives a clean-cut review of a film; one that is to be relied upon.

Udells.

Dave Udell, of the Majestic, Paxton, Ill., sends in some more of his snappy advertising (that will be given later) and a letter which reads:

> The paper napkin on "The Battle Cry of Peace" is a true friend. I gave them to every hotel, restaurant and club, etc., all over the nearby country, and the effect was wonderful. You see my prices were large, too large for a town of 3,200, but I got by all right in spite of March weather. We showed "The Battle Cry of Peace" here in both our houses for two days to 1,500 people. Is that good enough for March—with cold, bad weather? Along with the napkin I hired the Paxton Band of twenty pieces to play on the streets, gave small U. S. flags to all the children and used a very good augmented orchestra, During the peace conference where the title read: "We will now sing 'I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier,'" I had a chorus in the wings sing the song. I opened the show with a tableau representing the Statue of Liberty, while the chorus sang "America."
> Now comes "Excuse Me." In the first place it is a very pleasant comedy and has wonderful advertising possibilities. I had 1,000 white placards, one foot square, printed in black, with the words "Excuse Me." These cards were hung on everybody's door knob two weeks before the show. Three days later I used the cards with "Excuse Me Again," in the same manner. This created a wonderful line of talk. One week before the show I used the cards again with "'Excuse Me' Tuesday," then started to advertise the show.
> Might say that this has been the toughest winter that I ever went up against. Business has been good, nevertheless. You might tell some of the boys, who are expecting to quit the game, that the successful moving picture manager five years from now will be considered the world's greatest professional man. It is serious work, believe me, and takes a six-cylinder brain.

That "Excuse Me" is particularly good. The napkin is the usual Japanese stuff with a patriotic border and a gilt edge in one corner. It is printed up with an advertisement for the film and then folded so that this corner may be turned down to show on top. It is showy to a degree and sounds just the right note of hurrah that should be adopted in handling the Vitagraph release.

And Amen to that last paragraph. The man who is around here five years from now is going to be to the good, provided he sticks the five years. The day of the accident is over. To make money you must know how to manage a theater. The five-year man is going to know he has been through something, but he is going to know a lot more than that.

To Be Expected.

We would be surprised to find Joe Vion sending out poor printing. We've known Joe since the days he was thinking of giving up the agency business and selling hair restorer. We tried two bottles of the restorer and know that he did well to get interested in motion pictures instead. It's a good depliatory, but as a hair restorer it left something to be desired. But Joe is a real theatrical manager and his program for the Crescent in the Bronx (which is part of New York) is a mighty pretty job. If he would set the inside as a single page, it would be even prettier, because he could then set the program as a whole and not in two parts, and get a better make-up; but look at it as it stands and you'll admit it is different. It might be noted that a three and four-day run with a change of comedy each day is something out of the ordinary. Note, too, the shaded Cheltenham used as heads for the items. It is large and yet does not distract from the bold type of the program announcement. The back page carries a beautifully-printed cut and the front is a drawn design. It is all printed in a nice photo brown on good white paper by a printer who knows his business. It is one of those programs where you can tell from the outside that it announces a good program because a man who gets out a good job like that does as good a job on his program selection. But he is liable to be thrown out of the program publishers' association on that cut. It is not only suited to the paper used, but it has apparently been made ready. The time-honored usage is to get a couple of cuts—one of a man and another of a woman—and then print them so that no one can tell whether it is Theda Bara or Mary Miles Minter. Then you can run any name you please and not have to go to the expense of a new cut each week. Personally, we like the Vion way better.

Works the Papers.

The Public Service Film Company sends in a batch of newspaper stuff showing how the "Defense or Tribute" release is being worked with the battleship fund being agitated and other features. The Marjorie's Battleship Fund is backed by the New York "Tribune" most energetically and by papers in relation with the Tribune all over the country. The film opened lately in Meriden, Conn., with a flag day, a parade, a school agitation and a lot of other good press agent ideas, and will be played through the country. Even in its letter head the company shows originality of thought, one side and bottom showing a film, and where the film is turned at the corner the corner is cut off. It's a small thing, but it shows the thought in small things that merely follows care in the greater accomplishments.

Has Been Helped.

Harold Brett, of the Starland, Nelson, B. C., sends in a couple of programs and writes:

> I am writing you to express my thanks for the great help your "Advertising for Exhibitors" has been for me. I have clipped a great deal of useful stuff from it and used considerable also, as you will notice by the programs enclosed, which I issue weekly.
> I am preparing some more original stuff which I intend to send you shortly. The enclosed programs represent about the best work that I can get out of the local printer. We are up against great difficulties here in the way of securing cuts. To make up for illustrations I try to make these programs as readable as possible. Possibly you will think them rather conservative, but where the population is largely British, you have to go slowly.

The programs are eight pages with some house talk on the front page and the detail program on three of the inside pages. The rest is advertising and reader. The latter is leaded because composition costs mount up, but we think it would be a good plan to take one page for a two-column department in six point, or else to take two half pages with the advertising above and below. What there is is readable, though we suspect Mr. Brett of asking his own questions in the inquiry department in order to play safe; but more reading matter, as well chosen, would do even more to hold the fans. It is not merely a matter of clipping stuff. It is clipping the right sort of stuff that counts. It takes someone with editorial sense to get the right stuff, and this is where Mr. Brett stands out. From one issue it appears that he has already raised his program from a four to an eight. Here is a belated Christmas sentiment that will be serviceable next year, if you keep a scrap-book, as you should:

> Of all human achievements surely the motion picture most unerringly expresses that idea of service to our fellow men which is the spirit of Christmas. Without regard to creed or sect, to all mankind it carries a single message of life and love and laughter. Therefore, at this season of rejoicing let us especially give thanks that we, as exhibitors, are enabled to play such a part in promoting the happiness of those we serve. For we are something more than tradesmen; beyond consideration of value received we daily give, by the very nature of our work, new cheer to our fellow men. And to do that is to fulfill, in the highest degree, the spirit of Christmas.

Keep It Up.

F. H. Franke, of the California, Chicago, sends in some of his house stuff and explains that he does not give the hours for starting as they have been the same for seven years. That is poor logic. It is to be presumed that now and then the program will come into the possession of some person who does not know what the starting hour has been for the past seven years, and it may help him to decide to go if he finds that there is a show starting at a stated time. There must be strangers moving into the house territory now and then. It will pay the more to advertise for them. Mr. Franke says that the cut of Billie Burke used on one program is the property of the house, as there were none to be had of the exchange. That exchange needs fixing. Most exchanges urge their patrons to hire or borrow cuts. This one seems to require the patrons to have them made.

One program is an eight-pager, four white pages and a cover four of card that is too sharply contrasting. An eight-page all the same color can carry a heavier paper for a cover, but a sheet of cheap white news between sheets of colored card looks cheap. There should be at least a sixteen for a card cover. Another card without the white insert looks very much better. The printer is not strong on composition and one program shows six days on the inside pages. Three of these are boxed in, each panel being in a different rule, and three are run in between. As a result the three panel days will stand out and the others will leave no impression whatever. They should all be boxed or else the panels should be reserved for subjects of utmost importance and not more than one to the week, the others being cut off by straight rule across. The back page carries a fourth box in still another border. As few borders are sold in fonts of less than three feet, it would seem that the printer had enough of any one kind to set as a whole. He should be talked to severely.

Dog Patrons.

Up in British Columbia things are different from here. It seems odd to read in the house rules that no dogs will be admitted without leash, but this is one of the rules promulgated in the Owl, successor to The Trail, the house organ of the O-Row-Nay circuit of Trail, Fernie and Nelson. The Owl regrets that some patrons have not complied with the leash rule, and other patrons complain of uninvited canine caresses. Dogs mean more in the snowlands and the management must accommodate itself to conditions. The Owl keeps up to standard and lately dug a new one. They sprinkle boxes a couple of inches deep on the pages, each bringing out a single feature or house point. It looks well and it fills up space to profit, if not more than two to the page are used. By employing outline type, these display advertisements can be well shown without hurting the appearance of the page. They have taken up the "Out of the car, into the Carleton" line; a far cry from Cape Town to British Columbia.

A Lecture.

The York Theater News, published for the Dean and the Opera House, York, Neb., comes out with an editorial that others might copy, so here it is:

> HURRAH! Now the prohibition people have another great helper in their fight against the liquor evil. It is THE MOVIE PICTURE.
> When the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association held their annual meeting in Washington, D. C., they went after the moving picture.
> They adopted the following resolution unanimously:
> "Another unfair and dishonest advantage that is being perpetrated upon the liquor business is that of the moving picture industry.—"
> It is another victory for the MOVING PICTURE. At last it is getting to the point where its enemies are coming out flat-footed to fight.
> Actual reports are showing a decrease, in cities, of saloon incomes of 50 per cent. And the cause is laid at the door of the picture theater.
> It is TOO BAD (for the saloon-keeper). But what a boon for the family at home—the mother, the wife, the children. Husband, father, brother, now spend an hour or two in a picture show instead of spending their weekly wages in one night's dissipation.
> And the little ones at home can now enjoy the pleasure and instruction of moving pictures, wear better clothes, be better fed, and have a brighter and rosier outlook for the future. It is HURRAH for the moving picture.
> Personally, we are glad the Liquor Interest has taken up the fight against us. It is helping kill themselves.

This will work in well in most programs. The rest of the Theater News is mostly advertising for the two houses, but it is chatty and pays some attention to local matters to interest those who are not wholly interested in films.

Enterprise.

Marion, Alabama, had a Tag Day lately to raise funds for a monument to the Confederate dead. D. S. Greer, of the Bonita, saw it coming, so he supplied the tags free, and only asked permission to use the front for a small advertisement for "The Battle Cry of Peace," which fitted well with the spirit of the day as well as on the tag, which was a handsome shield with the national colors. The back was printed with the proper tag matter, and the ladies were pleased to get a handsomer tag than they could have afforded, and it was one of the best all-around advertisements the Bonita ever had. Mr. Greer adds that he never misses this department, which is why he stays awake. Even if you do know it all, read what the other fellow is doing just to keep your own mind active. You may not need just those stunts, but reading of stunts will keep your mind active along those general lines. Picture Theater Advertising was gotten out to help the man who needed help, but all of the advance orders and about eighty per cent. of the orders for the first two months following publication came from the live wires; the men who might be supposed to be beyond the need of such a book. But these are the men who overlook no chance to enlarge their knowledge and they did not have to be urged to order.

Think It Over.

We wish there were more Y. M. C. A. officers who would realize the value of a good motion picture show. The Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., runs six days a week with the best features of Paramount, Metro, Pathe and others, and it runs it like a regular theater, which is why the experiment is a success. You can't run it like a Y. M. C. A.; you must manage it as a theater, and their house program is a model of the way stuff should be run, dignified, but intelligent and attractive. Perhaps the secretary will advise other secretaries if they will consult with him. This is the cleverest comment on a recent episode that has been printed yet:

> Arthur Brisbane, the editor of that "yellowest of yellow newspapers"—the New York Evening Journal—recently spoke at a dinner given to newspaper men by a group of film producers. "Yes," said he, "I never saw Mary Pickford or Charlie Chaplin or Theda Bara. I know nothing of moving pictures, but they probably should be censored." Upon such intelligent remarks as this is the censorship propaganda founded. As Lewis Carrol might have had it:
> "The time has came"—the Brisbane said,
> "To pump some heated air,
> On censorships and Charlie Chaps,
> And wicked Theda Bar—
> And what the thing is all about,
> I little know—nor care."

And here is something else you can print in your program if you know what is what:

> The photoplay—yesterday called the "moving picture"—is the first new art-form since the ages of Pericles. It is one of the most useful arts, for it serves, it recreates; cheers, uplifts and broadens mentally countless thousands of every race, class and creed. The screen is a window—through which all life may be seen, understood and appreciated.

Perhaps a Y. M. C. A.

The Auditorium, Kingston, N. Y., sends in a postcard program neatly done. The auditorium is in the Y. M. C. A. building, but there is nothing to show that it is an enterprise of that institution. The card is the regulation government card, printed in blue with the days dated and nicely displayed in side panels. It is unusually neat and therefore effective. It is not merely what you say in an advertisement that counts. The amount of type, the choice of type and the manner in which it is printed all count. This card gets the 100 mark.

A Pink Door Knob.

The Columbian, Maplewood, Mass., sends in a pink door knob 7 by 7 inches, printed on one side in black. It may be hypercritical, but we do not like the pink string that is used for the hanger. It curses the lighter tint, and a white would have been better and more conspicuous. The days should be dated, otherwise the card is nicely laid out, though it will not reproduce. The general effect is a strip across the top for the house name and then three panels at right angles to this for the three days they have a program. It is a four-hundred house in a town of five thousand, and yet runs only three days a week. The D. K. is a handy form of distribution and yet it does not show up as much as it used to. We wonder why?

Universal Please Note.

W. W. Dunkle, of South Bend, Ind., an advertising expert, sends in a couple of full pages he did for the La Salle theater of that city for "The Dumb Girl of Portici." The house booked this Pavlowa film and then found they could get no help from the exchange, with the result that they had to call in Mr. Dunkle, who had to locate her appearance in that town from his personal records and then dig in the newspaper morgues for photographs for cut purposes, the cuts costing in excess of $25. Of course, had there been time to write in to New York there would have been stuff in plenty at his command, but this excellent service should be extended to the exchanges or the exchanges should notify patrons on booking that the advertising matter must be obtained from New York. The advertisements are splendidly done, a full page split between the display advertising and reading matter with a four-column layout.

A Systematic Anniversary.

Elwyn M. Simons is systematic. This shows not only in the manner in which he handled the recent anniversary of the New Family Theatre, Adrian, Mich., but in the way in which he sent his stuff in for comment. There was a package of slides, a package of press matter and a letter, all well packed and on top of the slides was the typed explanation that they ran as they were packed in the box. The only thing missing was a lodge ticket he spoke of in his letter. The anniversary was prepared for with slides and newspaper stuff, the start being made a couple of weeks before the proper date. The slides run are a set of six. The first tells what an anniversary is, quoting Noah Webster as an impeccable authority. The second is

MY IDEA OF APPRECIATION OF PATRONAGE.

The entire film market combed with the finest toothed comb ever made for the best plays ever produced. Your gain.

"We are not altogether certain that we like that fine tooth simile. It suggests quite another sort of product. We like better an allusion to "hand picked" features. The third slide tells of a seven-piece orchestra and the stars and the fourth announces that on one of the days the kiddies can come in free from eleven to half past two for a feature specially selected for their benefit. The other two refer to the attractions.

Meantime the newspapers were telling the same thing to the people who read. The first was just a teaser, a suggestion to watch the column, but soon it got down to business and talked definitely of films and music. Mr. Simons uses something that is new to us, a six-point rule, one side only—the left—with arrow heads set in to point to the special features. This is used both for display and straight reading stuff and works well both ways. We do not place the arrowhead as a stock type, but any printer will have small black fists that will serve about as well. Do not use them more than one pica wide. The cut will suggest the use of this idea, which works best in a long length with the fists or points carefully adjusted to match the points in the story. If you cannot get either points or fists the printer can make some from six or twelve point rule and his mortise machine or a file. Wood rule can be whittled down.

Getting back to the New Family; this is the start of a reader. It can be adapted to any house or show and is particularly good if changed to fit the Burton Holmes and other travelogues:

> Have you ever stopped to realize, as you have bought a two-cent postage stamp, what an immense value you are getting for your money? When you write to some far distant city, possibly at the far end of the country, or even to a point without the country, you may transact business, convey words of joy or grief, business or sentiment, and the total expenditure is so little as to be almost negligible. Stop to estimate, if you will, what it might cost if you had to go in person in place of your letter. Include the railroad fare, the hotel bills, and the countless incidental expenses. Add them together, subtract two cents, and you have your saving.
> Next week, to celebrate its anniversary, the New Family theater will outdo the postage stamp. You may be whisked away to the theatrical center of the country for six different performances of as many stars. You will be returned to your home each night and there will be no "postage due."

In the original you are merely taken to Broadway and back, but for a five or ten cent stamp the patron can be taken to any part of the world. What we like best of all in Mr. Simons' letter is his comment that he took over a sick house, the Star, now the Garden, and with four of his old employees put it on a paying basis. This provides his own opposition and at the same time it gives not only these four employees, but all of the Family staff the feeling that it will pay to give faithful service and meantime the four well trained people are doing ten times the work for "their" house.

The Only Day.

Ralph Durfae, of the Millerton, (N. Y.), Opera House, used Western "Onion" messages for April Fools' Day; about the only day when the fake telegram has a real reason. Mr. Durfae dolled the scheme all up and had the messages personally addressed and delivered by uniformed messengers who demanded a receipt. The envelope was too good in quality to deceive the experienced, but not many people comparatively are experienced in telegraph envelopes. The blank is addressed to "Dear Friend" and booms the Paramount service. The best touch is an imprint in one corner. This is almost certain to attract attention and it reads; in four point type, that "Curiosity killed the cat." The rest is along the usual lines, but the man who cannot laugh at that imprint needs to have his face fixed. It lifts whatever curse may lie on the rest of the message. If you try the scheme and cannot get four point use the smallest size of some six point gothic or similar letter, but the great idea is to have the line so small that it does not appear to be part of the reading and must be studied over. A six point face would have killed it. This is the only one of the recent flood of fake telegrams to offer something new.

Rather Old, But—

Writing from Columbia University, New York, Park Hitchins sends in the program for the Lyric, Olive Hill, Ky., for last August, explaining that it will be started up again soon and asking for comment. He is the printer of the issue. The specimen is an eight pager, three by five, colored stock, the color being changed each issue. The use of shaded letters on the front page gives a distinctly neat effect. Shaded letters are apt to clog unless the ink distribution is carefully looked after, but it is a pretty letter when well printed, though not altogether to be commended for a front page where a "plucky" letter would be more distinct, though the chief fault here is that an all capital letter is used. Several fonts now show upper and lower case, notably the Cheltenham, which is a very pretty letter indeed. Inside the program seems too casual. The titles are in display, which is better than machine, but we imagine that this is because the matter is all hand set. It is a little more trouble to centre the lines instead of starting them flush with the left hand margin, but it would give a much neater effect and just a few words added to each descriptive line would help much. The dates should not tbe cut off from the program with rule. This is all right in some cases, but here the date is set between two pieces of rule like the meat in a sandwich and it is merged into the rule. Opening two points top and bottom would help, but it would be better still to omit the lower rule, put the date line away from the top line and set in a larger face, which would be possible were merely the day and date set instead of "Program for Thursday, August 12." Most persons will understand that it is the program without being told. The house runs but three days a week, and each program should appear on one of the inside right hand pages. It gives a bad effect to turn from that neat first page to three advertisements. The first turn should always be to program or reading matter, never to solid advertising. Rule panels would help a little, too, but the chief trouble now is the obscure date and an insufficient description of each film. "Ham and Bud in a Kalem comedy" does not pull. "Can you fancy Ham with a tin star?" might do the work better.

Handwriting on the Wall.

Note the stress many successful companies are laying upon the one reel features they handle. Note the Paramount and V-L-S-E ones. We are swinging back to the shorter subjects. Get ready for them now.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Developing Ideas.

TOO many authors accept the first development of an idea and rigidly adhere to that. They do not realize that it is often possible to better the plot. Some others, it is true, go to the other extreme and fairly worry their plays out of existence through constant changes. The best play is carefully built up from an idea to a complete whole. It is not merely set down as it comes to the mind, but no development is made until the story is reasonably clear in the mind and then this development is not accepted as final until it has been found that nothing better offers. No plot factor is written down until it is carefully examined and found to be the best line of progression, and this is determined only through the elimination of all other possibilities. Even then it may be that later in the story a new thought will come that will require the elimination or change of some of the early factors. For this reason it is best to use some sort of a card system, about the simplest being the use of sheets of paper from a cheap pad about three by five inches. Only one factor is written on a sheet and these are placed in regular order but are not numbered. Then if the later development requires a change of some of the early facts, instead of crossing off the latter, the slips are withdrawn or replaced by others so that the script at all times stands complete so far as it has gone. It is not sufficient to intend to remember when you go over the story again. Make the change at the moment the change becomes necessary. It is the only way in which changes may be made without difficulty. When the plot is fully outlined, put it away. Take it up some time later and go over it again. If no further changes present or suggest themselves, then note on the back of each sheet a memorandum of the action that will tell that factor. Then lay the story aside once more and the third time write out the action fully as a complete script.

It is advisable to do this even where it is intended to offer the play in synopsis form only. Writing from these factors you can get all of the essential development into the story and you know that the story can be told in action because you have already developed the action and you are prepared in case you get a request for the action.

The best technique cannot sell a story, but technique is necessary even to the sale of synopsis form. It must be based upon a practicability and not merely upon a theory.

Reactions.

Be careful not to make yourself a pest to a studio. Some months ago an author complained that he had received a very insolent letter from a certain editor. The letter bore certain ear marks and when the editor turned up some time later he explained the reason for his having written as he did. His predecessor had a fad for writing personal letters to all authors who gave promise. This man had received several, whereupon he had proceeded to unload his entire stock upon that studio, one at a time, and at the rate of two and three a week. He got to be a nuisance and was choked off. He presumed upon what was, at best, a perfunctory politeness. He became a pest.

It is fatal to unload on any studio. Do not ship your entire back files to any concern. They will know that either you are unloading or that you are writing so rapidly that you cannot possibly do good work. In either case they will not care to do business with you since it is improbable that you will be able to give them anything they want.

In the same way do not regard a friendly letter as an invitation to open a heavy, though one-sided correspondence. You will not get many chances these days for most editors now know it to be fatal, but now and then some editor will write a letter and nine times out of eight he is made to regret his action.

Something Wrong.

Lately a company started to put on a comedy. It was to be a five reel feature, but after eighteen thousand feet had been made, it was cut down to two reels, and these were not good. The director worked on a script by a high priced writer who does not know photoplay. He did not stick to the script, but put in whatever he thought of and anything that the star suggested and a couple of ideas he dreamed. As each negative is doubled in this studio 36,000 feet of negative were made. The picture will not sell in spite of a high priced star and a lot of booming. A trained photoplay writer could have bettered the story without half trying and could have turned out a script that would have made about the proper amount of action, allowing for cuts. He might have charged two or three hundred dollars and would have saved several thousand. There is something radically wrong with methods that regard everything but the play in a business that is based on play production.

To Which, AMEN!

The Los Angeles Herald is getting opinions as to just where a director gets off. William Parker, of the American Film Company, was the first to be asked and he speaks with no uncertain voice. He writes in part:

> A director has no more right to change a characterization than Chapman and Hall would to have allowed their foreman to make Pickwick cadaverous and imbecile because he, the foreman, never knew such a man as Dickens created Pickwick.
> It is said there are but seven men in the country mentally qualified to sit in judgment on an author's story. Many times seven directors are making pictures. And it is these unqualified men the authors must contend with.
> An assistant director in talking with a photoplay author recently spoke of "Dickenson" and "Thachery!" And in a brief space of time this assistant director will become a director, cloaked with full authority to make changes ad lib in the work of famous authors and others who are battling for fame against tremendous odds.
> This situation, in some degree, is the fault of the manufacturer. When the men who are putting films on the market drop the word "manufacturing" and substitute "publishing," they will have taken a great stride in the future.
> The majority of the photodramas released weekly are a hodge-podge of antedeluvian stage tricks and a weirdly inexpressible something that the directors have injected, and which they will unblushingly tell you is the "punch." Sometimes they will yawn wearily and tell you that they "sat up until 2 o'clock in the morning to write the 'punch' into the story." If some of the "PUNCHES" the authors see injected into their stories have occasioned any nocturnal labors on the part of directors, then the authors in one fervid breath wish that somebody would slip the directors a sleeping potion along with their dessert.
> Several of the bigger (and more advanced) studios are handing the scenario to the director with instructions to produce "as is." The director, however, is allowed sufficient leeway to make changes to conform to topography and other conditions.
> These companies, while recognizing the value of the director, are giving their moral support to the author because it is business so to do. The STORY is the beginning of the motion picture industry and the THEATER is the end; anything in between is but an incidental factor important perhaps, but withal, merely incidental. People go to theaters to see THE PLAY. The author's name, the producer's name, the star's name, are of passing moment to the rectors, but the creator of the idea is as much entitled to screen credit as an inventor is entitled to a patent.

Probably Done.

It is probable that by the time this appears in print the Photoplay Authors' League will be no more. Members were asked to vote on the question of continuance, but the letter suggests that the league is no longer necessary "having done what it set out to do," whatever that may have been.

Cartoon Plays.

There seems to be no market whatever for cartoon plays. Many writers have asked for data, but there is no market with any of the companies now making these plays. There are two reasons for this, the chief being that the novelty of the idea will suffice to entertain without plot, where plot is possible. A second reason is that the idea being comparatively new, there has not yet been reached that point where cartoonists have exhausted their own ideas. When the motion picture was still a novelty, any brief play was regarded as sufficient of an improvement over the old fifty foot lengths. The chief requirement was motion and plenty of it. It was a full ten years before there arose a real demand for the outside writer, and it is not probable that there will ever be a market for more than a suggestion for the cartoon comedy.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impo-sible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) ,will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 137.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Given a 16-foot picture, what is the relative light intensity of a 1½-inch spot and the light on the screen? How much more light would you need to project a given size picture 100 feet than 50 feet?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 130.

The Roll of Honor on Question 130 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith (this is a habit Smith has, but he is entitled to it, because he comes in with "the goods"), Fort Worth Texas; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; F. F. Bell Palestine, Texas; W. C. Collins, Tiffin, Ohio; C. S. Stuckey, Edmonton, Canada; O. J.Bean, New Bedford, Mass.; J. E. Simms, New Bedford, Mass; C E Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; M. Nosti, Tampa, Fla., W. E. Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; D. R. Davis, Albany, N. Y., and L. Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md

I have selected the reply of Wilson Hays as best suiting the requirements of publication, but first, lest we become confused, I will, myself, reply to the second section of the question, viz.: What would you do first in case of fire?

This question must be answered in two ways. First: Assuming that the fire is discovered the instant it starts, and while it is still only in the aperture, drop the dowser, or pull the machine switch in order to shut off the effect on the screen, at the same time stopping the machine and blowing into the machine aperture with all the power of your lungs. If this puts out the fire, as it will nine times out of ten, well and good; nothing more need be done. If it does not, however, then the next thing will be to open the machine casing, NOT the magazine, and rip the film off as close to the lower magazine fire valve as possible, but don't touch the upper loop because to break the loop ahead of the upper sprocket would do little, if any, good, and to break it behind the sprocket would be very apt to give the upper reel a jerk and unwind a lot of loose film in the magazine. This would largely aggravate the trouble if the fire finally got into the magazine. The next thing to do would be drop the port shutters (they would not have dropped automatically as yet under these circumstances) turn on the house lights, make sure that the vent flue is open and its fan, if there is one, running. Then transmit the fire signal to the manager. Other things to do will depend upon circumstances concerning the individual case. Most likely the fire will not go into the magazines. However, my advice is, if you cannot blow the fire out at the aperture, let the machine alone, absolutely, except for ripping the film in two below the lower sprocket, and it is an open question whether it is best to even do that. With modern machines it is not likely the fire will go into the mazagines if the magazine fire valves are in condition. The other film should be gotten out of the room if possible.

If, on the other hand, the operator is not at his machine when the fire starts, and it gets into the magazine before he discovers it, then the first thing to do is to make sure the port shutters have dropped, and that the vent flue is open, and its fan, if there is one, running. Next TURN ON THE HOUSE LIGHTS and transmit the signal to the manager. You can then pull the machine switch, and machine motor switch or not. It won't make much difference, and your seconds will be fully occupied with more important matters. Having done the foregoing you should bend your energies to saving the rest of the films. Never, under any circumstances, open the machine magazines in case of fire.

Reply to Question No. 130.

By Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.

The Question:

What is the most effective thing with which to smother a film fire? What would you do first in case of fire? What would be the first four things to do? Suppose the fire got into the upper or lower magazine, what would you do? What is the main objection of the operating room door opening directly into the main auditorium?

The Answer:

Film, other than N. I. stock, burns fiercely, and in so doing furnishes its own exygen. It is, therefore, almost impossible to smoother a fire fed by film. Ordinary wheat flour is about the only substance which will do the trick. You cannot do it by closing a metal box, such as a machine magazine, nor can you do it with sand, or even with wet sand, though the flames may be kept down by its use. The first thing to do in case of fire will depend, to some extent, upon the construction of the operating room. With a properly-constructed concrete, brick or tile operating room it is only necessary that the operator see to it that the shutters drop, or have dropped, and devote the rest of his time to saving other films if possible. (What about signaling the manager, turning on the house lights, etc., Brother Hays?—Ed.) If the vent contains a fan it should be started before the performance begins, and run continuously. In case of fire in most small town theaters the following duties should be performed by the operator: Turn on the house lights, signal the manager and see that all openings in the operating room are closed. A four P. D. T. switch controlling house lights and fire signal to manager, port shutters, and signal to stage manager can be installed at trifling cost. It is also practical to rig up a spring and trigger to throw this switch when the mastercord burns, but this should not be done unless it is possible to operate it perfectly 100 per cent. times, since anything which may stall the dropping of the port shutters would be very bad indeed. The operator who keeps cool will see lots of things to do besides these, and will probably have time to do them. If the fire threatens to become dangerous a general alarm should be sent in, and any fire may become dangerous in some theaters. In case of fire it is up to the manager to disperse the audience when he receives the fire signal. In houses where a stop is practically unknown, the show stopping in the middle of the reel is always suggestive to the audience, and is even more so if a recent fire in town has caused considerable newspaper comment. In dismissing the audience the manager will need to show tact and coolness. In modern construction where everything is fireproof the only danger, outside of damage to apparatus, lies in panic, and with properly hung port shutters, proper size vent, and plenty of exits, only normally closed, this danger is largely eliminated, unless the operating room sets at the foot of the balcony where the audience seated at the top of the balcony can see what is wrong when the operator leaves the room. The door of the operating room should be carefully planned so as to be as nearly as possible out of sight of the audience, remembering that the operator is not supposed to stay inside and roast, or suffocate through failure to get out when it is necessary for him to leave. A pyrene gun hung at either machine can be used to combat a fire in upper or lower magazine by means of a small hole normally closed by a metal flap. A water pipe can be connected to the top of upper and lower magazine with valves installed to flood either magazine, but it is claimed that pyrene does not injure film, whereas water will ruin it. One rule concerning fire in the magazine is: Don't, under any circumstances, open the magazine door. If it is already open, close it. With the closed magazine the progress of the fire is hampered to some extent, and the actual blaze is confined to the magazine, though the smoke will, of course, escape in clouds. Once a fire catches in the film roll you might as well kiss that particularl film goodbye. Danger of fire in the operating room may be greatly reduced by keeping the take-up mechanism in good shape, and carefully inspecting and repairing the film; also providing proper containers for film, placing of wires in conduit, grounding the machines to the metal of the operating room and keeping the operating room free from dirt, scraps, rubbish, etc., or, to say more in fewer words, being "on the job."

The principal danger in having the operating room door open directly into the auditorium is that in case of fire, when the operator comes out he is likely to be accompanied by a cloud of smoke, and that would be worse than bad.

Incandescent Lamp for Projection.

Rufus R. Bliss, Kennan, Wis., says:

> In issue March 11th, page 1651, under title of "Cleveland," you spoke of seeing a good 14-foot picture projected with a 600-watt nitrogen lamp. Can you tell me where I can get one of these lamps? Would it have to be a special order, or was it a stock lamp? Am in a town of 250 to 300 people, with some pretty good farms near-by. If I could get such a lamp I would run a show here one night each week.

The lamp spoken of is not yet on the market. The article in question brought forth a number of inquiries, but it is no use to try to get those lamps yet. You would have to have a special lamp, and the lamphouse apparatus would all have to be special, but, regardless of that, it cannot be had—at least not yet.

Sub-Skip.

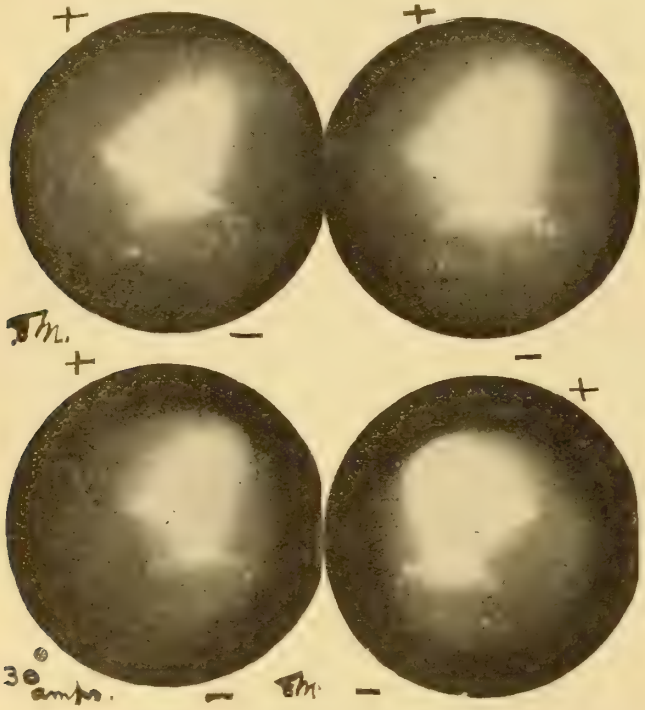
The editor has had a number of samples of film sent in which the emulsion had peeled off. Finally he submitted some of the film to the Eastman Kodak Company with the following result:

> Samples of film submitted show what we term "sub-skip," indicating that the substratum used on the base as a means of preparation for the sensitive emulsion has not been properly spread, in consequence of which the emulsion failed to take proper hold upon the celluloid base. The usual edge markings indicating the film to be of our manufacture do not appear on the samples.

All of which is respectfully submitted for the information of those interested.

Interesting.

Edward Marshall, Vancouver, British Columbia, sends in some photographs of the electric arc which are excellent enough, and interesting enough to deserve space.



Comment, I think, is unnecessary, except to call attention to how nicely the black beads which form on the negative tip show up

Can't Be Did.

From Georgia comes the following interesting communication:

> I can operate an Edison machine good, but we are going to change to a Power's Six B before long, and by September 1st I will be wise to the Powers. Think I can run one now with about one day's experience, and I want to ask you if you won't get me a job in New York, or in some other big city. I can get a recommendation from my employer here. I run ten large Draper Looms eleven hours per day for one dollar, and work three nights and Saturday afternoon as assistant moving picture machine operator. I am thinking of joining a union. How is the I. A. T. S. E.? If I go to a city I will have to belong to a union, but I won't join until I know whether you can do anything for me or not. I will pay you for your trouble, and your kindness will be long remembered.

Now, gentlemen, don't smile. To the experienced city operator this letter will be amusing. I publish it as a sample of letters often received from operators in very small towns; also I publish it to set these well meaning, but misguided men straight. In the first place, Georgia, you could not hold down a job in a city at all, nor could you get a license. In the second place, you could not join a union, because you would have to pass an examination, and in the third place you need to serve a regular apprenticeship under a competent operator. No, I could not get you a job, but if you are made of the right kind of stuff you will hoe your own row and get yourself a job. In one part of your letter you say you have ambition. All right. Couple that with common sense. You tell me you are working eleven hours a day for one dollar. Heavens, man, you could do better than that in the penitentiary making canes to sell to visitors. If you have energy, plus ambition, the course for you to pursue is go to some city, hustle around, and get something to do, and then watch for a chance to serve an apprenticeship in some operating room. But let me warn you of this: don't go into an operating room with the idea that you are already an operator. You are not, and from your letter I should say you are a long, long ways from being one. Get a position as operator's apprentice, work and study hard. Serve the full term of a year as an apprentice, and then, if you have studied and worked energetically, you ought to be a competent operator. Certainly you have nothing to fear in leaving that eleven-hours-for-one-dollar job. You might as well starve decently and in order, as to work all those hours for such a sum as that in these days of high cost of living.

Solar Comments.

John Solar, Watertown, makes the following comment:

> Commenting on friend Martin's article on Chromatic Aberration, Feb. 19th issue, I agree with his deductions in Fig. 1, and will add to it that if the rays proceeding to the screen be continued so as to cross the principal axis, the violet rays will focus much nearer to the condenser than the red rays.
> In Fig. 2 red and green are predominating colors of the spectrum, but with conditions the same as in Fig. 1, we would have the same spectrum as in Fig. 1. The yellow and blueish-green are the brightest rays of the spectrum, and we get the best results when these are focused at the aperture. In circulating an achromatic combination of lenses, the index of refraction for the yellow and bluish-green rays are used for best results. As to the complete combination of red and green into white as shown, under the conditions given it is an impossibility, and I don't believe friend Martin fully understands this phase of the matter. Referring to Fig. 3, the red and green rays cross at the aperture, afterwards continuing in their direct course, but separated the same as before crossing. And now, reverting to Fig. 2, under the same conditions as shown, cover the condenser with card board, punch two pin holes so as to let these sams rays pass, interpose a screen at the point of focus, we will have a highly colored image. This shows that the orange and green has not combined into white, as shown in the figure. What does occur is this (neglecting spherical aberration to avoid confusion): At a point on the principal axis (the meeting point of green in the figure) at which violet rays meet, a violet image of the point source of light is formed, and not only the violet rays from these two points, but rays from the whole condenser are focused at this point.
> At a point on the axis which will be farther from the condenser, the red from the whole condenser will focus, and the intermediate colours of the spectrum will focus at intermediate points between the violet and red. If the aperture is moved back into the focal plane of the violet, then violet rays will predominate, and this predomination at the screen is called a 'ghost." And now, since many may doubt my statement that the colors of the spectrum focus at different points on the axis, or at different distances from the condenser, I will give a demonstration from optics. A pure spectrum must be used; that is to say, one formed by a prism and lens, so as to have the colors distinctly separated. Project this spectrum on a red screen and the red will be reflected back to the eye, but the other colors have disappeared. If we use a screen of some other color, the corresponding color will be reflected, and the other colors will disappear, and it will be found that when the screen is at the focal point of any one color it will be at a distance greater or less than when focused for some other color.
> Quotation from Optics: "A point course of light on the axis of a single lens never gives rise to an image at a single point; the image consists of a series of colored points on the axis, the blue image being nearer to the lens than the red image. Thus, the complete image consists of a small linear spectrum lying along the axis, the blue end of the spectrum, being nearer the lens. This divergence is termed chromatic aberration. If a single lens is used to form an image on the screen, it will, of course, be impossible for the various colored images to be simultaneously in focus. The blue image, being nearest to the lens, will be the smallest, so that if the red images are focussed on the screen, the red images will have smaller blue, green, etc., images superposed on it, but out of focus."
> Referring to his comments on the curve of the light beam, Martin says:
> But even to the eye the beam has a curved shape, probably due to the existence of infra red at the outer edge of the orange envelope.
> If he will study spherical aberration he will easily see this curve is the caustic curve. It is formed by the rays from the outer border of the condenser folding back over the rays from points of the condenser nearer the center, as shown in my sketch.

I will pass this matter along, and let Brothers Solar and Martin fight it out between themselves. I do not really feel competent to pass judgment on this particular matter at this particular time, except to say that Brother Solar's statement that rays of different color focus at different distances from an incorrect lens is a well known fact, though just how far it will apply in practice, when applied to the condenser, I do not know. I would like to ask Brothers Martin and Solar to give me actual measurements, using the condensing lens of a projector for the experiment. This matter is intensely practical and very important to operators if it can be reduced to an actual working rule or basis.

Operator Wanted.

In a small town, not very far from a large eastern city, the Young Men's Christian Association is in need of a real operator. The theater is a large, up-to-date house, and the man must start at $18.00. Here is what the manager says:

> Replying to yours of the 4th, I would be perfectly willing to pay $18.00 for a man who could deliver the goods, i. e., for $18.00 worth of MAN. As I previously told you this is a very large increase over average wages in this locality. It is possible for a man to live comfortably here for less than one dollar per day, therefore you will readily see that $18.00 should go fully as far here as $25.00 would in a city. I have no objection to your publishing this request, provided you withhold enough of my address to prevent a flock of "would-be's" from swooping down on me.

This manager demands a man who is a thoroughly competent operator; one who not only can and will deliver the goods on the screen, but who is clean, decent, and in every way a MAN. He tells me he will be willing to increase the $18.00 somewhat after the man has demonstrated his worth. Now I am not going to stand good for any of you. The town is not far from Philadelphia, and I will forward letters from such as may wish to communicate with the manager. I wish, however, to impress upon you that it will be an entire waste of your time and energy to write unless you are a four-square man who can fill the job all around, both morally and projectionally. You don't have to be an angel with wings, but this manager does not want any cigarette fiends, semi-drunkards or incompetents. I would regard the position as a good one, particularly for a man with family who wishes a permanent place where good work will be appreciated. The salary is not high, true, but, as he says, living is very much cheaper in a small town than in a city.

Lens Trouble.

Nashville, Tenn., says:

I have a 6-inch E. F. Bausch & Lomb lens which was taken apart and put together correctly, but about three weeks afterwards spherical aberration appeared on the edge of the picture. Removed the front and back combination and clamped each with three rings of thin paper. This helped a little, but four rings on each brought the pin point focus back to the picture. I have found that the excessive use of wood alcohol in cleaning lenses to turn the edge of the lens green. If, however, you add three teaspoonfuls of glycerine to a half pint of wood alcohol, this will not occur. I am thinking of placing a 2 c. p. incandescent light in the top corner of the upper magazine, so that when the door is opened the lamp will light and I can see how much film there is left. Do you think it possible to so connect the motor that the striking of the arc would start the motor, thus obviating the necessity for closing the motor switch? Conditions in Nashville are good, and every one tries his best to produce high class results on the screen.

I wonder what really happened in that lens matter. Nashville is in error with regard to spherical aberration. Spherical aberration exists in the condensing lens only, and has the effect of causing uneven illumination at the aperture, and therefore at the screen. I used to think that it was responsible for loss of definition in the picture, but that, it seems, is not true. If the brother means that he clamped in three rings of paper in such way that the distance between the two combinations of lenses was made greater or less, or the distance between the two lenses of the rear combination were altered, why then something must have happened to that lens when you took it apart. What it was I could not even undertake to guess. As to wood alcohol turning the edge of the lens green, I never heard of that before, nor do I see any reason why it should. It is quite possible, however, that the continued use of wood alcohol will injure the polish of the lens, thus reducing its efficiency. As to adding glycerine to the alcohol, why —well, I don't know. That is referred to our readers for experiment. Personally, I should not suppose it would be a good stunt. I don't think it is a good idea to put an incandescent light in a film magazine, nor would the inspectors stand for it if they knew it. There is always a chance for a spark which might touch off a reel of film. Better let that particular proposition alone. As to the motor, no. That particular thing could be done; anyhow, I could not consistently approve of it. If I had my way about it, motors would only be allowed where they are controlled by a spring switch on the machine table which the operator would have to hold closed by his hand. This is the Massachusetts law, and it is a mighty good one, too, since the operator, under this condition, has to stay right there beside the machine, where he belongs. I expect to be in your city and deliver a lecture on projection some time next winter.

From Alaska.

George E. Stephens, Treadwell, Alaska, orders the question booklets and says:

I certainly get a lot of information from the department. Have been operating at the Treadwell Club for eight years. This club is supported by the employes of the Alaska Treadwell Gold Mining Company, and the show is free to all who wish to go. It is only given on Saturdays. There is a matinee in the afternoon, so that the children and the men working nights can attend. The evening show has an audience of about 600. We run from four to six reels of pictures, and a seven-piece orchestra furnishes music. Projection is kept to the highest standard I am able to attain. We have a Powers 6A machine, with motor generator for light, and are getting very good results. But there is always a chance to improve, and you bet I am looking for that chance. There are five other picture shows in this part of the country, besides the one at Treadwell. The city of Douglas, one-half mile from here, has two M. P. theaters. In Juneau, the capital of Alaska, there are three theaters. Projection in all of them is good. We get some of the best productions up here, though they are old before they reach us. The films, however, are in very good condition, and give but little trouble. I noticed in replying to a letter you referred to Alaska as being mostly snow and ice. Not so, Brother Richardson. We have a very fine summer season, with lots of sunshine. Just at present we are having the worst winter in ten years, but will forget it all when the spring comes, because we get weather that can't be beat anywhere. It is a mistake to suppose that Alaska has a bad climate. I am sending a package of views of these parts so that you can see it is not all ice.

All right, old man, I apologize like a reg'lar gent. The views were 8 x 10 in size, and beauties. I have been reading some articles with relation to Alaska, and, to my surprise, I learn that in portions of that territory the winters are no worse than those experienced in Virginia, this being due to the action of an ocean current which corresponds to the Gulf Stream.

Practical Experience vs. Theoretical Knowledge.

Please answer, in this week's issue, the following question: What is your opinion of a so-called operator who claims he can give 25 per cent better projection than anyone else in town, and who has been engaged in the business but a short time? Perhaps he got his knowledge from some correspondence school, which is only theory, while we operators have got our knowledge from practical experience of years at the business, and have worked hard to get our projection symmetrical, and still he claims that we have poor projection.

Your data is altogether too vague to allow me to pass an intelligent opinion, Wilmington. However, the question you raise, while old, is still interesting, and its answer is not as simple as you seem to imagine. In the first place, my brother, the acquiring of knowledge of projection entirely through practical experience is a long, slow process, nor is it within the range of probability that any man living can become a thoroughly competent operator in that way. On the other hand, after a man has thoroughly grounded himself in theory, the acquiring of practical experience is a comparatively rapid process. I presume I will mortally offend some of my non-theoretical friends by saying this: I would rather have a man who was thoroughly grounded in the theory of projection, but who had only six months' practical experience, than have the same man if he had no knowledge of theory but had three years of practical experience. Of course that sounds pretty radical, but it has a sound basis just the same. Operators must come to an understanding of the fact that it is no longer sufficient to merely put a good picture on the screen—a brilliant picture, free from shadows, for instance, but that that picture must be put on in a way that will cost the least possible amount of money, and produce the least possible amount of eye-strain.

Nor is this all that is involved. Wilmington operators have placed in their hands every day films which are worth about $125 each. I wonder how many of the Wilmington men have made a test of the tension on their machines in the last thirty days. I wonder how many of them know how to make an intelligent test of the tension on their machines. Yet just a little bit too much tension will cause damage to every foot of film that is run on that machine, particularly if the intermittent sprocket happens to be just the least bit undercut.

I wonder how many Wilmington operators could give an intelligent answer as to whether their objective lenses are of the right diameter to avoid light loss. I wonder how many Wilmington operators could give a thoroughly intelligent reply as to how far their condenser ought to be from the film, and WHY it ought to be that distance, or name all the effects brought about through altering the distance of the arc from the condensing lens.

These, my good Wilmington brother, are just a few of the EXCEEDINGLY important questions of theory, which you, as an operator, not only ought to, but MUST understand, and understand thoroughly, in order to be a really competent operator.

And now I will make the Wilmington men the following proposition. Some time this spring I am going to deliver a lecture on projection in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. If the operators and managers of your city will arrange a meeting, and undertake to get out a full attendance of operators and managers, I will stop one day in Wilmington. If this offer is accepted, perhaps when I finish talking you will have your eyes opened to some of the possibilities of projection, and to the necessity for a thorough understanding of the theories involved therein.

I would not care to express any opinion with regard to the gentleman in question. You say perhaps he has acquired his knowledge through a correspondence course. Under the terms of that statement I might with equal reason say perhaps he has not.

From a Manager.

Illinois (name and town suppressed by request), says:

We thoroughly appreciate your work in the projection department, although disagreeing with you from time to time. With regard to operators, do you mean to say that the results obtained by an operator depends wholly on the amount of money he gets? If you do, we must emphatically disagree. We used to depend entirely on the operator. Had an out-of-town man, and paid a fairly good portion of our receipts for projection, which was in the nature of a farce. We began, however, to get wise to the fact that a real manager should at least know how to run a projector, and Yours Truly got very busy. We have not acquired a swelled head by any manner of means, but are putting up as good projection as that seen in some of the best Chicago houses, and certainly better than many Chicago theaters where we presume the operator gets two or three times as much as we pay ours. Furthermore, we can take any young man of average intelligence and show him all the work it is required he do in three months' time, and he will then produce just as good results as the average Chicago operator. In this connection please take note that the manager is in Chicago quite frequently, and visits Chicago houses while there. If you claim the results obtained are proportionate with the salary paid, I am going to say "'Tain't so." The manager of this theater now inspects the machines daily, so that part of the operator's duty is taken off his shoulders and out of his hands. We use a local man, and all he is required to do is to set the carbons, thread the film, light the lamp, turn on the automatic feeder, and keep the spot centered on the aperture. The machines, two of them, are motor driven. With a hand driven machine and a hand-fed arc and a one-machine outfit it is something else again, but with first-class equipment, such as we have, and such as any first-class house has, an experienced operator is positively not a necessity, meaning by this a fancy salary city man. Our only competitor has an out-of-town operator, but our projection with a local man makes his look like thirty cents. My wife has frequently taken my operator's place for a night, and nobody knew the difference. The reason for this is that we study, attend to our machines ourselves, and take more pains with them than any operator would. Half of the operators are only in it for the pay envelope. Of course, there are those who take a real interest in the work, but that kind would not be available here, even if we needed them.

And now with regard to the table on page 437, October 16th issue. Suppose you got a new machine and set it up. How am I to determine (1) distance from condensers to aperture; (2) size of condensers, etc., with nothing to start on? We have got to experiment, haven't we? This is not a catch question. We are sincere. If you have any doubts as to the claims of anything in our letter we will cheerfully pay the expenses of your Chicago representative if he does not say we are putting up as good projection as in the average theater in the "Loop" of Chicago, which is the downtown district.

This is a long letter, but I have quoted it verbatim because it raises or rather re-raises some exceedingly interesting, and enormously vital points.

Yes, Illinois, I do claim that, broadly speaking, results on the screen are directly in proportion to salaries paid, but the difference between you and I is that you apply this in a way I don't intend it to be applied. You take the text of my statement, but disregard the underlying, vital principles involved. What I mean is simply this: Why don't they pay railroad presidents $15 a week? Stop and think a moment. I, too, am sincere, and this is no catch question. Why don't they pay railroad presidents $15 a week, instead of $1,000? I will tell you why. Because railroad presidents must be men of brains and ability, who can manufacture tangible results by the use of their mentality; because they are men of real attainment and ability, and ability, brains and attainment must be paid for. Now, you might hire a section man at $50,000 a year and place him in the president's office, but that does not mean that he would be a railroad president. He would only be a rank imitation, and if he undertook to exercise the powers of the office he would wreck the railroad in short order. Now, do you begin to sense what I am driving at? Laying aside the increase in salary forced by labor organizations, the salaries of men are very largely graded directly in proportion to the ability of the men, or, in other words, the possibilities the positions they fill present for superior workmanship. The bricklayer, for instance, can't go very high, because once he has served an apprenticeship and thoroughly learned his trade, ordinarily speaking the only considerable value he can add to his work lies in speed, and that, of course, is a very limited quantity. The moving picture operator, however, has large opportunities to prove his worth through superiority of presentation of the picture on the screen, and whereas one operator may actually be worth a very small sum, another operator may be worth a comparatively large sum because he is a close student of projection, and is able to place a very high class projection on the screen at a comparatively low cost, at the same time reducing the wear and tear on films and machinery to a minimum. Now, if your argument be correct, and we, for instance, adopt a flat salary of $15 a week for operators, don't you see, Illinois, that we will get as moving picture machine operators only that class of men who cannot make more than $15 at anything else? On the other hand, let us take an extreme case and say we pay $75 a week for operators. Don't you see that immediately we would bring into operating rooms the very best talent available, because $75 a week would be sufficient to attract very high class men, or in other words, men who could not make more than $75 a week at something else. And let me say right here that I firmly believe that the time is not far distant when some operators in large cities will be receiving $75 a week, though that is probably as high as it will ever go, and I think the $75 a week field will be very limited, but $50 a week here in New York City will be common enough, I think, within the next two years.

As to your comparison with the Chicago downtown houses, you have selected a city where the leaders of the operators' organization have time and again openly avowed their disbelief and disapproval of the education of the operator in the technical side of his business. In other words, the leaders of the Chicago operators' union have openly disapproved of projection departments and handbooks, and presumably the rank and file of Chicago operators approve of the position of their leaders, because the leaders could not very long maintain a position which the membership disapproved. They would lose their job if they did. You therefore have not picked a city where uniformly high class work could be expected. Go to some of the high-class St. Louis or Boston theaters; come here to New York City and look at the picture in the Triangle theater in Brooklyn, or in the Strand theater, or go to Utica, N. Y., and look at some of the work there, that being a comparatively small city, and then see if you don't think that ability in the operating room counts for everything.

Yes, I very firmly believe in the theater manager understanding the theory of projection, though I don't hold it to be his place to run the machine, or even to take care of the machine, except in small towns where the possible patronage renders the employment of a good operator an impossibility.

But to get back, for a moment, to our argument. I certainly do not mean to say that the payment of a high salary to any given individual will make him a good operator, but I do say that as operator's salaries gradually rise the present operators will have to improve, or other men who are willing to study and improve will come in and crowd them out. When a man is getting a low salary he does not care very much about the job one way or another, because he can get another one just as good without much trouble, but let that man get up into a high-salaried position and you are going to find him hustling to improve, because he don't want to lose that job. This last is, however, to some extent qualified by the mistaken position assumer by unions which accept into membership men of inferior ability, and then undertake to back up their demand for the union scale without regard to the ability of the individual. This is, in my judgment, absolutely wrong, except in cases where the union scale is so low that good workmanship is not to be expected. Personally, I think the time has about arrived where operators' unions, in cities at least, should cease receiving into membership operators who cannot absolutely prove and demonstrate their ability, both in practical and theoretical projection. I could amplify in this matter very greatly, but I think you have got the idea. My contention for higher wages does not apply individually, but broadly.

As to your question with regard to the lenses, yes, that is one weak point, and it is a point you cannot get around at present. You have got to know the back focus at which that lens will work before you can make any intelligent estimate of the requirements of the rest of the lens system. I am, however, becoming pretty firmly convinced that if the diameter of lenses up to 4 inches E.F., or possibly 4½ inches, be not less than 1⅝ inches, and from 4 inches or 4½ inches to 5½ inches, the diameter be 2 inches, and beyond 5½ inches the diameter be 2½ inches, all requirements will be met. When this matter is finally settled you can order your objective and, using a temporary pair of condensers, put the picture in focus on the screen and measure up.

Your statement that an experienced operator is not a necessity under certain conditions is quite true. He is not a necessity, but he is a mighty good investment neverthless, always provided you get a real operator. Your show-him-in-three-months statement made me smile. Man, man, man! I am at least of average intelligence, I think, and after seven years of close application I have still very much to learn about operating, yet you coolly tell me you could teach anyone all that in three months. Raus mit you, brother! 'Tain't so. On second reading, however, I see you only propose to supply knowledge sufficient to equal that of the "average Chicago operator." Umph! Well, that's an awful slap at the Chicago average.

Not So.

Glen Kalkhoff, Milwaukee, Wis., says:

> Referring to article by Bert Carlson, entitled "A Kink," April 22nd issue, in which he describes an invention for resetting the lower loop, I believe Mr. J. H. Hallberg said that too large a lower loop injures your lower idler. Until recently I thought every operator knew the simple method of picking up the lower loop, but have discovered that most of them do not. When the lower loop is too large, just raise the lower idler a little ways and the take-up pulls the loop back in jerks. When you have the right size loop let the idler down again. This method makes Brother Carlson's invention unnecessary.

Sorry, Brother Kalkhoff, I cannot agree with either you or Mr. Hallberg. Running with too large a lower loop is not going to do the lower idler any harm if it revolves, as it should do, or even if it did not revolve, but it is likely to, with some machines, produce an oily film, as any practical operator well knows. However, the invention of Brother Carlson is not designed to remedy a too-large loop when the machine is running, but merely to assist the operator when threading the Power's Machine. I cannot at all agree with your method of catching the loop. It can be done that way all right, but jerking the film over the sprocket teeth is not the best thing in the world for the sprocket holes; also, if you happen to drop the idler at the wrong time, as will sometimes happen (don't tell me it won't, for it will), you will have sprocket indentations between the holes. Nope, Friend Kalkhoff, you undoubtedly mean all right, but I cannot agree with you this time.

Hints to Newsfilm Cameramen.

By P. D. Hugon.

(Some time ago Mr. Mayell of the Pathe Freres Company announced through this column that he had several hundred copies of the above named booklet which he would be glad to distribute free to anyone who was interested. In a very few days the entire supply was exhausted and Mr. Mayell's office was swamped with requests for more booklets.

Mr. P. D. Hugon, the author, has kindly consented to the publication of his booklet in these columns, with the idea in mind that the substance of the article may be of some assistance to the Newsfilm Cameraman.)

CHAPTER I.

What to Take.

The object of motion pictures is to show motion. Only things in which there is motion are worthy of the cameraman's attention.

The subjects that make good news negatives are: (1) All news subjects, i. e., the unstaged happenings of to-day, not yesterday, last week or last month; riots, disasters, great railroad wrecks, the activities of well-known men; and news caught in the happening is the only real news there is. The consequences of an event, ruins, wrecks, can only be of value if presented in a suitable manner.

(2) Pretty subjects, with good scenery, pretty girls, children, young animals, with some kind of a topical interest. But when it comes to girls, only the most strikingly beautiful specimens should appear.

(3) Photographic effects of light and shade, also with some kind of topical interest; a novel view of some building which is being talked about, a remarkable combination of natural beauties.

There is no demand for pictures of the ordinary activities of boy scouts, local parades, lodge meetings, unveilings of statues or tablets (except when attended by the President), posed groups of delegates to conventions, or similar line-ups of persons much embarrassed by the camera.

A good general rule to follow is this; Never send pictures that do not tell their own story. Pictures that require lengthy explanatory titles never can be interesting.

Make sure you get the news in your picture. To every event there is one picture and one only, if a man has invented a new engine we want to see the man and his engine in the same picture. If in doubt, write out the story in two lines, then take the picture showing just what you had in those two lines. If you cannot do that, you have missed the story.

Get local color in your pictures. There are many scenes that you never look at, and never would photograph, because you see them every day; but people in other cities want to see them, just because they are different from their own surroundings.

The first scene of every subject should be a general view characteristic of the place, containing the subject proper; the subject proper, although visible, being subordinate to this general view. For example, if you were taking the visit of the King of England to Berlin, for Berlin, you would take close-ups of the King, and not trouble about Berlin streets. But if you were taking the same subject for London, you would show the royal equipage coming down Unter der Linden, showing the architecture of the place. The close-ups of the King would be almost superfluous.

The same applies to your town. Other people want to see it in your pictures.

Specific recommendations for certain subjects are given below.

Races.—Where speed is the dominant factor, turn slowly about half speed Failure to do this is unpardonable. Remember then that you must shut down your iris diaphragm, so as to not over-expose. Take all moving objects coming toward the camera, never going away. Every race must show at least four scenes; beginning, middle, finish, winner; and if possible an extra scene of the middle.

Parades.—A parade is only worth taking if there is something decidedly new in it; and you can never say that there is until you have succeeded in stating what it is in writing.

Owing to the speed of the movement across the field of vision and to the nearness of the subject to the camera a float is almost impossible to photograph successfully when in motion. Pick out two or three of the best floats, and take still pictures of them either before or after the parade showing of course, the people seated on them as they were in actual parade. A parade must be very interesting indeed to justify the usual street scenes.

Shows.—Find out from the man who knows what are the points that make one exhibit more successful than another, and go for these points, and write them clearly in your "dope." For instance, "This pony won a prize for condition, owing to the lustre of its coat and the length of its tail." If you cannot write such a title, then you have not grasped the important points yourself, and it is a certainty that you have not got the right picture.

CHAPTER II.

How to Take. Composition (i. e. Artistic Arrangement of Subject).

Most subjects must be taken successively from two distances.

First from a fair distance, to give a general view of the object and its surroundings. Secondly from as close a range as possible, to give detail. Most positions taken by cameramen are intermediate between these two and therefore wrong. If you will reflect for a moment you will see that the way of viewing a subject is to get a general idea as you approach it, after which it is important to get up just as close as possible, and inspect the subject minutely. If you cannot get close up, you can sometimes use a six-inch lens with the same effect. Every cameraman going out on a difficult job should always carry a six-inch lens with him.

Sky.—Sky is only permissable with a very fast exposure when a good cloud effect is to be obtained. In other cases, sky must be masked by means of a tree, a flag, etc. Never more than one-fifth of the picture should be blank sky.

Water.—Water in a picture is almost as undesirable as sky, unless it is agitated. When taking pictures of ships it is almost invariably necessary to get close up or to use a long focus lens. If the picture has to be all sky and water (e. g. in the case of a ship at sea), take one-third sky and two-thirds water. Whatever you take with water in, make sure your horizon is perfectly level, as nothing looks worse than water running up hill.

Silhouettes.—Any imposing, towering object makes a good silhouette effect obtained by under-exposure.

Focus.—You cannot be too particular about crisp focus. Whenever you are able to do so, carry a newspaper with big headlines, and have someone hold it upside down for you at the exact distance at which the person to be photographed will stand, and focus on it.

2. When the light is very good, and you can stop down to F-16, there should be no difficulty about focus, as every object from a few feet to infinity is in focus when focus is set for infinity.

3. It will be much more noticeable if a near object is out of focus than a distant one. If you cannot get both in focus, focus on the near one, but you can generally get both in focus by focussing on the distant one, and stopping down (i. e. shutting your iris diaphragm to F-11 or so).

4. Quite frequently a negative made at F-16 with the very best lighting conditions looks out of focus. This is due to halation, a very painfully frequent occurrence in the South and at sea. Halation is caused by too much white light striking one object (or one part of the picture). This light spreads over the dark parts, covering up the sharp lines and making them look hazy and out of focus. To avoid halation avoid white clothing, sky, objects that reflect a lot of light; and carefully guard your lens from reflection of the rays of the sun inside the lens shade. Every photographer working in Southern climates is advised to purchase a yellow light filter and to make use of same during the brightest hours of the day, particularly in the summer months. The filter makes it necessary to increase the exposure three times for an x three, six times for x six, etc. The x three is quite sufficient.

Exposure.—Not one day passes without twenty dollars being lost to one cameraman or another, and often one hundred dollars or more, owing to incorrect exposure. It takes a lifetime to learn exposure by practice. It take two hours by means of a 50-cent exposure meter. If dollars are worth more to you than cents, order one right away now from your photographic dealer.

If you use Pathe negative stock, always remember that it is very much faster than any other.

The following rules are given only to make you realize the need for a thorough study of the subject.

1. The object to be photographed. The nearer or darker an object or person to be photographed the longer the exposure required. The following are the relative values of subjects most frequently used in newsfilms:

Portrait in shade, seven feet away	4
Three-quarter figure in shade, twelve feet	3
Half length figure in sun, seven feet away	2
House, street scenes, light and shade	1
Snow, yachting, open beach scenes	¼
Open sea, distant yachts	⅛

This means that, to take a yacht race, you require 32 times less exposure than to take a portrait of someone standing in the shade.

2. Shutter and Iris Diaphragm. There are two means of altering the exposure; the shutter and the iris diaphragm. For ordinary subjects it is better to keep your shutter at a fixed speed so that you do not forget that you have changed it. One-fiftieth of a second is fast enough for habitual use. You can then alter your iris diaphragm to suit your light. When you see the subjects on the ground glass, you therefore know what depth the shadows should be. At a fiftieth of a second, the details in the shadows should be clearly visible in the ground glass, at the point at which you cease stopping down.

For example, if we have to take a general view of a parade in very bright sunlight in June about 2 o'clock on Pathe stock, we have the choice of the following approximately exposures.

1/75 " " " " 8.
1/25 " " " " 14.

We would choose 1/50th of a second at F/14 because this would give us "depth" (i. e.; both the foreground and the background would be in sharp focus), and it would be fast enough to catch without distortion the movements of the paraders.

If, however, in the same lighting conditions, we had to take a yacht race, our choice would be more difficult:

1/600 " " " " 5.
1/300 " " " " 8.
1/150 " " " " 11.
1/40 " " " " 22.

It will be noticed in this case that all the speeds necessary to avoid over-exposure, when the iris diaphragm is wide open or nearly so, are greater than habitually found on shutters of moving pictures cameras. We must therefore stop down to between F/22. and F/32.

Sometimes, again, a fast exposure is essential, as in aeroplane pictures. It is clear in such cases that the necessary aperture of the iris cannot be estimated by looking at the object in the ground glass. It requires a calculation, which is found ready made in the exposure meter. Remember, when taking pictures from aeroplanes, to allow for vibration, and to increase your speed as much as possible.

Don't waste any more film, it does not pay. Get that meter right now, and use it on every occasion.

3. Shutter Speeds. For each turn of the handle, eight pictures are exposed. The handle is turned twice in one second. Therefore sixteen pictures are exposed in one second. Therefore the speed of the shutter is always the same, when the handle is turned at the regular speed. This means that the shutter (the whole of the shutter which is a circle) goes round in one-sixteenth of a second. But is not possible to obtain a sixteenth of a second speed on the film, because a portion of the time that the shutter takes to revolve is occupied by the movement of the picture downward. That interval is marked by the dark part of the shutter.

Now if the whole circle (consisting of 360 degrees) revolves at an even speed of one-sixteenth of a second, one degree passes a given point in 1/360th of 1/16th 1. e., 1/5760th of a second. Ten degrees take 1/576th of a second and so forth. It will be seen, therefore, that the time the film is exposed to light (what is called the speed of the shutter) depends entirely on the angle of the open part of the shutter.

For any camera on the market, the speed is the same for the same angle of opening. But some cameras have shutters that can be opened or closed more than others, and are, therefore capable of longer or shorter exposures. Some cameras, for instance, cannot operate as slowly as 1/30th of a second; but it is capable of operating at a 5,000th of a second. The Pathe camera, on the other hand being extensively used in climates like England's operates at 1/29th of a second if required.

Care in Handling the Negative.

Steadiness.—It is essential, to preserve the illusion which is the basis of the film business, that the picture should be absolutely steady. A very large number of pictures are rejected owing to unsteadiness has been found in many cases to be due to defective screwing up of tripod or tilting platform. In other cases, unsteadiness has been found to have been due to the practice of cameramen of resting their left hand on the panoram or tilt handle which thus shows a sympathethic motion.

Scratches.—To avoid scratches, every nook and corner of the camera and magazines must be thoroughly cleaned several times a day, and the magazines (particularly the slot through which the film passes), must be cleaned every time they are changed. This can only be done with a stiff brush. Blowing is useless.

Panorams.—There should never be a panoram, either vertical or horizontal, unless it is absolutely essential to obtain a photographic effect; and in any case the panoram should be, not from the main subject to others, but from others to the main subject, where the attention will finally rest. It is very much better to take two scenes than one panorammed scene. Panoramming is the lazy man's remedy.

Length of Scenes.—As the average subject in a newsfilm measures about 60 to 100 feet it is to the cameraman's advantage to avoid taking more than that length. Several scenes, each 20 feet in length, stand the best chance of acceptance. Never turning less than 10 feet if the object is still, and 15 feet if it is moving.

Numbering.—Every scene should be numbered at the end, before the punches. This can be done by any agreed means or by holding up one finger about one foot in front of the center of the lens or scene one, two fingers for scene two, etc.

Punching.—Three punches should be made between each scene i. e., each time the position of the camera is changed, or each time the light changes, or each time the distance of the subject changes considerably. This makes it possible to develop each scene separately and to get the best results in each case.

CHAPTER III.

How to Dispatch the Negative.

(1) No negative should ever be sent by mail, as this is illegal.

(2) All negatives must be sent undeveloped and uncut, packed first in a tin can, sealed with electrician's tape, and labeled with the cameraman's name and address, clearly marked "Open in Dark Room Only." This can should be packed in a wooden or metal box, also bearing the sender's name and address, and labeled in accordance with the requirements of the railway companies concerning moving picture film.

(3) The parcel should be sent by express, and by the very best company and its very best train. There is in every city one, and only one, express company giving the best service between that city and other cities. Find out which it is; but don't wait till you have made a negative before doing so. Find it out today. Ask each and every express company.

Do you guarantee that a parcel will get there by your service quicker than by any other? How much quicker? When will it get there if handed in at such and such a time?

Of what lines have you got an exclusive running monopoly?

What is your best train out of this city, on which film can be shipped?

(4) Inside the tin can containing the negative should be placed full list and fullest description of scenes, stating who, why, how, when, where; also newspaper clippings of the event or the programme.

(5) Immediately after handing your negative to the express company, send the editor a night letter (a day letter if necessary but never a full rate telegram), in exactly the following form and words:

"Shipped by (state name of express company) this (evening or morning), to reach you (state what time)—feet of (name of subject) suitable for (state whether general edition, local edition, or special reel); event covered by (state names of competitors who took the scene). (If local competitors took scene, state when they will release.)

CHAPTER IV.

The Golden Rule.

Make as good a picture for others as you would like others to make for you.

Nothing but the best is good enough. Think and think hard how you can make the best picture. Put it all down in writing in advance; plan your scenes; first I shall stand there to get the best general view. Then I shall walk around the crowd to this spot, which will be held for me by my friend So-and-So and make a close-up. I shall want my two inch lens for this scene and the six-inch for the other. The event will take place at such and such an hour, therefore the sun will be there, and I must turn my camera that way to get the best composition. That tree would nicely mask the sky. I must take my position so as to include that branch in the picture. I will have everything ready to ship the film, etc.

There is plenty of room at the top of your profession, but you will not get there by standing about or just grinding away. Brain work is ultimately the only way to big money.

And the money is there waiting for you.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

"Musical Setting for Britton of the Seventh"

Released May 8 by the V-L-S-E., Inc.

Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg.

(By special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 16¼ T "Two weeks pass," is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 3½ D "Military parade," is a description of action.

This picture is built about the last stand of General Custer against the Indians in 1876. It opens forty years later when the hero, Tony Britton, is an old man. He is telling his grandson, Bobby, how much different fighting is today than in his time and many scenes of modern-day military encampments and methods of warfare are shown. Then Bobby falls asleep and is taken to bed. The old man sits by the fireside and the story goes back forty years, when he was the pride of the Seventh Regiment in the Indian country. He thinks he loves Mrs. Granson, wife of Capt. Granson, but when Barbara Manning visits the post he knows he has been mistaken. Two of the army scouts have been killed, and Rain-in-the-Face, an Indian chief, is captured for their murder. He escapes and leads his braves in an uprising. Meanwhile Captain Granson, long jealous of Britton, succeeds in forcing him to resign in disgrace. Then occurs the massacre of the Seventh, in which Granson dies. Before this, however, he vindicates Britton and the story closes with the reunion of Barbara and Britton.

Note particularly: Indian scenes at 10¼, 27¼, 54½. Battle scenes at 60 to 64.

The THEME selected is "For Valor"—Ancliffe.

Time schedule: Five reels (about 4,700 feet), 67½ minutes.

To the Lone Pianist

By S. M. Berg.

In a series of articles which will be published in these columns, I shall endeavor to deal with the musical interpretation of the picture from the view-point of the lone pianist, as from time to time the cry is heard, "What shall I play for the picture?" Each article will open with a synopsis of the story and then a discussion will follow on how the picture can be played.

A few evenings ago I strolled into a theater seating about 900 people where an orchestra organ was being used. The young lady who was operating it frequently changed the music and played with taste and accuracy. I noticed that she waded through an enormous amount of music and it so awakened my curiosity that I kept actual count of the numbers she used. The next picture projected happened to be a two reel drama. It lasted 28 minutes and within that time I discovered that she played eleven different compositions. By such a system as this, figuring that a ten reel show was given with a change of program daily and that no repetition of music was made within two weeks a library of 770 compositions would be necessary. Apart from characteristics such as Chinese, Oriental, Indian, Mexican, Agitatos, galops, etc., it is quite improbable that the average pianist has so large a collection of music. Therefore continual repetitions must be the result. It is as a help and a solution of these problems that I submit these articles to my readers.

There was released by the Triangle company on April 30th a feature picture of six reels, "The Beggar of Cawnpore." The time of projection was 84 minutes and the whole action of the picture lay in India. The synopsis is as follows:

Dr. Robert Lowndes of the British Army Corps is in the Indian desert striving to save the life of Burton, the engineer in charge of running a government telegraph line across the desert. Burton dies of the fever and the natives fearing cholera flee, leaving Lowndes and a faithful Brahmin alone. While the Brahmin goes for aid to Delhi, Lowndes remains fighting the terrible heat of the desert. At last, unable to stand it, he seeks the relief of morphine. Later, when the months bring him back to Delhi, the drug has claimed him as its victim and to Betty, his sweetheart, he confesses his bondage. Captain Douglas, a rival, tempts him to indulge his craving, and Betty's father, discovering his condition, orders him away. Six months later Lowndes is a degraded beggar of Cawnpore, living for nothing but hasheesh, a Hindoo drug. Meanwhile Douglas has married Betty and they visit Cawnpore. A native rebellion breaks out and the Europeans take refuge in the garrison. Douglas, the only coward, tries to desert, but an English bullet stops him. Greatly outnumbered, the band is forced to surrender. Lowndes, hearing of the surrender, after a terrible struggle, overcomes his habit, and realizing the treachery of the natives, decides to go to Betty's rescue. He saves her and his manhood returned, they are re-united.

A very excellent score was composed and arranged by Victor L. Schertzinger, and I am sure that it will interest all players to dissect this work and see how many distinct numbers are used noting the number of bars of music and the frequency of their repetition.

There are 26 cues in the score. The opening number is a pleasing valse lento which is used for the English characters, and consists of an introduction of 8 bars, and then 32 bars which can be repeated. It is again used at cues 6, 10, 16 and 26. Cue 2 is a characteristic Indian number in moderato 2-4 movement with timpani and Indian drum prevailing. There are two movements of 32 and 16 bars which can be indefinitely repeated. This number is used again at cues 14 and 23. Cue 3 is an oboe solo, dramatic oriental in character, with an undercurrent of cornets and bassoons. The tempo is moderato 6-8 with two movements of 19 bars each which are repeated at cue 11. 4 is a characteristic Oriental agitato allegretto in three movements of 16 bars each and is repeated at cue 17. 5 is an Oriental andante con espressivo in four time with oboe and clarinet predominating accompanied by dramatic chords. There is one movement of 16 bars to be repeated. 7 is an andante Oriental bassoon solo repeated at cues 19 and 22. 8 is a 2-4 allegretto moderato of 32 bars D. S., which is not repeated. 12 is a dramatic allegro of one movement of 11 bars and a repeat movement of 16 bars. 13 is a characteristic Oriental number moderato 2-4 with oboe and tom-tom which opens with a four-bar oboe solo. There is one movement of 40 bars repeated, and a second movement of 18 bars repeated also, the melody carried most of the time by the wood wind. This is repeated at cue 15. 18 is a battle agitato in four with cornet calls and timpani rolls with 16 bars to be repeated. This is repeated at cue 20. Cue 19 is an effective agitato for mutiny and battle scenes, the first movement of 38 bars repeated. Second movement of 24 bars is repeated and then D. S. repeated. This is repeated at cue 25. Cue 24 is a movement of 24 bars repeated andante pathetic.

By this description we find that although 26 changes were necessary to fittingly portray the action only 11 different compositions were needed, so that practically each number was played for 8 minutes though not continuous. The reason of this minute description is to show that this picture playing 84 minutes with continual changes from allegro to pathetic, with scenes of Oriental display, native characters, British military encampment and battle scenes, required but eleven distinct numbers to fittingly interpret it.

The first cue, waltz lento, for white characters is repeated five times, and the Oriental theme with tom-tom effects three times. The second Indian theme is played three times and almost all other numbers are repeated in different parts of the score. In playing this character of picture the pianist should strive to select a theme for each of the leading characters, bearing in mind the racial characteristic and repeating at the logical situations. Then by slight improvising and handling of pathetic, dramatic or allegro requirements he will find that his musical settings will take on some individuality and interpretation instead of being a string of intermezzos just being played as an accompaniment.

Marion and Madeline Fairbanks

NOW that they have reached their fifteenth year, the "Thanhouser-Mutual Twins"—Marion and Madeline Fairbanks—have modestly requested that in forthcoming releases they are desirous of having their names appear in the cast, though not for the purposes of differentiation, having long ago given up hope of ever having people tell them apart.

"We have been known so long as the 'twins' in screen productions," said Marion, speaking for her sister as well as herself, "that now that we have reached our fifteenth birthday we think it best that we be known as Marion and Madeline. It looks much more important, we think, to be listed by our individual names than it does merely as the 'Fairbanks Twins'."

Marion and Madeline Fairbanks.

Telling these two young ladies apart has long been a matter of conjecture at the Thanhouser-Mutual Studios. On one occasion, during the staging of a feature, Director Sullivan, perturbed at his inability to pick the right one, hit upon the happy idea of fastening a ribbon to their arms. Marion was assigned a blue one and Madeline a red one. Thereafter, little difficulty, so far as identification was concerned, was encountered. The same scheme has been resorted to frequently in the staging of releases in which both young ladies appeared.

The difficulty in telling Marion from Madeline or Madeline from Marion may be imagined when it is realized that in height, weight, color of hair and eyes and even to complexions and mannerisms, they are as one. Each is just four feet tall and each weighs seventy-four pounds. Marion's hair is curly and brown. So is Madeline's. Madeline's eyes are hazel. So are Marion's. They dress exactly alike even to hat and shoes and their voices are the same.

Both young ladies, however, believe that they have hit upon a happy solution, so far as the picture fans are concerned, in being designated in the cast of the productions in which they appear as plain Marion and Madeline and not as the "Fairbanks Twins."

"The Answer," a two-reel production to be released by Mutual shortly, will be the first in which they will be represented in the cast as Madeline and Marion Fairbanks, and not as the "Fairbanks Twins."

Kalem Signs Ivy Close

International Stage Star Will Sail on May 13 to Take Up Screen Work Here.

FOLLOWING the exclusive news in last week's Moving Picture World that Miss Ivy Close, the English stage star, recently announced as a recruit to moving pictures, had been caught in the whirl of events incident to the Irish rebellion, the Kalem Company on Saturday made public a letter from the player telling of her safe arrival in England. With the publication of the letter the news leaked out, of course, that Kalem had secured the star's services for the screen.

Miss Close will sail for America on May 13. According to the terms of her contract she is bound to sail on a boat flying the American flag, which makes necessary the delay until Saturday for the American Line steamer St. Louis. Reservations had been originally booked on the liner Finland, when Miss Close was delayed in Dublin.

Ivy Close.

While no definite announcement has been made as to Kalem's plans for presenting the famous beauty on the screen, Mr. Wright, of Kalem, was emphatic in his declaration last week that she would be featured in one-reel subjects. "Since our practice of putting our strongest efforts into the short subjects is well known," he declared. "It may be expected that Miss Close will be seen in the short lengths. We made an innovation in presenting such a high-salaried star as Rose Melville in single reel Sis Hopkin's comedies, but the overwhelming success of the plan makes it certain that the large figures of Miss Close's contract will not cause us to abandon our loyalty to the short subject."

It would seem from the letter received by Kalem from Miss Close that she had the British war censor in mind when treating of the exciting days of Ireland's short-lived rebellion. "For several years," she writes, "I have been putting off my first trip to America because of one business arrangement or another on this side of the water, and now, when everything seemed settled it looked for a time as though Fate was going to step in and take a hand in stopping me. There wasn't a hint or sign of trouble when I set out for Kingstown for a farewell visit to my estate and even when I returned to Dublin on my way back to London everything seemed perfect. Then the storm broke. I can't tell you much of what happened after that, but I can assure you that for two days it took considerable courage to venture out into the streets. I made three attempts and I do believe I have three gray hairs to remember them by."

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

GET TOGETHER WITH SOUTH AMERICA.

Exhibitors of Southern Countries Desire American Pictures, Says A. W. Conklin—Appreciate Spanish Edition of Moving Picture World.

THE Los Angeles Office has received an interesting letter from Mr. A. W. Conklin, who is living at present in Balboa Heights, Canal Zone, right beside our big Panama Canal. He is a scenario writer and author and is interested in the great industry. He says: "I feel very closely allied to the business and I do want to see the American films get some of this trade which heretofore has gone to Europe.

"The business men of South America do not mind paying for what they want, provided they get what they ask for. Some business houses in the States seem to think they can unload their surplus stock on South America and get away with it. Perhaps they can, once or twice, but they lose out in the long run. As for the moving picture business, in which we are both interested, I am sure the results would be very gratifying to both sides if the producer in the North and the exhibitor in the South would get each other's views on the subject. Now that the World is putting out a Spanish edition I strongly urge that it get the ideas of what the States' exchanges will do in the way of credits. I believe I am correct when I say the South American merchant wants long time credit. I believe I am also correct in stating that with very few exceptions, all notes are promptly paid when due. The people of South America are not so full of 'pep,' as we of the North understand the word. They may seem a little slow; it is because they want to be careful. I have come in contact with many business men and have always found them courteous, anxious to please and willing to accept advice. 'Show me' is their motto.

"Wrote your New York Office today to send me one of their new 'Cine Mundial.' This is something these South American countries have needed for a long time, and now that Europe is practically out of the market there is no reason why the 'Gringo' should not get some of the trade. One thing the trade must learn and that is, business men in South America will not accept anything that is sent them. They don't mind paying for what they want, but they certainly insist on getting what they ask for."

WANT TO BUY EDUCATIONAL FILMS.

Director of Visual Education of Los Angeles City and County Desires Information on Educational Subjects.

The following letter was received from H. S. Upjohn, who is the visual education director here. It is of interest to many and is given below:

Seventh Floor, Hall of Records, Los Angeles, Cal.

Mr. Clarke Irvine, Moving Picture World, 305 Hass Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Sir:

Under the control of the office of the County Superintendent of Schools a bureau has been established in Los Angeles for the purpose of promoting projection work and other visual aids to instruction in the schools of Los Angeles City and county.

We are interested in the purchase, lease or rental of films which are adaptable to educational purposes. We wish especially to collect a library of films in length of from 300 feet to 1,200 feet which are printed on acetate cellulose stock. The subject matter treated in these films must be such as to admit of close correlation with the usual class-room work.

Films which are clear and accurate and which relate to science, history, current events, established drama, civics, sociology, geography, travel, life and customs in foreign lands, animal and bird life, plant life and growth, lives of eminent men, stories with strong lessons but free from crudeness of plot and of photography, microscopic films, if good, etc., etc., are such as will interest us deeply.

Your aid in making this endeavor successful is most courteously solicited. The work is a public effort and relates to the adaptation of the film to the work of the public school. If our effort fails it will be a serious set-back to the whole prospect of the success of this idea, as we are being watched from many corners of the Union. There is no commercial element involved. Your counsel and co-operation will mean everything to the future of the movement. Yours very truly,

H. S. UPJOHN,

Director of Visual Education, Los Angeles City and County.

With other cities following Los Angeles in this campaign for better and more complete educational systems, and several towns buying projectors, it seems that this communication ought to be a profitable tip.

PHOTOPLAYERS 1916 BALL.

Annual Event to Be Held at San Diego Exposition—Several Hundred to Attend.

This year, as there is no Photoplay Club, the filmsters of the West Coast are to hold the former annual affair in San Diego at the Cristobal Cafe at the Exposition on the evening of May 6, and more than two hundred players will arrive in a special train from Los Angeles. Some of the greatest actors and actresses in America who are now appearing before the camera, will take part in "Movie Day" at the Exposition.

The grand march will be led by Dustin Farnum and Miss San Diego. Immediately after them will come Miss Edna Goodrich and one of the executives of the Exposition. Celebrated directors will put on scenes during the day. Many of the stars will entertain.

Myrtle Stedman, the "songbird of the pictures," and Ruth Roland, will sing at the organ Sunday, May 7.

For the night of May 6 the Cristobal will be turned over to the photoplayers. Boxes will be built upon the floor and a star will be in each, accompanied by citizens of San Diego. Each box will be named after the star who occupies it. There will be special decorations at the Cristobal and many novelties offered for the entertainment of the guests.

Among the producers who will be seen at work will be Eddie Dillon, who will feature Fay Tincher and other Griffith stars in scenes. Hobart Bosworth will put on a big scene for the picture he is directing. The Nestor Comedy Company with Al Christie will move its entire personnel to San Diego for the day.

Dustin Farnum says he will do anything for San Diego but make a speech.

In addition to the special train which will bring two hundred, many will arrive on other trains and scores are planning to motor down. The following photoplayers and producers have positively decided to make the trip:

FILMSTERS AID EAGLES.

Mayor, City Officials and Stars from Stage and Filmland Take Part.

Selig's big zoo was crowded with men, women and children who frisked and frolicked in the sunshine Sunday afternoon, and enjoyed the excellent program of entertainment provided by the Boosters' Club at the Eagles' picnic. The picnic was designed to raise funds for the entertainment of the delegates and visitors to the state convention of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, to be held in San Diego on May 22.

Mayor C. E. Sebastian, City Prosecutor James Warren Williams, Justice J. W. Summerfield, Judge Thomas P. White, Judge Griffith Jones of the sunrise court, C. E. Rice, Mayor Ed. Gerety of Venice, Charlie Murray, the comedian and film star of Keystone; Mabel Normand, now with Ince's forces, De Wolf Hopper, from Griffith's, and Anita King, Lasky Paramount star, were among those who took part in the entertainment.

"CIVILIZATION" FOR BROADWAY.

Thomas H. Ince's Peace Drama Will Soon Open in New York—George Beban to Be Manager.

Preliminary plans were launched this week for the New York premiere of "Civilization," Thomas H. Ince's great spectacular peace drama, which is now playing to capacity house at the Majestic theater in Los Angeles.

It is not yet announced in what theater the big film will be shown, but we understand that Mr. Ince is negotiating for one of the largest and most popular playhouses on Broadway.

We are also informed that George Beban, the well-known actor will assume the role of manager. Mr. Beban has long been an intimate friend of Mr. Ince, under whose personal direction he worked in two well-known photoplays, "The Italian" and "An Alien." He has demonstrated in more than one instance that he is well equipped to guide the destiny of a production like "Civilization" and particularly his successful management of a year ago at Los Angeles theater of "The Sign of the Rose," later changed to "An Alien." This unique combination of silent and spoken drama made by Mr. Ince was one of the great successes last year and in addition to the distinction of being the star, Mr. Beban shouldered a generous share of the responsibility of the business management of this play.

Mr. Beban is now in New York representing Mr. Ince and consummating the deal for the lease of a theater. When this deal is closed preparations will immediately be put under way for what is expected to be one of the most pretentious film premieres the eastern metropolis has even seen. The presentation will be accompanied by the same elaborate stage settings and musical score that characterized its debut in Los Angeles.

SIGNAL PLAYERS TO MAKE TRIP TO THE ORIENT.

Combining business with pleasure, Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan and their company of Signal players are soon to leave the Los Angeles studios for a trip to the Orient, the trip to serve in the double capacity of vacation after the strenuous work of producing "The Girl and the Game" serial and the later feature, "Whispering Smith," and to enable them to secure the necessary boat scenes and exteriors in Honolulu for the production of a five-reel feature, "The Diamond Runners," which Mr. McGowan and Miss Holmes are at present putting into scenario form.

The party is to leave Los Angeles on May 17. They will take passage at San Francisco and go direct to Honolulu, where they will stop for some time to make exterior scenes. It has not yet been decided whether or not the company will continue to Japan and the Philippines, but it is likely that they will visit either one or the other of those two places before returning to the studios.

Those who will make the trip besides Miss Holmes and Mr. McGowan, include Chance Ward, Paul C. Hurst, Thomas G. Lingham and Mrs. Lingham, Leo D. Maloney, William Brunton, S. A. Sues, the cameraman, and a staff of propertymen and assistants. A set of lights will be taken along to facilitate the making of scenes on ship-board and in real locations on the islands.

Before leaving Los Angeles, it is Mr. McGowan's intention to make a number of exterior scenes of the action that is supposed to take place in the Kimberly mines. The party will be away something over a month, working by easy stages towards the completion of the five-reel story of adventure.

ETHEL MARTIN KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT.

From Santa Barbara we learn the sad news that Miss Ethel M. Martin, stenographer for the American Film Company, was instantly killed Friday morning last week when a machine in which she was riding plunged from the San Marcos grade, a few miles beyond the Flying "A" studios. Nathan P. Oakes, a scenario writer for the American, who was driving, was thrown from the machine as it left the road, and escaped with slight bruises about the face.

Oakes says that he was crowded from the road by another machine, which was ascending at a rapid rate of speed. The two machines met at the beginning of what is called the "double S," one of the worst places on the San Marcos. Seeing the car rapidly approaching, Oakes turned as far to the right as he could, and was hugging the edge of the highway, when the other car shot by. He believes that the car struck the rear of his machine, for as it went by he heard a crash, and the next instant he realized his own car was hurtling over the grade. He was shot through the air, and as he struck the road he caught sight of his car rolling down the mountain.

The accident happened so suddenly that there was not even time for an outcry. He could see the form of his companion being thrown about by the car as it rolled down the bank, but, he says, that she uttered no call, and when he reached her she was pinned under the wreckage and unconscious. He was sure she was dead.

After vainly endeavoring to release her from the wreck, Oakes climbed back to the road, and ran for half a mile for help. He met a machine, the occupants hurrying to his aid. They raised the lifeless body from the wreck, and carried it to the roadway, a telephone message being sent to town for physicians and an ambulance.

It was found that Miss Martin was badly cut and bruised, both legs and arms being broken, and internal injuries resulting, which were the direct cause of death. It is believed that she died before the machine stopped rolling down the mountain.

Miss Martin had resided in Santa Barbara for several months, making her home with her brother and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Martin, at 1435 Bath street. The brother is employed as a painter at the American studios. The remains will probably be sent to the home of the young woman's parents in Massachusetts.

JOHNNIE BRENNAN, PRODUCER.

A moving picture has been made by John E. Brennan, former star comedian with Kalem when Ruth Roland was being featured as a comedian. He has completed a film of Santa Monica that will reel around the country with publicity for the November road race and attractions of home life there in summer and winter.

The pictures, to be shown, include views of ocean front scenes in action, as well as the races, race drivers and the big crowds that line the course for all the speed events.

An exhibition for city officials, officers and directors of the Santa Monica chamber of commerce and the press will be arranged soon.

Following that the pictures will be sent on their way around the country. Mr. Brennan states that they will be shown in every city in the country large enough to boast a moving picture show house.

MOTHERS UPHOLD PICTURES.

Opening the fifth annual convention of the Los Angeles District California Congress of Mothers, with praise for the encampment at Monterey in June, and a little informal talk on preparedness, Mrs. Frances Richardson Chamberlain led the flag salute in which two hundred women attending the convention at Blanchard hall participated this week.

Long before the doors of the convention hall were opened women were discussing the report concerning motion pictures which had been read at the State Federation of Women's Clubs in Del Monte, in which it was stated that motion pictures were to be condemned because they were not an educational force.

Groups of women planned at once to refute the report.

Mrs. E. H. Noe for two years censor of motion pictures for the P. T. A., and chairman of the committee which controlled the famous "White List" upon which were the names of houses which showed pictures beneficial to youth, was working strenuously today to draw up a resolution to not only present to the congress of mothers, but also to be sent to the federation in Del Monte.

Dr. Jessie Russell, one of the best known club women in the state agreed with Mrs. Noe.

Mrs. M. E. Hutchinson of Glendale was another well known woman who felt that the convention should take some action against the Del Monte report.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Five companies from the Arts studios are to go to New York this month, where they will work in the local studio. John Emerson, the producer, left on Saturday last week for the east, where he will direct Douglas Fairbanks in a new picture.

Two-reel photoplays in addition to the regular five-reel releases will from now on be produced at the Fine Arts studios. These two-reel subjects will be issued at spaced intervals as a regular part of the Triangle program and each play will present one of the prominent Fine Arts stars. The same directors who have been staging the five-reel features will take turns in making these two-reelers.

They will be staged with the same care that is given the five-reel productions.

The insistent demand from exhibitors for additional good two-reel pictures prompted the Fine Arts studios to adopt this new policy.

It is the intention of the Fine Arts Film Co. to select light comedy dramas to serve as the basis of these two-reel plays.

Five new Triangle plays have now been completed at Hollywood studios of the Fine Arts Film Company and will soon be announced for release on the Triangle program. They are: DeWolf Hopper in a picturization of "Casey at the Bat," supported by Marguerite Marsh, Frank Bennett, Kate Toncray, William H. Brown, Carl Stockdale and Loyola O'Connor. Lillian Gish in a Kentucky story, by Granville Warwick, supported by Sam de Grasse, Mary Alden, Spottiswoode Aitken, Jennie Lee and William De Vaull.

Douglas Fairbanks in "The Assassin," his associates in the cast includeing A. D. Sears, Jewell Carmen, Wilbur Highby, Margie Wilson and W. E. Lawrence. Norma Talmadge in "Going Straight," supported by Ralph Lewis, Eugene Pallette and Kate Toncray. The fifth Triangle production is a pictureplay featuring Mae Marsh, Robert Harron and Wilfred Lucas.

Fay Tincher is starting rehearsals this week on a two-reel Fine Arts comedy under direction of Edward Dillon. She will play the part of a rather fresh, but human shop girl. The story is laid in a modern atmosphere with very amusing and clever situations, and this popular comedianne will have many opportunities for good acting. The supporting cast will include Max Davidson, Edward Dillon and Jack Cosgrove. Miss Tincher has just returned from a short vacation and is in splendid shape to resume her film work.

Dorothy Gish will shortly appear in a new Triangle play to be directed by co-producers, C. M. and S. A. Franklin. The story was written by Frank E. Woods, manager of Fine Arts productions, and Bernard McConville, author of Dorothy Gish's latest play, "Susan Rocks the Boat." Elmer Clifton will play the opposite lead and Josephine Crowell, Jack Brunnell, Hal Wilson and G. M. Blue will be included in the cast.

Miss Gish has a number of very emotional scenes as a young and pretty school teacher, when the school board dismisses her for an act of which she is entirely innocent. The children in her class include a number of the Fine Arts juvenile players who scored such a hit in "Let Hattie Do It," and with Norman Talmadge in "The Children of the House."

Lillian Gish will be directed in her next Triangle play by William Christie Cabanne, who directed her in "Daphne and the Pirate" and "Sold for Marriage." This will make the fifth play Lillian Gish has appeared in on the Triangle Program.

Chester Withey, of the Fine Arts studios, has been promoted to director and his first story will be "The Dope Fiend," of which he and Roy Summerville are the co-authors. The cast will include Norma Talmadge, Tully Marshall and Marguerite Marsh.

The big exhibit of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce left for the New York exposition on Friday last wek. Arthur W. Kinney, Industrial Commissioner who is in charge, expects to meet manufacturers in various lines while in the East.

Kolb & Dill, the German comedians, are to continue their work before the camera. We are informed that they have closed a deal with the Mutual to furnish comedy releases. They will probably locate at Santa Barbara.

The Goodfellow Association of the American Film Company will give another one of its successful dances in the big glass studio of the "Flying A" plant, Friday evening, May 5. The purpose of this dance, as well as the others, is to obtain funds to carry on the good fellowship and benevolent work of the organization.

A specifice instance of the good work of the association was demonstrated recently when the child of one of the "Flying A" cowboys died. The family was in urgent need of funds and the association paid the bills incurred for medical treatment and undertaker's expenses.

The association has purchased and erected a tombstone to mark the grave of Leslie Reed, who met a tragic death several months ago during the production of a picture.

Wallace McDonald, director with the American Film Company, will leave soon to visit his mother in Halifax. Mr. McDonald will spend some time in the north and east, and will probably return here in about six months.

Harry Williams, song writer and member of the musical staff of the Keystone Film Company, was operated on for appendicitis Thursday last week. His physician reports he is doing nicely.

Film Men Discuss State Censorship

At Noonday Gathering—Representatives of Prominent Firms Make Final Plans to Protest Against New York Bill.

TWENTY-SIX prominent men of the film industry met at luncheon at Delmonico's on Monday, May 8, to perfect plans for the protest to Governor Whitman of New York against the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill. Practically all of the larger film concerns were represented, the exceptions, the General Film and the Mutual, being accounted for by personal messages from their heads. One of the indications that the meeting was unprecedented in its comprehensiveness was the "meeting up" of J. Stuart Blackton and Edwin Thanhouser. It was the first time the two manufacturers had met. Jesse L. Lasky, just arrived in New York from the coast, also for the first time met several of his competitors. The gathering was the result of the initiative of J. Robert Rubin, counsel for the Exhibitors' League; Arthur S. Friend, John C. Flinn and Arthur James.

Mr. Rubin was chosen as the head of the forces that will leave New York at 8.45 on the morning of May 11 to call on the governor. Bainbridge Colby, Martin W. Littleton and Cranston Brenton of the Board of Review also will make addresses. Others on the special committee are William A. Brady, William M. Seabury, Arthur S. Friend, Walter Seligsberg, and Lee Ochs. Among those who also were present at the luncheon were Walter W. Irwin, J. A. Berst, Adolph Zukor, E. A. McManus, Richard A. Rowland, Samuel Goldfish, J. C. Myers and Fred J. Herrington, president of the National exhibitors.

There was an informal discussion of state censorship. When Federal bills cropped up there was agreement to stick to the big issue and let nothing befog it.

Commodore Blackton took occasion to remark that the Board of Trade would be glad to have in its ranks every company represented around the table; that the board wanted their co-operation. He said the members of the board were going to stick, to battle for the industry as a whole.

It is expected the party going to Albany on Thursday will comprise 150 men.

Exhibitors to Have Show at Hippodrome

New York City Locals and Actors' Fund to Share in Proceeds of Entertainment in Which Screen Stars Will Aid.

THE organized exhibitors of New York City, comprising the locals in Manhattan, Brooklyn and The Bronx, have arranged a benefit performance at the New York Hippodrome for the evening of Sunday, May 21. A portion of the receipts going to the picture men will be turned over to the Actors' Fund. Assisting in the entertainment will be practically all of the screen stars in the East. The Hippodrome will contribute several of the best numbers from its regular program. These will include Sousa's Band, the skating scene and the Ladder of Roses. The exhibitors will devote their portion of the receipts to fighting antagonistic legislation. The Board of Trade has contributed a booth at its exposition for the purpose of aiding the Hippodrome show.

A committee of motion picture directors has been selected. Each director will choose from his own company those players who in his judgment will best shine on the legitimate stage. To R. H. Burnside, general state director of the Dillingham enterprises, the members of the committee will make recommendations as to the particular things their players should do.

The directors' committee includes Ralph Ince, Vitagraph; Fred Thomson, Famous Players; John Ince, Fox; Joe Smiley, Screen Club; Maurice Tourneur, Paragon; Herbert Brenon, Fox; Barry O'Neill, Peerless; Edwin Carewe, Metro; Henry Otto, Universal, and Ivan Abramson, Ivan.

Metro Plans for Summer

Metro to Star Irene Fenwick in "The Purple Lady"—Mabel Taliaferro Signs Long Time Contract—Viola Dana Begins Her First Production.

METRO'S early summer announcement includes plans for the production of many elaborate features and the engagement of new talent, including Irene Fenwick, the popular stage and screen star, who will begin immediately upon a series of Metro wonderplays. Ralph Herz, one of the foremost comedians in the country, is also a new member of the Metro family and will appear with Miss Fenwick in all her productions.

The first production in which Miss Fenwick will be starred on the Metro program is "The Purple Lady." This five-part feature was written by Sydney Rosenfeld, the well known playwright. All the Fenwick screen plays will be produced under the supervision of Edwin Carewe.

Mabel Taliaferro, who has appeared on the Metro program in "The Snowbird" and "Her Great Price," two five-part productions that have been pronounced artistic triumphs, has signed a long time contract with Metro which insures her appearance in at least eleven big productions on that program. She will begin work on the first one immediately, which will be called, "The Good Little Bad Girl." This feature was written especially for Miss Taliaferro, and gives the fullest range to her supreme versatility.

Edwin Carewe will personally direct all of the Taliaferro productions. He produced both "Her Great Price" and "The Snowbird" for the Metro program.

Another important addition to the long list of Metro stars who will begin work on her first production is Viola Dana, formerly of the Edison forces. She will make her debut on the Metro program in "The Flower of No Man's Land." This feature was written by John Collins, who will also direct its production. Mr. Collins is one of the ablest of the younger directors, and produced all of Miss Dana's features at the Edison studio.

Among the notable Metro productions of the year will be the pretentious six-part feature, "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the stellar roles. This production will be made apropos of the Shakespearian tercentenary, which is being celebrated throughout the civilized world. Within a short time Metro will make an additional important announcement regarding the program planned for the presentation of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne on the Metro program. This announcement, it is predicted, will prove something of a sensation among exhibitors and photoplaygoers everywhere.

The scenario department, under the direction of Arthur James, has been enlarged considerably. The staff includes Harry O. Hoyt, Charles W. Taylor, Howard Irving Young, L. R. Stark, Leander de Cordova, and others engaged in reading scripts and rewriting scenarios. On account of the high class material demanded for the Metro-Drew one-reel weekly comedies, produced by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, difficulty has been experienced in obtaining manuscripts for them. They are always in the market for good, live, clever and wholesome comedies, and the top price is being paid for them.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison have begun work on their second Metro wonderplay. The previously announced name of the production, "The Night Rider," has been changed to "The Masked Rider." The exteriors for this feature are being made in the hills of North Carolina under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer. The two stars have a strong supporting company including Lester Cuneo, the well known heavy leading man.

Lionel Barrymore, whose next production, "Dorian's Divorce," is scheduled for release on the Metro program June 5, is also engaged on a new production, "The Quitter," which is novel in both theme and production. This five-part feature is being produced under the direction of Charles Horan. Mme. Petrova, who has just completed "The Scarlet Woman," is at work on a new five-part production which will likely be called "Dress." Marguerite Snow and Director William Nigh are the stars of "Notorious Gallagher," a unique story of the slums and the upper crusts of society, written and directed by Mr. Nigh. It will be an early release on the Metro program.

Edmund Breese, who has just completed "The Spell of the Yukon," will begin work shortly on another big five part feature, based upon another poem by Robert W. Service, the "Kipling of the North." Some time during the early summer Metro will put into production elaborate picturizations of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's greatest poems. Metro has exclusive rights to all her writings and they will be adapted for the screen by Charles A. Taylor.

Coming "Social Pirate"

"Sauce for the Gander," "The Missing Millionaire" and "Unmasking a Rascal" to Be Released May 15, 22 and 29, Respectively.

ON MONDAY, May 15, Kalem will release "Sauce for the Gander," the eighth episode in the fifteen week series. The story provided by George Bronson Howard for this episode finds the girls dealing justice to an unscrupulous loan shark and his worthless son. Father and son are played against each other so as to make a story that presents an admirable blend of comedy and drama.

This element of comedy found in the George Bronson Howard stories has been the cause of much of the praise received by Kalem officials. The series has shown that it is possible to blend a delightful touch of satire and comedy without sacrificing the strength of the dramatic moments.

"The Missing Millionaire" is the ninth release in the series, being scheduled for Monday, May 22. A wealthy munitions manufacturer, played by Frank Jonasson, is the center of the unusually timely story. The millionaire has become interested in the girls' plans for social reforms so that when he is spirited away by the machinations of rival stock brokers the heroines take up the task of solving the mystery.

Monday, May 29, will mark the release of "Unmasking a Rascal," the tenth episode in Kalem's series, "The Social Pirates," leaving that series five more weeks to run. "Unmasking a Rascal" presents Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby in unusually strong roles as the heroines of the George Bronson Howard series, with Frank Jonasson in the principal male role.

Jonasson is seen as a bank official who has succeeded in defrauding his ward and is apparently beyond reach of the law. But the two girls have their pity aroused for the ward and they set about to win her inheritance back by means of their own. They find a stern antagonist in the banker, however, and are put to severe measures before they finally emerge successful.

V-L-S-E SALES FORCE MEET.

A special meeting of the members of the V-L-S-E sales forces of the New York and Syracuse Exchanges was held at the home office of the organization last week. It was attended by executives of the various departments and presided over by General Manager Walter W. Irwin.

The meeting had for its object the discussion of the trade conditions in general, the outlining in detail of the organization's policies, and the airing of timely suggestions looking toward increased efficiency in dealing with the requirements of the Big Four exhibitors.

The reports of the representatives present furnished conclusive evidence that the open booking system and the box office value method of renting features, as evolved and put into practice by the Big Four, are two policies daily gaining increased favor with exhibitors throughout the country, who are realizing that the most equitable plan for the marketing of features is to book them on each film's individual merit, and pay for them according to that merit.

New Vitagraph Releases

A Blue Ribbon, a Broadway Star Feature and Three Comedies on the Program for Week of May 15.

DURING the week of May 15 Vitagraph offers a well-balanced program of exceptional merit. "The Ordeal of Elizabeth," the five-part Blue Ribbon Feature of the week, produced from the book of the same name, is the leader of the collection which includes four other subjects of high quality.

Lillian Walker as the country girl is supported by Evart Overton, who is seen as a millionaire clubman. Denton Vane, Scene from "The Ordeal of Elizabeth" (Vitagraph).

L. Rogers Lytton, Ollie Walker, Karin Norman and Walter MacGrail make up the balance of a very capable cast. The story was produced under the direction of Wilfrid North.

In "Kernel Nutt Wins a Wife," Frank Daniels conducts a matrimonial agency. The story is from the pen of Reginald Wright Kaufman and was filmed under the supervision of C. Jay Williams. Alice Washburn and Adele de Garde assist Mr. Daniels in its enactment.

William Dangman in "A Lucky Tumble" takes a fall from grace by falling behind in his board bill. Frank Currier directed the action of the play. Lucille Crane, Florence Natol, George O'Donnell and William Lytell, Jr., do some good work. On this same reel are shown some wonderful scenes of Iceland.

"More Money Than Manners" is by C. Graham Baker and Lawrence Semon, showing the experiences of the Oodles family and their attempt to break through society's upper crust. John T. Kelly, Jewell Hunt, Kate Price and Hughie Mack are the chief funmakers. Semon also directed the production.

In "Miss Adventure," the Broadway Star Feature of the week, Mary Anderson plays the part of a capricious young miss. This comedy was filmed by William Wolbert at Vitagraph's western studio. Webster Campbell is seen as the beau.

LOCAL LIFE FILMS POPULAR.

With James White as president and Charles M. Seay as general manager, the Local Life Film Corporation is being given liberal support by the press, public and exhibitors of New England, where an energetic campaign is being conducted by T. O. Eltonhead, a newspaper man of long experience, who resigned from the Dramatic Mirror to handle the publicity of the new concern. The leading newspapers of cities such as Hartford and Springfield are devoting pages to advertising contests for the choice of amateur playes to appear in pictures made by Mr. Seay and his associates. In the Bronx and other places this plan has proved a remarkable circulation builder and exhibitors have found the Local Life films to be an unparalleled attraction.

EDISON COMPANY BACK FROM DESERT.

With the swollen tongue of the desert; with sun-scorched faces, necks and noses; with silver sand of Long Island in their hair, ears and teeth, a company of Edison players have returned from Amagansett, L. I., where Director Frank Smithson filmed scenes for the two-reel comedy, "The Salvation of Dan Packard," by Peter B. Kyne, featuring the well-known and rotund Otis Harlan. The company included William Wadsworth, Ray McKee, Marcia Harris, Frank Cummings, James Ramsey and Albert Kelley.

At Santa Barbara

American Studios Prepare Reception for Mary Miles Minter and Richard Bennett—Other Activities.

EXTENSIVE preparations are under way at the American Mutual studios in Santa Barbara for the reception of Mary Miles Minter and Richard Bennett, recently signed by President S. Hutchinson to star in features to be released exclusively by Mutual. Mr. Bennett, according to announcement made by him a few days ago, will leave New York for the Coast just as soon as his engagement with the "Rio Grande" company at the Empire Theater is brought to an end. Just when this will be is still indefinite. It was stated, however, that Mr. Bennett will be able to leave for Santa Barbara some time during the last week in May.

"I'm anxious to get back to picture work," said Mr. Bennett, "and will leave for the American studios just as soon as my engagement with 'Rio Grande' terminates. I am a great believer of the motion pictures, and realize the vast opportunities picture work affords an earnest and conscientious player.

"Just what the productions are that Mr. Hutchinson also has in view for me I do not know at this time. I understand, however, that the scenarios for several of them are now well under way. Mr. Hutchinson also told me that I was to have my own company of players, especially chosen from the great array of talent now employed at the American studios. However, all these details are in the hands of Mr. Hutchinson."

Miss Minter has completed all arrangements for her departure for Santa Barbara. She will be accompanied by her mother, Charlotte Shelby, a noted instructor in literary and dramatic art. As yet, the feature productions in which Miss Minter is to star have not been titled. Several are now in the course of preparation at the American-Mutual studios. Like Mr. Bennett, Miss Minter will be supported by an especially selected company of players chosen personally by President Hutchinson.

Miss Minter will play a big part in the selection of the roles she is to assume under the auspices of the American-Mutual forces. It is known that among the features scheduled for her is one by a noted scenario writer, in which she will essay a part she has never before attempted in studio work. All the feature productions starring Mr Bennett and Miss Minter will be released in five reels.

Audrey Munson, the artist's model, who has been engaged by the American-Mutual studios, is now at work on her first release. As yet it has not been titled. Miss Munson will be seen in an exceptionally interesting role, quite unlike anything ever attempted in motion picture production. Some of the lighting effects used in the staging of this feature are exceptionally novel.

The production starring Miss Munson is being filmed on an elaborate scale, regardless of expense. Mammoth sets predominate throughout. The feature to be released exclusively through Mutual will be in seven acts. This will be Miss Munson's second appearance as a featured star in Mutual features, her first being as the heroine of "Inspiration," a five-act masterpicture, filmed at the Thanhouser studios.

Helen Holmes, fourth of the stars whose engagement was recently announced by President Hutchinson, has all but completed her work in "Whispering Smith," a forthcoming American-Mutual feature, released in five acts. In this production, based on Frank H. Spearman's popular story of the same name, Miss Holmes is playing the chief supporting role to J. P. McGowan, who is staging as well as playing the title role.

Immediately upon the conclusion of her work in "Whispering Smith" Miss Holmes will begin the filming of her first feature production, title of which has not yet been announced.

In order to handle the companies selected to appear in support of the four new stars corralled by President Hutchinson, two additional stages will be built at the mammoth plant in Santa Barbara. Carpenters, electricians and others have already begun work.

The directors who will supervise the work of the new features starring Miss Minter, Mr. Bennett and Miss Holmes have not as yet been named.

WALTHAL BACK FROM VACATION.

Henry B. Walthal has just returned to the Essanay Studios in Chicago from the Coast, where he has been taking a month's vacation after completing his work in the fifteen episode series, "The Strange Case of Mary Page." Essanay's leading man soon will begin on another feature play, the title of which soon will be announced. It will be a theme which gives him ideal opportunities.

Universal Program

"Peg o' the Ring" Opens the Week of May 22, and Many Other Good Subjects Follow.

OF COURSE by far and away the biggest feature of the Universal program for the week of May 22d is "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," with Francis Ford and Grace Cunard in the leads. Episode four was made partly in Universal City, Cal., and partly in New York, where Miss Cunard obtained some wonderful new gowns for the play and where Mr. Ford completed arrangements with some big circus people regarding the sensational "big top" scenes included in the serial.

On Monday, May 22, King Baggot will be featured with Edna Hunter and Clara Beyers supporting in the five-reel Red Feather production, "Half a Rogue," upon which Mr. Baggot has been working for some time. Special posters will be issued with this Red Feather feature, including two six sheets with four-sheet streamers to be used for combination sixteen-sheets or separately in addition to the regular two three sheets, two one sheets and window cards. On the same day's program Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Betty Compson will cavort about in the Nestor comedy, "Her Celluloid Hero," a romance of filmdom.

On the following day the feature will be "The Woman Who Followed Me," a two-reel comedy drama released under the Gold Seal brand and featuring Juan de la Cruz and Gladys Brockwell. On the same day Cleo Madison will appear, supported by Edward Hearn, in the Rex drama, "Virginia," which, as its name implies, is a sterling feature of the Southland of unusually high quality. And just to make the day's program an A-1 tip-topper no less a personage than Bernard McFadden, of physical culture fame, will appear with Allen Holubar in a strong-arm light comedy, "The Health Road," which will have the brand burned into it. This release is an unusual feature and arrangements have been made to show it in gymnasiums and Y. M. C. A. auditoriums all over the country where Mr. McFadden is known.

Mary Fuller leads off the program of Wednesday, May 24th, in "The Limousine Mystery," a two-reel drama to be released under the Victor brand, which relates an intensely absorbing story of a murder which is not solved until the last fifty feet of film is flashed on the screen. "The Limousine Mystery" is followed by the L-Ko comedy, "A Busted Honeymoon," in which Alice Howell and Ray Griffith do the bustin'. On the same day Universal photo fans will get their first glimpse of Animated Weekly No. 21, which Editor Jack Cohn says in a hummer for hot-stuff news events.

On May 25th Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson, will put on the two-reel Big U rural Decoration Day drama, "Corporal Billy's Comeback," which catches at one's heartstrings at the same time it brings the laughs. An unusually interesting Powers split reel follows "Corporal Billy's Comeback." In the first part the amusing cartoon character "Mr. Fuller Pep" dabbles around in a pond in mirth-provoking fashion and when his five hundred feet are done dainty Little Lena Baskette, "Pavlowa, Jr.," is presented in a group of classic dances. Don't miss little brown-eyed Miss Baskette—she's the "charmingest" and most talented juvenile actress in the entire Universal organization at Universal City.

"The Unconventional Girl," a two-reel society drama, will be released under the Imp brand as the feature of the day's program on Friday, May 26. Edith Roberts and Joe Gerard play the leading roles in this drama of an unconventional girl, who does some unconventional things, but finally forces her tempter to make good his misdeeds. On the same day Ben Wilson, with Dorothy Phillips, appear in a dainty little Rex comedy, "Harmony in a Flat," which deals in the main with the troubles of a couple of newlyweds in a Harlem bird-cage "apartment."

Another comedy, "Love and Brass Buttons," will be released on the same day under the Nestor brand, with Ray Gallagher and Billie Rhodes in the fun-making roles.

On May 27th Harry D. Carey and Olive Golden appear in "The Wedding Guest," a two-reel western drama of unusual plot and situations, while "Storming the Trenches," a Powers comedy, and "A Stage Villain," a Joker comedy, featuring William Franey and Gale Henry, closes the day's selection of pictures.

Ben Wilson, supported by Dorothy Phillips, appears in a timely three-reel special Southern Decoration Day drama, "A Gentle Volunteer," on Sunday, May 28. This feature deals with miscegenation and hinges on the adoption of an apparently white octoroon girl into an old Southern family in civil war times. It is the sort of a play that exhibitors like to book three days in succession. Just to finish up the day with a laugh, the L-Ko-comedy, "Gamboling on the Green," with Gene Rogers, Reggie Morris and Anna Darling doing the gleeful gamboling, follows up "A Gentle Volunteer" and leaves 'em smiling.

Ray Comedies

Johnny and Emma Ray Succumb to the Lure of the Screen.

JOHNNY and Emma Ray, two of the best and most popular fun-makers in America, have entered the field of motion pictures. These monarchs of merriment had been deluged with offers from motion picture companies, but it was not until they had made an exhaustive study of conditions that they succumbed.

The Reserve Photoplays Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, which will have full control of the services of the Rays, is an organization formed by the Rays themselves and a few interested friends, and has for its president Robert H. McLaughlin, author of the "Eternal Magdalene." Johnny Ray is vice-president, while Samuel Doerfler, one of Cleveland's most prominent lawyers and assistant prosecuting attorney, holds down the important office of treasurer.

Very quietly, and without blare of trumpets, the Rays have erected a splendid studio in Cleveland, which, by the way, is their home town. The Ray studio is in every way an ideal one. The equipment is of the very latest. The overhead system of lighting has been adopted and three different sets can be obtained at one time.

In his offices in the Columbia Theater building, Sales Manager C. Lang Cobb, Jr., who needs no introduction, pointed to stacks of requests for the first releases of the new company which he has received. "Outside of Charlie Chaplin," said he, "no comedian ever posed for the screen whose facial comedy, mannerisms and personality have such commercial value as Johnny Ray.

"The first releases of the company will be a series of Casey films, in which this inimitable screen character will be seen as the Fireman, the Bandmaster, the Surgeon, and Casey's Dream, Casey's Luck, Casey's Servants and Casey's Wedding, and these will be followed by 'Down the Pike,' 'A Hot Old Time' and 'Casey's Night Off.'

"These pictures of the Rays are to be festivals of feature fun, fast and frolicsome. Exhibitors will have signs up, 'Abandon gloom, all ye who enter here, and tie your blues outside.'" after which Mr. Cobb turned off his flow of eloquence and returned to business.

V-L-S-E TRAVELING AUDITOR.

In line with its unvarying policy of promotion from the ranks, the V-L-S-E has appointed R. B. Simonson, assistant to A. C. Wyckoff, the auditor of that organization, to the position of traveling auditor. Mr. Simonson has been acting as assistant to A. C. Wyckoff, the chief auditor at the home office of the company, for the past year—or since the formation of the Big Four—and his reputation for accurate and painstaking work, as well as the knowledge he has obtained first-hand of the company's policies and business needs render him peculiarly well fitted for his new post.

Brady-Made Players Busy

Five World Film Companies Actively Engaged in Productions—Four Others Getting Ready.

FIVE playing companies of the World Film Corporation, working under the Brady-Made regime, are away, seeking the elusive local color and atmosphere. Mollie King, Arthur Ashley and a supporting cast of fifteen players under the direction of Edwin August are at Asheville, N. C., where the first co-star picture these two have appeared in, "Contrary Mary," will be staged. The story calls for the rugged scenic surroundings the North Carolina Mountains are noted for, and the site selected is a virgin spot, a few miles up Jobet Canyon, where towering cliffs and abysmal chasms will afford ample scenic sensation for even as vivid a picture as Edwin August contemplates making.

Gail Kane and House Peters are at Washington, D. C., where midst the wondrous Federal Buildings, under Maurice Tourneur's supervision, scenes are being staged for the forthcoming production of "The Velvet Paw," in which Peters and Miss Kane are co-starring. Consent of the Government was gotten and the White House, Capitol Grounds, interior of the Mint, the Congressional Library and Senatorial Chambers formed settings and backgrounds for a number of novel situations and climaxes in the next Paragon-World feature.

June Elvidge, with a supporting cast and under the guidance of Frank Crane, are aboard a warship bound for Hampton Roads, Virginia, where during the spring maneuvers of the Atlantic Fleet, a number of scenes for use in "Reparation" will be made. Permission of Secretary of the Navy Daniels was gotten, which permits of the company travelling with the fleet at least two weeks and consent to photograph from the decks of torpedo boat destroyers, submarines and battleships was secured.

This will be the first instance wherein a company has been allowed to accompany the squadron during drill and maneuver and the first time actual scenes were made during maneuvers, also the first interior scenes made in a submarine.

For the Holbrook Blinn picture, "The Prima Donna's Husband," in which Clara Whipple and Julius Steger are featured members of the acting cast, the Casino theater at Broadway and 39th street was secured from Messrs. Shuberts, and for the past two weeks, at intervals when the theater is not in use by the "Blue Paradise" Company, scenes requisite to the original scenario are staged with an audience of over six hundred picked people.

Muriel Ostriche and Carlyle Blackwell, playing opposite each other in "Molly o' Pigtail Alley," are enroute to a small city in the Middle West, where the foundation of the play was laid and where, according to the author, every feature, every character and every incident mentioned in the tale can be carried out, because they exist and are lasting features in the section of the town described by the author.

Alice Brady, working under the guidance of Albert Capellani, in "La Boheme," will not have to go out of the city on location work, the entire production having been arranged for at the Paragon Studios or close by.

Robert Warwick, playing in "Friday the 13th," the first film play from the pen of Thomas W. Lawson, the noted financier and fictionist, will work along for several more weeks at the Peerless Studios, then visit the stock exchange at Boston and Chicago, as the story so vividly describes these points, that Mr. Brady deemed it best to work right inside the buildings, rather than attempt to set up duplicates at the studio.

In addition to the companies outlined, four other companies are either assembling or ready to start work at the sign from Mr. Brady, who now gives every detail his personal attention.

V-L-S-E. OPENS ORCHESTRA HALL, CHICAGO.

Orchestra Hall, so long the home of musical devotees in Chicago, has yielded to the lure of the films. The transformation took place Saturday, April 29, when "cinema concerts," consisting of V-L-S-E photoplays, selections by the famous Chicago Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Arthur Dunham, and solos by distinguished singers were given.

The policy of the house will be modelled on similar lines to that in vogue at the New York Strand. Orchestra Hall is one of the handsomest theaters in the country, and possesses, in addition to its numerous attractions, a magnificent organ of wonderful tone and volume of which the Windy City inhabitants are especially proud. That Big Four productions have been selected for the picture program of the hall for its opening film season, is no small compliment to the popularity, artistic qualities and commercial value of the V-L-S-E releases. The first picture shown, was Vitagraph's "The Law Decides," starring Dorothy Kelly.

Paramount Program

The Training of Babies and Policemen, Colonel Heeza Liar and a Railroad Educational Among the Releases for May 21.

PARAMOUNT'S table of contents for its "magazine on the screen," the Pictograph, issued the week of May 21, includes physical training for "Better Babies," "The Making of a Cop," "The Aerial Pocket Camera," a continuation of the "Preparedness" series, "Arm or Surrender," and "The House That Jack Built," showing how a railroad instills the principles of Safety First in its employes.

Nursery adages may be as changeable as the seasons, this release of the Pictograph shows.

How the well trained blue-coated officers are fitted to become guardians of the law is shown in the Pictograph feature. "The House That Jack Built," the Grand Central car equipped with a motion picture machine, which is sent all over the country to instruct railway employes in the fundamentals of the Safety First campaign, is seen too in this release.

Colonel Heeza Liar becomes dissatisfied with the attitude shown toward "Preparedness" throughout the United States in the twenty-first release of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, "Colonel Heeza Liar Captures Villa."

Through the islands of the Phillipine Archipelago to visit Cebu, Iloila and Zamboangu, Burton Holmes journeys in the sixteenth release of the Paramount Burton Holmes Travel Pictures. The journey is made on the Coast Guard Cutter, "Scout," with Uncle Sam as host.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of May 7 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Geraldine Farrar at the Strand.

"MARIA ROSA," a Jesse L. Lasky production, with Geraldine Farrar in the title role, was the week's feature at the Strand theater. The picture was made under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille, Wallace Reid and Pedro de Cordoba, who acted with Miss Farrar in "Carmen," play important roles in the new motion picture.

"Maria Rosa" is a dramatization of what is said to be an actual occurrence in a Spanish province of the Catalonian Mountains, written in Spanish by Angel Grimera. Soloists for the week included William Myers, Miss Emma Ecker, Jan Rubini and Bruce Weyman.

"The Innocent Lie" at the Broadway.

The attraction at the Broadway theater was the latest Famous Players-Paramount photodrama, "The Innocent Lie," by Lois Zeliner. Valentine Grant, the star, portrays the character of Nora O'Brien, a poor Irish emigrant, who comes to America in search of her brother.

It is an interesting story and was filmed under the direction of Sidney Olcott on the beautiful island of Bermuda. The latest weekly news, short comedies, scenics and cartoons completed the program.

Triangle Program at the Rialto.

W. S. Hart was the feature star at the Rialto and was seen in an Indian picture, "The Primal Lure." Mr. Hart plays a taciturn Scot in charge of a lonely Hudson Bay trading post. A little French girl falls in love with him, and a well sustained romance is the result. The star gives his customary excellent performance and is cleverly supported by Margery Wilson, as the French girl. Ford Sterling, Fritz Schade and Mary Manley are the principals in a laughable two-reel Keystone, "The Snow Cure." A trained bear supplies considerable of the action.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater the four latest Triangle features were shown as follows: On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday William Collier in "The No Good Guy." The Triangle-Keystone comedy, "A Dash of Courage," was also on the program. The latter half of the week Douglas Fairbanks was seen in "The Good Bad Man," and the Sennett-Keystone comedy introduced Ford Sterling in "The Snow Cure."

Raver Forms New Company

With Wall Street Interests the Planet Film Corporation Is Launched.

THE Planet Film Corporation, a new million and a half dollar enterprise, organized by A. G. Wheeler, member of the New York Stock Exchange, Harry R. Raver, prominent film producer and John L. Dudley, late of the Citizens' Savings Bank, is gradually assuming proportions. Departmental heads are being selected and plans for early production are being quietly whipped into shape.

The officers of the company are John L. Dudley, president; Harry R. Raver, vice-president and general manager, and A. G. Wheeler, treasurer. The directors are: George S. Brown, Francis R. Masters, Paul E. Razor, Wm. D. Judson, John L. Dudley, A. G. Wheeler, Harry R. Raver.

The company's productions will be staged at the Raver Studios at Rockville Center, Long Island, thirty-six minutes by fast express from the Pennsylvania Station in New York. The studio grounds cover several acres and contain seven buildings, including the studio, the latter measuring 30 by 120 feet.

Output to be Limited.

The Planet will produce popularized plays and books at the rate of one each month. These will be distributed on a yearly contract basis subject to screen examination. Four special productions will also be made each year. The monthly releases will approximate five reels in length while the larger productions will comprise eight reels each.

The contracts of the new company with respect to state rights buyers are to be exceptionally liberal in that no production made by the Planet need be accepted by the buyer if its quality is not up to the standard, and it is the intention of the Planet company to produce a class of production embracing popular stars and plays or popularized books which can be sold at a popular price, the plan of the company being to make its profits on its four important films each year and at the same time utilizing the facilities and working organization for the regular monthly released practically without cost.

Harry R. Raver, who will have charge of the production and exploitation of the Planet output, believes the time has come for a popular priced production released monthly, in which an evenly balanced cast of experienced players appear, headed by a star of prominence. No player will be selected, however, who has not appeared in recognized feature program productions, thus eliminating the one two and three-reel actor of the lower price regular program, not because of his lack of ability but for his lack of prestige.

The Planet plan, as outlined by Mr. Raver, simply means the question of economy along certain lines, and principally in the matter of the expensive "Broadway" star and also the studio overhead. Mr. Raver claims the five thousand dollar a week Broadway star is little known where the greatest picture patronage exists, whereas the road show star is known everywhere and is not so high salaried.

The business departments will be in charge of John L. Dudley and A. G. Wheeler. Mr. Dudley is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and has been identified with many large and important corporations. Mr. Wheeler is a member of the New York Stock Exchange and was the organizer of the Automatic Telephone Company, a rival of the Bell system for many years until recently absorbed by the latter system for a sum said to be six million dollars.

The executive offices of the company are in the Worlds Tower building, New York. This suite includes the offices formerly occupied by the Raver Film Corporation. Among its additions will be a splendidly equipped exhibition and show room where advance showing of the pictures will be given. The studio will also be equipped with an exhibition room in conjunction with its laboratory for the purpose of editing the pictures right on the ground.

Through Mr. Raver, the Planet company will have the rights of picturizing the many Augustus Thomas plays in addition to the other material which is rapidly being gathered, such as popular novels and other well-known plays.

BIOGRAPH'S "GRAUSTARK" RELEASED MAY 17.

Through inadvertence "Beverly of Graustark," Biograph's three-part subject adapted from the famous novel and play by George Barr McCutcheon, was omitted from its place in the Calendar of Daily Program Releases for the General Film in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World. It should have appeared under the date of Wednesday, May 17, where it will be found this week. Exhibitors will please note that the production will be released according to its advertised date.

Facts About Players

"Who's Who in V-L-S-E. Plays" Imparts Novel and Useful Information for Exhibitors' Publicity.

AS AID to exhibitors and newspapers in assembling out-of-the-usual personality sketches, of the prominent players of the producing companies making up the V-L-S-E., the advertising department of that organization has just published a forty-eight page book called "Who's Who in the V-L-S-E. Plays."

Gotten up in handsome style, with a striking two-color cover, and rich duotone illustrations, it presents a most interesting array of facts regarding the stage folk and screen favorites who appear in Big Four productions. Supplementing these sketches is the complete list of Big Four releases since its inception, with pithy paragraph's describing each. This is the first time that all the V-L-S-E. plays and players have been listed under one cover, and in this brochure, they present a combination of talent who have won for themselves a country-wide following.

Besides being a book of interest and information it has been designed to be of especial service to exhibitors, to act as a ready reference guide and an ever-handy aid in compiling press notices and other publicity suitable for newspaper or program use, the biographies being written from a human interest angle to appeal to editor and public alike. Many previously unpublished details in the lives of these players are divulged in this book for the first time.

Florence Dagmar in "The Clown"

UNDER direction of William C. De Mille, there is nearing completion at the Lasky Studios an elaborate photoplay by Marion Fairfax entitled "The Clown," which has been set down for release on the Paramount Program for the summer months. In addition to Thomas Meighan, who is featured in this production in support of Victor Moore, the star, the leading feminine role will be played by Florence Dagmar, the young Lasky actress, who has come rapidly to the front in popularity throughout the United States. This is the second time that Miss Dagmar has appeared with Mr. Moore, as she played a role in "Chimmie Fadden Out West." Also it is her second important appearance with Thomas Meighan as they both played leading roles with Theodore Roberts in "Pudd'nhead Wilson," from the novel by Mark Twain.

Florence Dagmar.

For several years Miss Dagmar played ingenue roles in stock companies in Seattle and Oakland and upon her parents moving to Los Angeles she accompanied them and was immediately engaged by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude. She then went with the Smalleys and appeared in ingenue roles in a number of their productions. She was seen on the screen by Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Lasky company and offered a long contract with that organization, making her first appearance in support of Robert Edeson in "The Call of the North." She then played the lead with Theodore Roberts in "The Circus Man," and the feminine lead in "The Country Boy," as well as appearing in prominent parts in other Lasky productions.

Miss Dagmar is of the distinct blonde type and is considered one of the most beautiful young women in the photo-dramatic world.

GLADYS HULETTE NOW IN CLASSICS.

It is now definitely announced that Gladys Hulette has signed a contract with the Thanhouser Company by which she will appear in Thanhouser Classics exclusively. These are to be productions of not less than five reels, and Miss Hulette will star in eight productions a year.

Mutuals for Week of May 12

Two Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, One Three-Reel Feature, Four Two-Reel Subjects and Ten Single Reels on Mutual Program.

"THE ISLE OF LOVE," a masterpicture, De Luxe, from the Gaumont studios, which goes to the public on May 15, serves to introduce to Mutual patrons Miss Gertrude McCoy, who is making her initial bow as a Mutual star.

For Miss McCoy's premiere appearance in Mutual releases the Gaumont studios furnished her with an exceptionally powerful story, adapted by Paul M. Bryan for screen production from the famous song of the same name. Edwin Middleton directed the feature.

Earl O. Schenck, well remembered for his good work in "The Haunted Manor," a previous Masterpicture, de Luxe, from the Gaumont studios, appears in support of Miss McCoy. Iva Shepard, the famous "vampire" of the Gaumont Mutual releases, and Robert Clugston are included in the big company of players.

The second of the Masterpictures de Luxe Edition, for the week, will be released May 18, under the title of "The Courtesan." This feature release is from the American studios and stars Eugenie Forde, who is making her first appearance as the lead in these five-reel features.

"The Courtesan" was prepared for the screen by William Parker and screened under the direction of Arthur Maude.

Al Fordyce, Hal Cooley, Charles Wheelock, William Carroll and Nell Franzen are prominent in Miss Forde's support.

Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh are the principals in "Four Months," the three part feature of the week, which will be released May 18. Karl Coolidge, the author, and Carl Le Viness, the director of the feature, have combined in working into the piece a story of gripping interest.

Included in the two reel subjects are "The Answer" from the Thanhouser studios with George Marlo and the "Fairbanks Twins," Madeline and Marion, in the principal roles, to be released May 16, "The Pretender," an American feature, with Lizette Throne and Edward Coxen, for release May 15; "The Blindness," a Mustang drama, featuring Rhea Mitchell and William Stowell, to be released May 19, and "High Lights and Shadows," third of the new Centaur dramas featuring Margaret Gibson and Bostock animals, will be released May 20.

Mutual laugh-makers for the week include a wide variety of subjects, leading off with Claude Cooper and Frank McNish, in their screamingly funny roles of Oscar and Conrad in "Detecters," which goes to the public under the Falstaff brand on May 15. "Steven's Sweet Sisters" is the second Falstaff. It will be released May 20. Jay C. Yorke, Doris Grey, Gladys Leslie and Isolde Illian are the fun-makers. "Billy Van Duesen's Fiancee," featuring John Steppling and Carol Halloway and "Twenty Minutes in Magic," another of these laughable comedies featuring Orral Humphrey, are the "Beauty" releases of the week. They will be released May 17 and 21, respectively. The Vogue release for May 16 has not been announced but that for May 21 will go out under the title of "Chinatown Billians." Paddy MacQuire and Rena Rodgers are the stars. Billy Armstrong substitutes for George Ovey in "The Piano Tuner," the Cub comedy to be released May 19.

Mutual Weekly No. 72, and "See America First" will be released May 17. The former contains a number of pictures just received from Mexico as well as interesting news pictures gathered from all sections of the universe.

The third release of the new single reel feature, "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine, is scheduled for Sunday, May 21, and should prove the most interesting of the three already released under this title.

LOUISVILLE PHOTOPLAY ASSOCIATION ELECTION.

The Louisville Photoplay Association held its annual meeting on Tuesday, May 2, at which the following officers were elected for a term of one year: President, L. J. Dittmar, of Louisville, who is also president of the state organization; vice-president, M. Switow; treasurer, Max L. Simons; secretary, Joseph L. Steurle.

The principal business transacted consisted of a movement whereby the association will probably buy carbons, incandescent bulbs, and other supplies through the association hereafter instead of individually. It is figured that a great saving could be made by buying in quantities through the organization. The secretary has been instructed to take the matter up with the supply houses and report at a future meeting.

Pathe Exchange Offerings

Rube Goldberg's Animated Comedy Cartoons, the "Who's Guilty?" Series and "The Girl With the Green Eyes" Slated for Early Release.

BEGINNING in the week of May 8th, the Pathe Exchange will release the first of the "Who's Guilty?" series entitled "Puppets of Fate." This drama and the thirteen which follow will be released in two reels each, and feature Anna Q. Nilsson and Tom Moore. Mrs. Wilson Woodrow wrote the stories from which the plays are being made, and these stories have been syndicated in hundreds of newspapers throughout the United States. "Puppets of Fate" tells the story of a young surgeon who, through his wife's efforts, rises rapidly to fame. A certain wealthy society woman, who is to endow a hospital, of which he is to be the head, becomes enamored of him and forces his affection. His wife becomes seriously ill and can be saved through an operation, which he only can perform. Just before the operation the "other woman" comes to him and so upsets his emotions that he bungles the operation and his wife dies. Query, "Who's Guilty?"

In the same week with the release of "Who's Guilty?" comes the "Boob Weekly," the first of the animated cartoon comedies that Rube Goldberg, the nationally renowned cartoonist, is creating for the Pathe Program. "The Boob Weekly" is a travesty on current news films, and treats fictitious subjects in a way that strongly suggests a real news film the while it burlesques it. Some of the scenes, such as "Harvesting Wild Umbrella Handles in Brazil" and "Hunting the Wild Collar Button on the Habadashery Fields of the Umpslopagus" are screamingly funny and should create a vogue for this droll humorist's creations that is current now for his still cartoons.

In the week beginning May 15th, Pathe will release on its Gold Rooster Program the screen version of Clyde Fitch's "Girl With the Green Eyes." This feature was made for Pathe by the Popular Plays and Players Company, and features Katharine Kaelred and Julian L'Estrange, two players better known on the "legit" than in the movies. Katharine Kaelred's name first came into prominence with her appearance in "The Devil." Then she created the part of the "vampire lady" in "A Fool There Was." She next appeared with John Mason in "A Son of the People," and is now playing a leading role in Arnold Daly's revival of Clyde Fitch's "Beau Brummel." Hard work, close application and a wise use of natural ability have given her an enviable position on the American stage.

Julian L'Estrange has always been a popular leading man. He played leading roles with Sir Herbert Tree in London, also with Arthur Bourchier, Billie Burke, Maxine Elliott, Mme. Simon and others.

The story deals with a woman whose unfounded jealousy causes her to lose the love of her husband. Overcome with the realization of her own doubt she takes poison, but is saved for a love that surmounts all doubt.

VIVIAN MARTIN LUNCHES WITH NEWSPAPER MEN.

A farewell luncheon was given to Vivian Martin at the Hotel Claridge Wednesday, May 3, the other guests consisting of members of the Oliver Morosco and Pallas companies, the Paramount Pictures Corporation and newspaper and trade journal writers identified with the moving picture industry. The affair was strictly informal and permitted Miss Martin to meet New York reviewers who are acquainted with her work on the screen. The affair also gave the scribes an opportunity to wish her a pleasant journey on her trip to Los Angeles. Miss Martin has just signed a long-term contract to star in photoplays for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures, and left for the Pacific Coast May 4.

At the luncheon Miss Martin sat at the head of the table and the following newspaper men and representatives of her employers occupied the remaining chairs: Carl H. Pierce, Julian M. Solomon and Pete Schmid, of the Morosco and Pallas forces; Kenneth Hodkinson and J. Hesser Walraven, of Paramount Pictures Corporation; W. L. Hill, of the Famous Players Film Service, Pittsburgh; Thomas Kennedy, Motography; Harry Havens, Exhibitors' Herald; Patrick Kearney, Motion Picture Mail; Charles Giegerich, Morning Telegraph; Jack Edwards, The Billboard; Peter Milne, Motion Picture News; Ben Davis, New York Tribune; R. W. Baremore, Every Week; Frank Sniffen; Edward Weitzel, Moving Picture World; Wid Gunning, "Wid's;" Fred Beecroft, Dramatic Mirror.

Selznick Closes Two Big Deals

Forms Partnerships With Noted Film Men in Philadelphia and Detroit for the Distribution of Clara Kimball Young Features.

LEWIS J. SELZNICK, president of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, this week formed two partnerships in connection with the establishment of his own system of exchanges. In Philadelphia a $400,000 company was incorporated with Stanley V. Mastbaum, head of the Stanley Booking Company, and W. D. Smith, of Paramount, as partners of Mr. Selznick; and in Detroit, a $200,000 company was organized with a syndicate headed by Harry Garson, of the Broadway Strand theater, and Mr. Selznick holding equal interests.

Both companies were incorporated under the general trade name—Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc.—which will be used by all the exchanges throughout the country. Mr. Mastbaum and Mr. Smith will control the distribution of Clara Kimball Young Features for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey on a 50 per cent. basis with Mr. Selznick, under a franchise for five years. Mr. Garson will represent Mr. Selznick on similar terms for the territory of Michigan.

These two deals are only the beginning. They are the first concluded of a number of similar transactions with big men in the film industry in various sections of the country. Mr. Selznick is now negotiating with the most important local film men all over the country and as fast as each deal is concluded announcement will be made. In explanation of his plan for the formation of distributing companies for the Clara Kimball Young Features, Mr. Selznick said:

"Many people have been wondering just how I was going about the establishment of my own exchanges. Through the closing of my deal with Messrs. Mastbaum and Smith in Philadelphia and Mr. Garson in Detroit, I am now in a position to make this important phase of our plans clear to the exhibitors and others interested in the motion picture industry.

"The Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, which is the producing corporation, grants to the distributing or exchange company a franchise for five years, which is controlled 50 per cent. by myself and 50 per cent. by the local interests, who became my partners on an equal footing with me in the distribution of Miss Young's pictures in their allotted territory. Each exchange or distributing company is incorporated under our trade name, Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., with the addition of the state in which it is organized by way of identifying the various companies.

"That our proposition is one of the greatest in the industry needs no further proof than the announcement of the partnerships just formed. Mr. Mastbaum is one of the biggest men identified with the theater interests, and Mr. Smith is equally prominent in the exchange end of the business. Mr. Garson of Detroit is one of the biggest figures in the Middle West. Within another week I shall be able to announce further partnerships with leading local interests with whom I am now negotiating. The response to my proposition has been so enormous that it is now merely a question of choice of association on my part.

"The advantages of the system I am inaugurating are apparent. Aside from the immediate benefit of being associated with such partners as I am now acquiring the future possibilities are enormous. With the most influential local men in the industry linked with me it will be a simple matter to swing any big proposition we may plan. Then, too, under this system the cost of distribution will become a mere fraction of what it would be under any other arrangement."

NEW FLOCK OF BLUEBIRDS.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Bluebird Photoplays, makes the announcement that the flock of Bluebirds that will be released during June will provide exhibitors with four of the best pictures they have had from this source, since the program was inaugurated with the first of this year.

The announcements have been made that Tyrone Power and Lois Weber will be co-stars in "The Eye of God," a psychological crime-drama, to be issued June 5. The Smalleys will make the production from Miss Weber's scenario.

Harry Carey becomes a Bluebird star June 12, appearing in "Three Godfathers," an intensely interesting melodrama of immense human interest. The tenderness in which three burly men accept the responsibility of raising a newly born babe is the theme worked out in this release with adroitness that will impel great interest in the feature.

On June 19 Louise Lovely makes her regular appearance among Bluebird stars in "Bobby of the Ballet," fulfilling the indications of its title in a uniquely contrived and interesting story of stage life—a subject forever popular with theatergoers.

Violet Mersereau, appearing in Rex Ingram's own scenario-directed feature, "Yellow and White," will provide a fourth feature to complete the diversity in subjects that has marked the progress of the Bluebird program. Mr. Hoffman gives the assurance that each of these four productions is different in theme, and in no manner resembles any previous release in the series of twenty-four subjects.

John McAleer

GRADUATING from the ranks of the theatrical profession into the moving picture field a little more than six years ago John McAleer blossomed forth as a successful exhibitor in Brooklyn. He was the manager of the Clarendon theater in Flatbush for some time and won a host of friends in the City of Churches. Two years ago he entered the employ of the Picture Play House Film Company and was sent by them to Pittsburgh to take charge of their office in that city. He has managed the Pittsburgh branch office of the corporation ever since with great success. His circle of friends and acquaintances takes in all of western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. He is a member of the Board of Governors of the Pittsburgh Screen Club and has been very conspicuous in the fight against the evils of censorship.

Though William F. Russell, the American-Mutual star, forgot that April 12th was his birthday, others in Santa Barbara did not, and the result was a surprise party, which greeted him upon his late arrival from the studio at his El Poplar Rancho in Santa Barbara. A spaghetti feast had been prepared at the ranch by Robert Klein, and Ashton Dearholt contributed to the feast with the making of a special dish, to which nobody seemed able to fit a name. There was music and dancing, the Temple City Quartet, Nate Watt at the mandolin, Dick Rosson as violinist and Baumann Johnson as a soloist providing entertainment. The guests comprised Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Ritchie, Mrs. Rosson, Helene Rosson, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Russell, Mr. and Mrs. Dick Rosson, Rhea Mitchell, Anna Little, Charlotte Burton, John Sheehan, Nell Franzen, Wallace McDonald, George Ahern, Charles Wheelock, Harry Keenan, Mr. and Mrs. Art Acord, John W. METRO STARS NOT MARRIED.

As a result of a false rumor current some months ago stating that Harold Lockwood and May Allison, the popular Metro stars, had been married, these artists have been subjected to an endless amount of annoyance and no little discomfort. In their daily mail, received at the Metro offices, there have come thousands of congratulatory letters and post cards, and thousands of letters from admirers asking for details of the wedding. The families of both Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison have also suffered much inconvenience because of the circulation of this unfounded report. Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison not only wish it denied emphatically that they are married, but both declare they have no intention of marrying each other.

"The Innocent Lie"

Valentine Grant Makes Good in Her Debut in Famous Players Five-Part Subject.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN THE making of stories of Ireland Sidney Olcott is in a class by himself. For that matter he has had very nearly a monopoly in the staging of photoplays on the "Ould Sod," and his experience in this particular section of the world covers a half dozen years. He knows his Ireland, its people and its people's ways. He has the art of creating Irish atmosphere, of portraying its interesting inhabitants. We see this fidelity to things Irish in "The Innocent Lie," the five-part story of Scene from "The Innocent Lie" (Famous Players).

Ireland and New York released by the Famous Players on May 8, which Mr. Olcott directed.

The leading player is Miss Valentine Grant, who in this subject makes her debut in Famous Players pictures. Miss Grant plays the Irish maid to the life, as she has seen Irish maids on their native heath. It is an interesting character study, and the interest extends to Nora O'Brian's experiences in New York—not the least of it being the efforts of the untutored Irish girl to appear unconcerned in her surroundings of luxury. Miss Grant has vivacity in generous measure, and, too, she shows full appreciation of the requirements of sterner situations.

Jack Clark, another who knows as he has deeply studied his Ireland, is a prominent member of the cast. Mr. Clark is Terry O'Brian, brother of Nora, whose enlistment in the British army impels Nora to seek her younger brother in America. It is a good performance. Others in the cast are Frank Losee, William Courtleigh, Jr., Robert Cain and Helen Lindroth.

The story is competently staged, especially so the interiors of Nora's Irish home. The exteriors were photographed in Bermuda and they are not only picturesque, but in atmosphere vividly remind of the land and shore of the troubled island they are intended to simulate. The story, which develops rather slowly, picks up sharply in the latter part. There is action aplenty following the arrival of Nora in New York, where the Irish girl finds herself the beneficiary of a mistake in identity. It is this situation, the struggle of conscience to declare herself Nora O'Brian and not Nora Owen, that explains the title of "The Innocent Lie."

Clements Completes "The Fast Mail."

Director Roy Clements has completed the filming of Lincoln J. Carter's melodrama, "The Fast Mail," the principal roles of which were played by comedy people, including Victor Potel, the well-known "Slim" of pictures, Eileen Sedgwick, Yona Landowska, Ernie Shields, L. M. Wells and Duke Horne. This is an innovation to put one of the old-time lurid melodramas into the hands of comedians.

"Reel Life"

First Instalment of the New Magazine in Film Made by the Gaumont Company for the Mutual Program Contains Remarkable Animal Studies.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Gaumont Company in the make-up of the first instalment of the new magazine in film have aroused admiration and interest. As was the case with their "See America First" series, the person desiring to make use of any part of it for educational purposes is not in fear of being put to shame by the belated discovery that, tacked onto the beautiful scenic, industrial, or, it may be, a study in natural history, is a low comedy number, too idiotic or too unblushingly vulgar to awaken in an individual of refinement any sense of humor whatever. "Reel Life" is truly educational as well as entertaining.

The first instalment introduces us first to the inhabitants of an alligator farm, where we meet familiarly hundreds of these ungainly but delightfully useful animals, from the yearling to the five-hundred-year-old specimen. The second item in the magazine shows us the butterfly passing through the various stages that prelude their birth from the egg and the destructive caterpillar period to the moment when it breaks its bonds, dries its pretty wings and flutters off on the breeze. The third and last gives some entertaining and instructive views of feats of horsemanship performed by Belgian cavalrymen.

The first release of this excellent educational series appeared on Sunday, May 7, and will be a weekly occurrence as long as it lasts.

Th Gaumont Company have received valuable assistance in the collection of their educational series from the government, and principally through the efforts of Robert S. Yard, of the Division of National Parks, Department of the Interior.

"A Son of the Immortals"

J. Warren Kerrigan Plays a Democratic Ruler in Story of Mythical Kingdom—A Bluebird Production.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ADD one more to the list of romances belonging to "The Prisoner of Zenda" school. This latest contribution to the fiction writer's map of Europe was evolved in the minds of Louis Tracy and Bertram Grassby, authors of the story and the scenario, and was directed by Otis Turner, with J. Warren Kerigan playing the character of a democratic prince, who took the part of the people againt the despotism of "The Bloody Seventh," aptly described as a regiment of butchers. Romance of this type, so completely removed from the realities of life, possesses qualities quite certain to please the youthful members of an audience, still susceptible to glittering uniforms, ideal love affairs and a hero who never descends from an heroic mood.

Mr. Kerrigan's Prince Alexis is a paragon of all the manly virtues, and by way of contrast, his father, the deposed ruler of Kosnovia, is made the incarnation of a spineless fop. Then there is Lois Wilson, looking altogether sweet and fetching, as an American girl studying art in Paris and flirting with the gay prince, who soon—poor man—is doomed to wear the crown of a stormy little kingdom. But "The Bloody Seventh," an unscrupulous prime minister, his woman accomplice, all the disrupting forces combined, are not enough to check the overwhelming love of the prince and the American girl. As a model hero should, he insists that she shall be his queen, and when he is asked to choose between the throne and the woman, he decides without a moment's hesitation.

Then to make even more certain of his popularity, a secret that has been kept through four reels is disclosed. Alexis is just a plain American, and proud of it, after his experience with European royalty. Whether the settings were made to fit the story, or the story to fit the settings is an open question. At all events they are entirely adequate and not a few of the street scenes, showing the populace in a festival spirit, or in revolt, are elaborate. Lest the picture lack excitement, a bridge is blown up in an attempt by the conspirators to take the life of the prince; also, there is a spirited attack on the palace occupied by the soldiers. Bertram Grassby gives a clever portrayal of the foppish Prince Michael.

Two English Productions

Ideal Film Company Offers "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" and Sir John Hare in "Caste."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"The Second Mrs. Tanqueray."

An American company produced "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray;" but that does not in the least diminish the value of this six-part picture made by the Ideal Film Company of London. The production is so true to the letter and the spirit of the play; it is so thoroughly well acted and tastefully staged that one may readily credit the statement concerning Sir Arthur Pinero's supervision. There is no danger of endorsing this film too highly, for it will stand the criticism of audiences familiar with the spoken drama and will interest those who never heard of Pinero or "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." It is one of the few instances of a screen version of a famous stage work that gives more than a pale, or a distorted reflection of the original.

To begin with, the cast, headed by Sir George Alexander and Hilda Moore (a niece of Pinero) was selected from first class players of the London stage. The director was working with actors who knew from previous experience the play and the purpose of the characters. Then, whoever wrote the scenario refrained from taking liberties with Pinero's plot. He tried to follow, not to improve on his model, and in so doing allowed competent players to arouse interest in the author's creations. Situations grow out of the story, instead of being forced into prominence once every so often, regardless of dramatic consistency. Scenes are permitted to run for their full value, irrespective of the speed of the action, and in place of melodrama, we have sound, thoughtful drama.

Finely staged as they are and admirably photographed, these six reels are free from the tricks in which aggressively modern producers take such pride. Some of our "punch in every scene" artists may hold that "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" develops too slowly, that it lacks snap; but more than counterbalancing these will be many hundreds of adults ready to welcome a picture that presupposes a mature intelligence. Significant lines from the play frequently are used as sub-titles and always they come in naturally, as, for instance, the tragic conclusion of Paula: "The future is only the past again entered by another gate." How many women have found to their sorrow that it is nothing more! If this production is an example of what English companies can do with important dramatic works, it is time to increase the foreign order.

"Caste."

Comparatively few of the present generation of theatergoers recall Sir John Hare's inimitably humorous and sympathetic portrayal of Eccles in T. W. Robertson's "Caste," presented in New York some twenty years ago. In theatrical annals it has gone down as a flawless piece of acting. The veteran player is over seventy now, but advanced years did not hinder him in giving an excellent duplication of his stage characterization in this five-part Turner Films production, directed by Larry Trimble. His Eccles, as revived for the screen, is a masterpiece of character acting, quite strong enough to justify the showing of "Caste," providing the picture lacked other merits, which, happily, it does not.

The story of how the social barrier in English life is lowered is delightfully told. On the one hand we have the incorrigibly bibulous Eccles and his two daughters; on the other, the haughty Marquiese de St. Maur and her son George D'Alroy, an army officer. The objections to a match between D'Alroy and Esther are manifold, nevertheless the marriage is carried through and little by little the gap made by birth and breeding is bridged. Once in a while the comedy scenes are a bit mechanical; but never when Sir John is in evidence as the most aggravatingly attractive of reprobates. In the picture, as on the stage, he envelopes the worthlessness of Eccles in an irresistibly lovable personality that invites unlimited indulgence.

Then, too, the star is given capital support by Peggy Hyland, a wholly winsome Esther, Dawson Millward, Roland Pertwee, Mary Rorke and others. Rich settings in the period of the story add appreciably to the tone of a superior picture, truly reflecting the greatest characterization of a great artist.

Triangle Program

"Not My Sister," Triangle-Ince; "The Snow Cure," Keystone; and "The Primal Lure," Triangle-Ince.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"Not My Sister."

"NOT MY SISTER," by James Montgomery and C. Gardner Sullivan, is a strong offering, full of intense situations, and it has a notable cast, headed by Bessie Barriscale. The story is well constructed, but it is so illogical at times that it strains credulity. Over and opposed to this is an artistry of treatment which is bound to excite high admiration among those who can see into the future, who realize that fine picture composition is coming to be recognized as one of the chief values of story visualization. Scene after scene delights the eye because of real emphasis and contrast through effects of light and shade. Audiences feel a sense of pleasure in looking at such pictures without knowing exactly why, and there are even critics who do not know why. The picture composition in "Not My Sister" is an improvement on any previous Ince product.

All this artistry is subtle in its effect on the audience. More direct is the fine acting of a well-selected cast and the superb interpretation of Barriscale—I am tempted to call her "Incomparable Barriscale." In making the spectator aware of the condition of her mind and heart during her varied interpretations, all with sweet dignity and fidelity to her work, Barriscale stands well up in comparison with any screen actress I have had the good fortune to see perform. She is a powerful factor in a combination of author, director and interpreters working in harmony of purpose, with good taste dominating even the most delicate situations. "Not My Sister," barring faulty logic, is a fine example of the motion picture art, deserving a profitable run.

"The Snow Cure."

"The Snow Cure" is a surprising Keystone. It is a farce-comedy of unsuspected purpose; its scenes toward the last are laid where the courage of the performer must be tried to the utmost, and that natural comedian, a big black bear, has at last come to his own. Never has an animal acted with more intelligence in a screen story than the bear utilized by the head of a sanitarium to make a lot of overfed and gouty patients forget their ailments in paroxysms of sudden fear. The adventures of Ford Sterling as the lover in a domestic triangle lead to a sanitarium, or sanitorium, as you please, where the guests are designedly thrown in a panic by the release of Bruin from his cage while they are at the bath. Out into the snow they flee in bathing costumes, to be chased through freezing water, up telegraph poles, along the wires, until Bruin actually gives chase in a sled down a long snow slide. The strenuous life of a motion picture actor has never been better illustrated than in this Keystone, possibly destined in itself to eliminate several members of the company. The comedy is amusing enough in a strenuous way to satisfy the most exacting taste.

"The Primal Lure."

"The Primal Lure" puts William S. Hart in the limelight as a dime novel hero, but the story is so painfully lacking in anything that appeals to minds not primitive that it drags its dreary way without other relief than occasional flashes of fine acting by Margery Wilson as Lois Le Moyne. Hart, for all his manly strength and expressive face, fails to stir interest. He needs a better opportunity than such stories offer.

"Her Maternal Right"

she not chosen a higher calling. Miss Gordon and her gowns are no small factor in the appeal of a production that presents a melodramatic story in a strongly melodramatic fashion. If the plot develops nothing of exceptional note, the author is to be commended for his satisfactory handling of familiar material, whereas Director John Ince's production is smooth and even elaborate when there is a call for rich settings.

Playing a musical comedy star Miss Gordon is quite in her element. This particular star, Nina Seabury, is said to be free from scruples in her dealings with men, whose attractions vary according to the size of their bank accounts. Believing Townsend to be the president of a bank, she regards him as worth cultivating and the young man is easily caught, although he is only a cashier and relatively poor. When the costly Nina wants presents he helps himself to the bank funds. But even his gifts are insufficient to hold the elusive actress and he goes west for a vacation on a farm where he meets the first and only girl he ever really loved. Their marriage prepares the way for a dramatic last reel, which lacks nothing in intensity.

Threatened with exposure, Townsend goes to Nina demanding that she make good the shortage; but there is small chance of his request being granted until his wife also appears in the apartment with a pistol to back up forceful arguments, based on the desperation of a woman who is soon to become a mother. All this is carried out in a highly melodramatic manner, but it is not unimpressive. Zena Keefe, as the wife, is most engaging in the lighter scenes and she rises very well to the emotional requirements of the last reel. George Ralph is successful in conveying the conflicting impulses of the cashier, and best of all we have Miss Gordon, Miss Gordon's back and Miss Gordon's gowns.

"Liberty Belles"

Attractive Girls Give First Appeal to Four-Part Biograph Adaptation of Stage Play—A Griffith Single Reel.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

GIRLS and then more girls are met in this sentimental comedy, produced by Del Henderson for the Biograph Company about two years ago. They attend pajama parties in disconcerting numbers, romp around the corridors of a boarding school, and when other entertainment is lacking, they adjourn to the bathing beach for swimming lessons. Fair young womanhood will be the making of this picture if the comedy weakens. First in the cast come the always attractive Dorothy Gish and her partner in mischief, Gertrude Bambrick, playing the belles, with Jack Pickford and Reggie Morris in the roles of suitors, who refuse to be discouraged by the cool reception of obstinate fathers. A more likable quartet of lovers could scarcely have been selected for a picture so largely dependent upon the spirit of youth.

For broad comedy, or to be more accurate, for scenes varying between farce and burlesque, the production relies upon the grotesque characterizations of Spotiswoode Aitken and Davie Morris, one as a scatter-brained inventor, the other as a retired sailor determined to locate a buried treasure. These two erratic men share one purpose in common. They refuse to sanction the love affairs of their daughters, so the girls are packed off to boarding school where they become leaders of the rebellious faction. Perhaps the most engaging scene in the picture shows a merry pajama party attended by the two boys, who have entered through a window. The humor offered in these four reels is rather elementary and the plot suggests old-time farce; but there is plenty of entertainment in following the experiences of the youthful lovers.

"The Spirit Awakened" is a one-reel Griffith reissue finely acted by Blanche Sweet, Alfred Paget, Edward Dillon and Chrystie Miller. The story is laid on a farm, it possesses a sound character foundation and works up to a really stirring climax in the last few hundred feet. There can be no question about the certain appeal of this admirably constructed picture.

"The Iron Claw"

Chapter 10 of This Serial Contains Some Startlingly Gruesome Effects That Are Nevertheless Entertaining.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE suave manner in which we are treated to a funeral and all its accessories in chapter 10 of the Pathe serial entitled "The Living Dead," makes up in a way for any shock to the nerves which might accrue therefrom. We must confess that director Edward Jose has made an artistic job of his ghosts, burial vaults, caskets, etc.

It may be remembered that in a previous chapter, Davy, Golden's secretary, was shot with arrows which we learned before the close of that episode had been robbed of their menace by the Laughing Mask, and that Davy was on the road to recovery. It is therefore surprising to find with the entry of Chapter 10 that Davy is on his way to his last resting place accompanied by weeping mourners, among whom is Margery Golden, becomingly attired in the gloomy garments which the occasion requires.

It remains for Legar, with the shrewdness of his kind, to uncover the mystery and reveal to the spectator the secret of the clever rule worked by the Golden faction. For, be it known, the contents of the casket so tenderly entrusted to keeping of the vault consist of a dummy and an astonishingly truthful waxen mask of the face of Davy. With an oath on his lips Legar turns to face a real Davy, who now stands at the foot of the casket in company with a couple of policemen. Alive to the seriousness of the situation Legar quickly fires a quick explosive with which he has armed himself and takes his chance amid the falling pillars of the vault. He is pursued into a steel plant where the Laughing Mask is almost upon him, when he escapes a second time, leaving us still in a state of wonderment.

Mutual Program

"The Floorwalker," Two-Reel Lone Star, Featuring Charlie Chaplin.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"THE FLOORWALKER" is a farce-comedy coming under the general heading of "Vehicle," having been written to order and directed solely for the purpose of exhibiting the talents of Charlie Chaplin, who made his reputation as an acrobatic comedian and has improved to a point where he deserves better opportunity than has ever been afforded in a "vehicle" of any kind. It is true that his greatest value is as a drawing card. His name on the billboard is what counts with both producer and exhibitor.

Scene from "The Floorwalker" (Mutual).

But that value would not be lessened if he appeared in something better than a mere "vehicle," nothing more or less than a machine-made screen story, with artificiality written all over it, and stale business written all through it.

Chaplin is an artist of larger capacity, of greater versatility than is apparent to those who know him best. A great many of the screen stories in which he appears are little more than repetitions, or thinly disguised variations, of what he has already done, compelling him to repeat from lack of new business; whereas he would be more effective in some bright and new comedy in almost any role it offered. He has discovered the secret of what brings the laugh, the portrayal of plain, ordinary stupidity. This is illustrated in "The Floorwalker," where he is chased down a moving staircase which is going up. Some pure psychology there makes it the funniest incident of the story. He needs bigger opportunity, but his personality is so convincing that "The Floorwalker" will win and keep many an audience laughing after it is well under way.

"Blazing Love"

Virginia Pearson Has Role of a Much Troubled Woman Who Finds Love Only Disillusion.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS latest Fox offering tells a story of love, but pictures little that is at all beautiful. In the woman at the center of the story, love—the picture in five reels is called "Blazing Love"—is lasting; but her experience makes us lose our admiration for her almost as much as folly would. The picture's meaning boils down to bitter dust.

But the chief weakness of the offering comes from the poor plot construction and the crude way the transitions are brought out in the situation that is developing normally enough. The action begins in a strongly melodramatic way with a villain forcing his way into the room of a virtuous wife at night and her not daring to push the button that would bring help. This and the way she does handle the case is sensational and the action that follows never again reaches anything like the same power. In fact, the rest of the story is not melodramatic. If the rest of the story had only become really human it would have got past; but as there is little hightening of significance, the marked lowering of "punch"—a most melodramatic word—is the more disappointing.

I believe the picture to be the poorest and weakest made of all recent Fox pictures; but it has some things to stand on—it is not all dull and lifeless. The director has used freely close-up scenes and Virginia Pearson in the leading role gives us some ably played moments. Then there's Louise Huff, who adds charm to a good handful of scenes. The other players know their business and manage to entertain us. Then the story, with all its ack of imagination and in spite of its deadness, does get to the place it sets out for. We can follow it easily. It was made with noticeable lack of skill; but it has action. These things keep it from being wholly dead.

Knickerbocker Star Features

"The Oath of Hate" and "Broken Fetters," Three-Reel Dramas for General Film Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"The Oath of Hate."

GRANTING the popularity of strong, uncompromising melodrama, "The Oath of Hate," a three-part Knickerbocker Star Feature scheduled for release on the General Film program, is to be recommended. The finer touches of photoplay construction are not in evidence; there is little in the way of motivation and the characters are made to suit the plot, rather than the plot to suit the characters; but conceding all this, we find compensation in the crude force of the story. Where some producers err on the side of tiring the spectator with superfluous scenes, the director of "The Oath of Hate," if anything, goes to the other extreme by eliminating all save the sensational action in the drama. Just at it stands, the picture is likely to be well received; but it would be a better work of art if the motives and natures of the characters were more fully explained.

Henry King, the featured player, is cast as a brutal ship captain, who is jilted by his fiancée. He returns from a cruise in time to create a disturbance at the wedding of the girl to another man, whereupon he swears eternal hate. His sight destroyed by an explosion, he marries a poor, but loyal slavey, hoping that a son will be born to them who will carry out his dream of vengeance. All of the characters undergo marked changes in a comparatively brief period; but the most miraculous alteration is reserved for the hero. Knocked unconscious and thrown from a ship into the sea, the shock is given as the cause for restored vision and the reawakening of a kindly nature that was unbalanced by a blow suffered many years previous. Stone returns to his wife and the oath of hate is forgotten. The picture profits greatly by the acting of the two women in the cast, Ethel Fleming and Marzuerite Nichols.

"Broken Fetters"

In these three reels a rather unusual, if not entirely convincing story is capably handled. It is the conventional triangle with a few variations conducive to interesting situations, perhaps the best of them being the manner in which a discarded suitor discredits his successful rival. In the apartment immediately under that occupied by Morrison, lives a woman who passes for an actress, and also, when occasion arises, pretends to be Mrs. Morrison in order to convince the young man's sweetheart that he is an imposter. The plan works so successfully that Martha becomes the wife of the man who devised it. Two reels of misunderstanding and misery lead up to the killing of the faithless husband by the woman who assisted in the deception.

As in "The Oath of Hate," the author was far more concerned with the development of dramatic situations than with the creation of life-like characters; but allowing for the material provided, Margaret Landis, as the deceived girl fresh from a convent, and Madeline Pardee, as the obliging actress, succeed very well in making their portrayals appear human. The men in the cast are less impressive.

appearance as Richard Warrington is one of the best things he has done in a long while. He is assisted by Clara Beyers, as Katherine; Joseph Castallaneous as John Bennington; Edna Hunter as Patty, and Howard Crampton as the political boss.

The producer has provided a unique opening, picturing Warrington as a playwright fond of dining in a certain Broadway restaurant. Some night scenes of the great white way are shown.

Warrington is recognized by Katherine, also dining in the place. She pretends to lose her pocketbook and enlists his aid in getting home. Here she reveals herself as an actress who had been for some time endeavoring to get an audience with him.

An acquaintance formed in this chance way grows into an actual friendship, which extends over five years. In this time Katherine has starred in Warrington's new play. She falls in love with Bennington, who narrowly misses finding her in Warrington's apartments. The friendship, while one that would be certain to arouse criticism, is really a platonic one. Later, when Warrington runs for office in a small town, is is made the basis for a campaign scandal. But Bennington, now married to Katherine, retains his faith in both his wife and his friend, and the latter's name is cleared. Warrington loses in the race for office but wins the girl he loves.

The story is brightly entertaining and contains a good deal of sane optimism in dealing with situations that are often overloaded with the sordid and unpleasant.

"The Isle of Love"

Five Reel Gaumont, Featuring Gertrude McCoy.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"THE Isle of Love" might be classified as a comedy melodrama, though the author seems to have forgotten that he is not writing for the stage, where the possible improbable is tolerated along with paste jewels and canvas trees. The mathematical chances of a girl being rescued by a young skipper from a trying situation, that of losing her clothes while in swimming, at a fishing village, and of subsequently being rescued from the machinations of a villainous suitor aboard yacht, by the same skipper, now captain of the yacht, are hardly within the range of demonstrable possibility, but when the same girl is rescued a third time by the same man at sea, this time because she happens to travel on a ship where he happens to be the wireless operator, we are entering the sphere of the pipe-dreamer, casting both abstract and concrete probability to the winds.

Scene from "The Isle of Love" (Gaumont).

As a vehicle for Gertie McCoy, the story might have been reasonably plausible and yet shown us how she has developed. Sylph-like Gertrude has grown since she left the Edison Company, and we are not permitted to forget for this great length of time in "The Isle of Love." Introduced as an Aphrodite, rising out of a white foam of lingerie, she eventually becomes a "Goddess of Love" when cast away on a desert island with the rescuing young skipper and compelled to wear leaves instead of a dancing frock. Gertie is physically well-featured and her nice proportions constitute the entire attraction of the play.

"Alien Souls"

A Most Interesting Lasky Production in Which the Famous Japanese Actor Sessue Hayakawa Is Featured.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS Lasky feature is conspicuous for many of the excellent Lasky characteristics, such as lighting effects, atmosphere, attention to detail and, above all things, beauty. The story is not only interesting and original, but it is exceedingly well told and altogether calculated to awaken both the interest and the sympathy of the audience. As in the other great production, "The Cheat," the settings of Japanese interiors and exteriors are of singular charm and beauty.

The theme tells of the childish folly of a pretty Japanese maiden who, though betrothed to one of her own race, longs for recognition from white society. She is altogether guileless and is easily deceived by the pretensions of an impecunious adventurer who makes love to her and offers to marry her. Her Japanese lover, splendidly impersonated by Sessue, vainly appeals to her loyalty. The little girl is infatuated and is about to fall into the snare prepared by the wily adventurer when at the last moment her poverty is revealed. Her white lover, who had hoped to recoup himself with the girl's supposed great fortune, loses all further interest in her. She feels disgraced beyond all hope and, acting up to the traditions of her country, she seeks to destroy herself.

If the playwright had permitted her to succeed there would, of course, have been no happy ending, but it would have been a logical one, full of real strength. As it stands now, it not only seems somewhat illogical, but to many it will seem unintelligible. If you believe in happy endings as an absolute necessity you will have no trouble in forgiving the strange finish of the play.

"The Wheat and the Chaff"

Three Reel Lubin Photoplay, Written by Josephine McLaughlin and Directed by Melvin Mayo.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"THE Wheat and the Chaff" was produced for the Lubin Company, under the personal supervision of Captain Wilbert Melville. It is a play of modern life, and the diversity of character employed in telling its story insures a number of dramatic situations. These situations do not always have the ring of truth, however, the character drawing of the author being after the manner of the old melodramas, where the hero and heroine were spotless; also, the villain—all black. This antiquated form of play construction still finds many admirers, and "The Wheat and the Chaff" is a good example of melodrama made after the recipe of the Popular Circuit dramatists of a decade ago.

Scene from "The Wheat and the Chaff" (Lubin).

Two brothers are leading male characters of the photoplay. One, a prominent lawyer and politician; the other, half-witted but devoted to his brother. Peggy Woods, a cabaret dancer, is in love with the politician and he with her, but he sacrifices his feelings to his ambition and marries the daughter of a political "Boss" who can serve his ambition to become Governor. Peggy resolves on suicide, but changes her mind, and is accidentally shot with the revolver belonging to Jerry. The boy is tried for the murder. Believing that his brother killed the girl, Jerry will not speak and, although Charles knows the truth, he also withholds his evidence. The night of his elections he has a vision of his brother on the scaffold and dies of heart disease. Jerry is acquitted.

The production is commendable, the cast consisting of Cecil Van Aukor, Allan Forrest, Adelaide Bronti, Ruth Saville, Geo. Routh, Evelyn Page and Walter Spencer.

"The End of the World"

Two Highly Spectacular Reels Make Great Northern Six-Part Production an Exceptional Offering.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

TO FORESEE the end of the world—as some pessimistic soul does every once in a while—is, no doubt, to imagine a cosmic catastrophe not unlike that depicted in this six-reel Great Northern drama. Humanity is literally swept from the face of the earth by an irresistible combination of devastating elements. With flames shooting from the sky to burn all the habitations of man, and earthquakes moving the ocean into unaccustomed places, one is offered a choice between death by fire or water—nothing more. The only known survivors of the day that a reckless comet collided with the world, are the hero, the heroine and the camera man, who preserved his negative.

As a spectacle this production scores emphatically, and the impression left by the overwhelming calamity depicted in reels five and six is made stronger by reason of the preparation in earlier scenes. This is no sudden, unheralded visitation. An astronomer had discovered the comet some months before, also that it was due to visit the earth with dire consequences. A feeling of impending doom is created in harmony with the progress of the story, which, in the main, concerns a miner, his two daughters and a wealthy stock broker who inveigles one of the daughters from the parental home.

After the discovery of the menacing comet, the audience is never allowed to lose sight of its existence. The miners stop to gaze apprehensively at the trail of fire that each night appears closer to the earth; there is a stock exchange panic on account of it, the astronomers hope to allay fear by preventing the publication of their conclusions, and so, in one way or another, the approaching horrors cast their shadows before. Excitement has been worked up to a high pitch before the skies release a shower of fire, and men, women and children, in helpless hundreds, flee from the flames and the floods.

Scene from "The End of the World" (Great Northern).

Although the spectacular scenes are of paramount importance in this picture, it should not be supposed that the production lacks other attractive qualities, in the charm of Norwegian settings and the interest aroused by a very passable story, ably acted, especially by Emma Thomsen and Olaf Fonss in the leading roles.

Two Kalem Releases

"Sauce for the Gander," No. 8 of "The Social Pirates" Series, and "An Innocent Vampire," a Sis Hopkins Comedy.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"Sauce for the Gander."

A PAIR of loan sharks, father and son, are made to refund the money wrung from one of their victims, in this instalment of "The Social Pirates." They are also obliged to contribute to the fund kept by Mona and Mary to aid them in their various schemes for setting right a little of the wrong that is daily being done in the world. An unfortunate young fellow, who has been driven to apply to the loan sharks, comes under the notice of lady members of the "Do the Villain Good" society. They immediately lay plans for his relief, the first move in the game being to make the acquaintance of the two sharks. Both gentlemen are single, and a little clever angling, with themselves as the bait, and Mary and Mona each hook one of the fishy brokers. Father and son are madly in love with their respective charmer, and a scheme is worked on the pair that is worthy a French builder of plots. Both men are made to believe that the other is the victim of a designing female, and that the only way out of a bad situation is to buy the woman off. With a touching exhibition of fatherly and filial devotion, this is accomplished, secretly, in both cases. The two sharks then exchange explanations and learn how they have been tricked, while Mona and Mary send for the unfortunate young fellow and hand him back his money. This moral bunko game is "pulled off" with all the expertness shown by some experienced society matron who is trying to land a title for her eldest daughter. To the credit of the gentlemen in the case, it must be set down that their intentions were most honorable and they were eager to place a wedding ring on the third finger of their respective ladyloves.

Scene from "Sauce for the Gander" (Kalem).

Realistic stage settings and sprightly acting on the part of Marin Sais, Ollie Kirkby, Frank Jonasson and B. Furey put this number of the George Bronson Howard serial on a par with the preceding instalments.

"An Innocent Vampire."

The author of this Sis Hopkins comedy is to be congratulated upon his choice of a title. Fancy, daring to call ingenuous and guileless Sis a vampire—just a plain vampire? The qualifying word saves the situation, however, and Miss Theda Bara is not in the slightest danger of having her laurels snatched from her brow by the lady of the rigid pigtails and the red flannel knickers. All of Sis' efforts at ensnaring the opposite sex are the source of innocent mirth, and Frank Howard Clark, the author of the scenario, has handed Miss Melville the material for a goodly number of laughs. Henry Murdock, Frank Minzey, Olive West, Arthur Albertson, Richard Purdon and Mary Kennedy are all expert at assisting the star in passing the laughs on to the man out in front.

Unicorn's Office Staff Complete

Personnel of the Inside Force of the New Twenty-one Reels a Week Program Company.

THE offices of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, at 126 West Forty-sixth street, are in full swing, the fourth week's releases now being sent out to exchanges. J. A. McKinney, the secretary of the company, said that an unusually competent office staff had been selected to fortify the work of Ike Schlank, the general manager of the company, to whose initiative the formation of the corporation is due. It came out in the course of a conversation between Mr. McKinney and a World man that the secretary had been acquainted with Mr. Schlank since the days of their youth, when Mr. McKinney was a reporter on the Omaha World-Herald and Mr. Schlank was an usher in the Orpheum Theater in the Nebraska city.

Mr. Schlank, who is at present in the South opening exchanges, has had an all-around experience in the amusement field and has a wide acquaintance with exhibitors and exchangemen. The Unicorn was erected around Mr. Schlank's ideas as to what is needed for the small exhibitors—a reasonably-priced twenty-one reel a week program, consisting of one and two-part subjects, well made and carrying with them attractive paper. It was Mr. Schlank's presentation of these ideas that induced Leslie R. Palmer, J. A. Coram and Alwyn Ball, Jr., respectively the president, vice-president and treasurer of the Unicorn, to finance the new organization.

At the head of the general office and exchange staff is P. A. Chase, who has had much auditing experience with film companies. Assisting him are F. L. Drum, L. M. Ball, Ross A. Coram and Charles Zureik. Harry A. Palmer has charge of program selection, lithographs and advertising sales helps. W. T. Crospinal has under his hand the titling, editing and printing of film. F. G. Reilly is in charge of the purchasing and shipping departments.

Comments on the Films

Exclusively by Our Own Staff.

General Film Company.

BUCKSHOT FEUD (Lubin), May 1.—Coarse humor is not lacking in this comedy featuring Davy Don. There is plenty of action, such as it is, and enough plot to connect the horse-play. Suitable for elementary audiences.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 35, 1916 (Selig), May 1.—City of Portland launched at St. Helens, Ore.; blind soldiers at Buckingham Palace, London; fire, Iowa City, Iowa; scenes in Chihuahua, Mexico; Ruth Law loops the loop in an aeroplane at night, Chicago; launching power boats, Lynn, Mass.; Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Dublin; the circus goes to New York hospital; cyclone at Stover, Mo.; U. of P. and Yale boat race, Philadelphia; "somewhere in Mexico."

HAM AND THE MASKED MARVEL (Kalem), May 2.—While this one-reel comedy can hardly be called an echo of the late match between Messrs. Willard and Moran, it is a much more amusing "go" during any and all of the rounds. Ham is not a scientific fighter, according to the rules of the ring, but he manages to knock out his man, as becomes the star of a moving picture scrap. And Bud helps him to put over the trick.

THE FABLE OF "THE PREACHER WHO FLEW HIS KITE, BUT NOT BECAUSE HE WISHED TO DO SO" (Essanay), May 3.—Long titles are not always an indication of merit in a picture—except in a George Ade fable. In the present one Brother Ade has found a fit subject for his powers of keen but kindly satire, and painted it with many a golden text that are among the best examples of his humorous jugglery of polite conversation.

ROMEO OF THE COAL WAGON (Kalem), May 3.—A one-reel comedy wherein is shown that a man in love will do anything to win the lady of his choice—even will he go to work shoveling coal. In this case the heroine is played by Ethel Teare, consequently the hero's supreme sacrifice is easily accounted for. Jack MacDermott, Victor Rottman and Gus Leonard round out the cast.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 36, 1916 (Selig), May 4.—San Francisco High School Cadets at drill; Lady Colebrooke in New York; trial of air cruiser, Sunnyvale, Cal.; Generals Scott and Funston at San Antonio; senators receive peace telegrams, Washington; army polo game, San Antonio; scenes at Chihuahua, Mexico; in the Argonne District, France.

THE BRAVE ONES (Vim), May 4.—Plump and Runt are called upon to occupy a haunted house and be entertained by a number of ghosts in this one-reel farce. The spooks turn out to be a party of counterfeiters (ghosts generally are, by the way) and there are lively doings in the old house when the sheriff takes a hand in the matter. "Babe" Hardy, Billy Ruge, Billie Blucher and Elsie MacLoed are the star "cut-ups" of the cast. An average Vim.

THE DUMB HEIRESS (Kalem), May 5.—It would be unkind to remark that to secure a wife that was both dumb and wealthy would be too much luck for one male being. Edwin Ray Coffin has turned out a well-fitting scenario for the utilizing of Miss Rose Melville's abilities in this one-reel Sis Hopkins comedy, and Henry Murdock, Frank Minzey, Arthur Albertson, Mary Kennedy and Olive West supply the remainder of the histrionic efforts. Director, Robert Ellis.

THE HUMAN TELEGRAPH (No. 78 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Kalem), May 6.—The circus stunt known as "The Slide for Life" is far outdone in this one-reel railroad drama. Helen Gibson performs a feat on the telegraph wires that not only foils the villain, but gives screen patrons a first-quality thrill. P. Pembroke and H. Schum are members of the cast. James Davis directed the picture.

SOME CHICKEN (Vitagraph), May 5.—Mary Anderson, Webster Campbell and the members of the Western Vitagraph Company make this one-reel farce vastly entertaining. A good finely-developed rooster has a strong crowing part. A capital one-reeler.

FATHER'S NIGHT OFF (Lubin), May 6.—A masque ball is where father comes to grief on his night off. A woman is the cause of his trouble. In this case, she is a good-looking domestic in father's household and father is married. A laughable farce, of which A. R. Lloyd is the author. Francis Joyner is amusing as father, and June Day as Marie furnishes father with an excellent excuse for his fall from grace.

General Film Company Specials.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE, NO. 15 (Essanay), May 1.—The concluding episode of the Essanay serial does not give the answer as to who killed Dave Pollock until just before the finish. In a story of this kind the main object is to sustain the interest by preventing the spectator from making the right guess. The way in which everyone has been made to suspect first one person then another during the progress of the trial stamps the author and the producer of the serial as adepts in the art of play construction. The efforts of the cast have never slackened from the opening reel, and the long trial has been conducted in an impressive and always interesting manner.

THE MASTER SWINDLERS (No. 6 of "The Social Pirates"—Kalem), May 1.—An attempt to steal a celebrated painting known as the "Mona Vanna," furnishes the motive for the two heroines to return to their favorite occupation of swindling the swindlers. A review of this picture was printed in the issue of May 6, page 987.

THE MAN WITHIN (Selig), May 1.—There is a directness of purpose and a truth to life in this three-reel photoplay, written by E. Lynn Summers, that take hold of the spectator at the start and never lose their grip. The story of a man's reclamation is generally worth the telling, the author of "The Man Within" presents, in the character played by Tom Mix, a man who conquers his weakness for liquor and makes himself worthy of the woman who trusted him. The part is right in Tom Mix's way, and Victoria Forde, Pat Chrisman, Sid Jordan and Joe Ryan also fit their respective roles.

IN THE MOON'S RAY (Essanay), May 2.—A valuable scarab which a gang of crooks try to steal from the home of a wealthy collector of curiosities is the "cue for action" in this two-reel drama. The picture is a fair example of its class and is ably presented by Francis X. Bushman, E. H. Calvert, Rapley Holmes, Bryant Washburn and Gerda Holmes.

THE CANDLE (Lubin), May 2.—Rather an ingeniously contrived two-part drama, written by Maude Thomas and Julian Lamothe and directed by Leon D. Kent. There is a story within a story, the principal characters being played by L. C. Shumway, Helen Eddy and Melvin Mayo. Mr. Mayo's portrayal of a hypnotist would be more impressive if his make-up were less farcical.

FIT FOR BURNING (Biograph), May 3.—Vera Sisson, Charles Perley, Gretchen Hartman, Charles H. Mailes, Ivan Christy, Cora Drew and Grace Hamilton are concerned in the telling of this three-reel photoplay. The author has turned the light upon a social reformer who is an arrant hypocrite and uses his position to ruin young girls. The story is strongly dramatic and moves forward steadily to a big climax. It is well acted.

NONE SO BLIND (Lubin), May 4.—A review of this three-part drama may be found in the issue of May 13. The story concerns the building of a submarine and the efforts of a dishonest contractor to compromise the government inspector, a lieutenant in the navy. A reasonably entertaining subject, well enough acted by Walter Spencer, Evelyn Page, Ruth Saville and Mona Darkfeather.

THE MATCHMAKERS (Edison), May 2.—A well thought-out western drama in three reels, this Edison production was reviewed in the issue of January 1, page 90.

THE OATH OF HATE (Knickerbocker), May 5.—Something of the atmosphere and strength of Jack London's "The Sea Wolf" is found in this three-reel photoplay. The author of the screen drama, however, has not scorned the happy ending. The picture is full of action, several of the scenes being on shipboard. Henry King is forceful as Captain Mark Stone, Marguerite Nicholls, Ethel Fleming and Louis J. Cody are also of value to the cast.

ONCE A THIEF (Essanay), May 6.—The new and the old material in this three-reel drama are about evenly divided. The result is an entertaining picture in which a young fellow who purloins money from his employer to help his crippled sister, proves that the saying, "Once a thief, always a thief," is not always true. Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig do their usual sincere work in the leading roles.

THE RESURRECTION OF HORACE (Vitagraph), May 6.—George Strayer Maxwell's three-reel photoplay has a fairly good plot, but the finish is cheapened by having the discarded lover act the cad. It weakens the character of the heroine to have accepted the attentions of such a fellow. Most of the names in the cast are new, but the performance is a creditable one. Walter MacGrail, Belle Bruce, Arthur Cozine, Kalman Matus and Helen Pillsbury have the principal parts.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

ELUSIVE ISABEL (Bluebird Photoplays), May 15.—This six-part production marks the return to the screen of Florence Lawrence, the popular screen star, after an absence of over a year. In the picture Miss Lawrence plays the role of a diplomatic spy, but it is to be deplored that a better adaptation of Jacques Futrelle's novel had not been provided this talented actress, and also that the production had not been given more competent direction. Miss Lawrence has done splendid work with the opportunities afforded her, which were few. A review will be found on page 1179 of issue of May 13.

A SON OF THE IMMORTALS (Bluebird), May 22.—A romantic story dealing with a mythical European kingdom. J. Warren Kerrigan appears to advantage in the role of an heroic prince and is ably assisted by Lois Wilson, Bertram Grassby and others. The picture is well staged and photographed. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 70 (Mutual), May 3.—One of the most interesting items of this number shows the placing of thermometers 300 feet in the air by the government frost survey to get the temperature of air currents in the orchards of the Northwest. The new auto line between San Francisco and Los Angeles, the opening of the bathing season at San Antonio, Texas, and the Buck aerial torpedo demonstration are also of special interest.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN'S ANCESTRIE (Beauty), May 3.—This farce comedy will be found entertaining to children as well as adults. Billy sitting reading at the fireside dreams a wonderful dream about his ancestry. In the dream he is the hero of the hour, living in the past of four or five centuries gone by.

M. T. DOME'S AWFUL NIGHT (Cub), May 5.—It is possible that some audiences would be much pleased with this film, while to others it would appeal as being exceedingly loathsome. It has to do almost entirely with a night of drunken adventure on the part of M. T. Dome, who, having brought home a new maid whom he makes love to at every opportunity, quarrels with his bride, and takes refuge at his club. There are no drinking scenes in the picture, but Dome is exhibited disgustingly drunk throughout the picture.

REEL LIFE, NO. 1 (Gaumont), May 7.—This first installment of an excellent educational series contains three intensely interesting and thoroughly exploited subjects, namely, "Alligator Life," "The Birth of a Butterfly" and "Feats of Horsemanship by Belgian Cavalrymen." All are clearly photographed and instructive.

GERMATIC LOVE (Vogue), May 9.—In this number, by Thomas Delmar, two tramps invade the professor's laboratory. He tests his love pills on them and they immediately fascinate the pupils of a girls' school. This is not in the best comedy tone, but is nonsensical and harmlessly amusing. Good photography helps the number.

SKELLY'S SKELETON (Beauty), May 10.—A comedy number, by Al Santell, featuring Carol Halloway, John Steppling and John Sheehan. The ghost party, at which the skeleton appears, makes a novel feature, and some good night photography is shown. This avoids the grewsome and keeps the comedy side uppermost, in spite of the weird settings. The number in quite entertaining.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 35 (Gaumont), May 10.—This number contains many interesting views in and about Atlanta, Ga., showing its public buildings, parks, numerous monuments and historic spots. We are also introduced to the home of Joel Chandler Harris. The granite mountain known as Gutzon Borglum is an interesting sight as photographed in this film. "The Escapades of Estelle," a comic cartoon serial by Harry Palmer, is continued in this number.

THE ESCAPADES OF ESTELLE (Gaumont), May 10.—On the same reel with the above, Estelle, a stout colored maiden, demonstrates her affection for chicken by paying a midnight visit to a neighbor's hen coop. Very amusing.

JERRY'S PERFECT DAY (Cub), May 12.—This farce comedy in which George Ovey features will be found acceptable and amusing to any audience. Jerry longing for a home and a housekeeper tries to bring about the realization of a beautiful dream by carrying off bodily a small wooden house in which explosives are stored. On the road he collides with an automobile filled with policemen out on a holiday with their wives. The house shattered to atoms leaves Jerry sitting on the road looking about him. Other amusing incidents close the reel.

NO TITLE (Beauty), May 14.—In this comedy the endeavor of the comedian to present himself to an heiress as a titled gentleman is amusing, but the burying of a man who awakes to find fish worms crawling over his face is not pleasant. He tells the story to his prospective father-in-law with a repetition of this unpleasant scene. There is no excuse for this unhealthy flight of fancy.

A MIXUP AT RUDOLPH'S (Vogue), May 14.—A comic number which has numerous funny scenes, but lacks continuity. The characters are introduced without proper explanation and the action has scarcely a thread of logic to hold it together. This renders much of the humor ineffective. The characterizations and photography are good, but the production as a whole disappointing.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE COUNTERFEIT EARL (American), April 24.—An excellent two-part comedy-drama in which George Periolat plays a double role. Louise Lester, Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburg are also leading members of the cast. The story concerns itself with the effort of a rich ranchwoman to get herself and her daughter into society. She is piloted by a friend whose Bible is the "Blue Book." An English earl is invited to visit them, and a master burglar contriving to take the place of the earl's valet while at a ball given in the earl's honor manages to mix things up in a very amusing fashion, and is finally taken into the cutody of the police.

WITH A LIFE AT STAKE (Mustang), May 5.—A two-part production which contains an old-fashioned thrill. The stars of the performance are Art Acord and Nita Davis. The story has to do with the persecution of a young woman by one of the toughs of a western town, who seeks to secure her for his wife. In revenge for her treatment of him he shoots her and she is miraculously rescued from death on the railroad track where she has fallen from her horse, by her cowboy lover. An entertaining offering with a good moral.

THE TOUCH ON THE KEY (American), May 8.—A two-reel newspaper story, by Anthony W. Coldewey, featuring Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat. The girl saves her paper from a beat by her knowledge of telegraphy. This has a good newspaper-story atmosphere, is brightly pictured and presented by an attractive cast. There is nothing extremely novel about it, but the struggle at the keyboard is exciting and contains some suspense. An entertaining number.

WHEN SHE PLAYED BROADWAY (Thanhouser), May 9.—A two-reel subject, by Lloyd Lonergan, featuring Gladys Hulette, who proves very appealing in the leading role. Her cowboy admirer saves her from insult while she is acting as a waitress. Later she carries out her ambition to star on Broadway, and he again saves her, this time from the "backer" of the play. Some of the scenes are theatrical, but this lends a spice of interest, as some of the situations would otherwise seem too familiar. The trapdoor, manipulated by the old stage hand, makes a pleasing feature. This strikes a good average in interest.

THE PROFLIGATE (American), May 11.—A three-reel subject by C. B. Hoadley, featuring Winifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen, Louise Lester and George Field. The story concerns a girl who loves a young attorney, but whose ambitious mother desires her to marry a banker's son. The latter ruins a girl, whom he abandons. Later there is a murder of which the banker's son is falsely accused. He is sent to the electric chair, but the young attorney saves him at the last moment. The confession scene is admirably handled. This inclines to the melodramatic and sensational, but is well handled and makes a good subject of the type.

HER FATHER'S GOLD (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe Thanhouser), May 11.—This five-part production is not an especially well-constructed one, and consequently is not as entertaining as it might be. There is a crudeness about the entire production that seems inexcusable. The story concerns the theft of a quantity of gold bar from a certain mine, and deals in a rather disjointed manner with the adventures attendant on the discovery of the whereabouts of the gold, and its final rescue. The action of the play is to a large extent overdrawn.

AVENGED BY LIONS (Centaur), May 13.—A two-part production from the Horsley studios that is fairly entertaining. The scene of the story is laid in South Africa where the pretty daughter of a Boer farmer is pursued and attacked by a half breed. The interpolation of a side issue which brings a party of railway surveyors leads to the rescue of the girl by the head of the surveying party, and ends with the final good-will of the farmer, hitherto an enemy, being given to the surveyors. A lion pouncing upon the half breed in the jungle avenges his wicked deed.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE, NO. 2 (Mutual Special Feature), May 18.—The second episode of this new serial shows the escape of the wily Japanese, Satsuma, after having been the cause of the submarine upon which Burke is demonstrating the efficiency of his new invention being flooded with water. In this episode the plot of the story gets well under way, and closes with the mysterious death of Burke, who is found dead in his workshop. The story affords opportunity for interesting developments and it is anticipated that each chapter will prove more interesting than the last.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

MARIA ROSA (Lasky), May 8.—Geraldine Farrar is seen at her best in this meritorious film. The story enables her to fulfill her task to the best advantage. It holds interest throughout. As in previous Lasky productions the photography and settings are most striking. This film was reviewed in last week's issue.

BOBBY BUMPS AND HIS GOATOMOBILE (Bray Cartoon), May 17.—A really original and humorous drawing made by Earl Hurd of the Bray Studios. The conception is well out of the ordinary and the execution is marked by a number of unusual touches. The reel is completed by one of E. L. Ditmar's capital nature studies, entitled "Mothland Mysteries."

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 34, 1916 (Pathe), April 26.—This number contains several interesting items in connection with the Shakespeare celebration. There are also instructive views of New York firemen rescuing victims from burning buildings, scenes from the opening of the water sports season at Oakland, Cal., and other interesting events of current importance.

TROUBLE ENOUGH (Starlight), May 1.—In this farce comedy Heinie and Louie by chance fall heir to an enviable position. A young woman of wealth pursued by a couple of robbers is rescued by them and they are taken into the bosom of her family much to the annoyance of her male friends, who enter the house at night in startling disguise, causing a general eruption. This picture is entertaining.

THE BOOB WEEKLY (Pathe), May 8.—The first of a series of cartoons by R. L. Goldberg of the Evening Mail. Some excruciatingly funny ideas have been protruded in this cartoon number, among which is the messenger boys' with a donation of an ash can to the scrap heap, a study in natural history in which a collar button on a hunt in a South American haberdashery mistakes a bogus shirt front for a real one and is easily captured in the collar box. Other equally amusing incidents born in the brain of Goldberg occur in this film, which measures possibly 700 feet in length.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

DROSS AND DIAMONDS (Arrow), April 29.—A two-part drama featuring Emmy Wehlen and Howard Estabrook. The story has been rather clumsily presented. There seem to be a number of truths which both author and director have tried to present, but these have not been presented clearly. The character of the father, a police officer of high standing, is considerably overdrawn. The giving up of his own son in a heartless manner without listening to his story or thoroughly investigating the case doesn't ring quite true. We do not mean by the above remarks that the picture is uninteresting, but it does suffer considerable by a crudeness of design.

THE IRON CLAW NO. 10 (Pathe), May 1.—"The Living Dead" is rather a startling episode inasmuch as a large portion of it deals with cemetery subjects. The spectator is kept guessing through almost the entire two reels as to whether Davy, Golden's secretary, is dead or alive. A clever scheme is planned by which a wax masque of Davy is fastened on a dummy and placed in the Golden vault after a fake funeral service has been conducted. The laughing mask plays a large part in this episode in which Legar about to be captured in the vault uses a quick explosive which shatters the vault. The question left with the spectator is, "Did Davy survive the explosion?

Triangle Film Corp.

THE SNOW CURE (Keystone), April 23.—A rattling good farce of a new kind, one presenting some entirely new backgrounds for amusing action, with a big black bear rivaling Ford Sterling in the action. Reviewed on page 1350 of this issue.

NOT MY SISTER (Ince), May 14.—A very strong story with some high situations, marvelously well interpreted by Bessie Barriscale and a fine supporting cast. Reviewed on page 1350 of this issue.

SUSAN ROCKS THE BOAT (Fine Arts), May 14.—A comedy of the uplift, with Dorothy Gish, Owen Moore and Fred. J. Butler in some very interesting work. A high-class story straight through.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

THE BANKRUPTCY OF BOGGS AND SHULTZ (L-KO), May 3.—A knockabout comedy number, featuring Dick Smith, Ray Griffith and Alice Howell. The partners try to rob their own safe, in which the janitor and stenographer are hiding. The situation is a funny one, but the knockabout scenes seem a little overdone. The number is fairly strong.

HE'S A DEVIL (Nestor), May 15.—Betty Compson, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Ethel Lynn appear in this comedy number. Eddie dreams that he has a visit from the devil and sells his soul, a la Faust; some masquerade visitors help the illusion. The situations are amusing and the number quite entertaining as a whole.

GROUCHES AND SMILES (Laemmle), May 18.—A pleasing little comedy number, featuring Alfred Allen and Myrtle Gonzales, also a clever small boy. The child climbs into an automobile and is carried away by a rich man, who afterward makes the sister his secretary. The tailpiece is novel and amusing.

NOME, ALASKA (Power's), May 18.—An unusually pleasing half reel, giving splendid views of this city in the land of the midnight sun. It gives a very realistic impression of the place, showing among many other things the way passengers are landed from vessels, there being no harbor at Nome.

A RAFFLE FOR A HUSBAND (Joker), May 20.—An amusing number, written by Gale Henry, who appears, with Wm. Franey, Milburne Moranti and Lillian Peacock. The young man, who is broke, raffles himself off. The janitress gets the lucky ticket, but neither wishes to wed, so two elopements follow. This carries the interest well and has some laughable moments.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE DUMB GIRL OF PORTICI (Universal) (State Rights), April.—An elaborate seven-reel production made by the Smalleys from Auber's opera "Masaniello," with Anna Pavlowa as the star, assisted by the Ballet Russe. The picture is extremely artistic, but not marked by exceptional dramatic strength.

THE MARRIAGE OF ARTHUR (Laemmle), May 7.—A two-reel subject introducing Rupert Julian in an interesting character creation. He appears as a conceited dandy who marries a country girl in order to inherit money. He neglects her because he says she is a dowdy and she retaliates by dressing in fine apparel and going to a cabaret with another. The character presented by Mr. Julian is an entertaining one, but the plot of the story is only mildly interesting. Elsie Jane Wilson and Hal Cooley also appear.

A STRANGE INHERITANCE (Universal Special), May 8.—No. 2 of the "Peg o' the Ring" series. This continues, in a lively fashion, the adventures of Peg, a daughter of the circus. Her father's second wife has conspired with a Hindoo accomplice, portrayed by Irving Lippner, to kidnap Peg and get her out of the way. Flip still has in his possession the letter left by Peg's mother, to be opened by the girl on her eighteenth birthday. The circus scenes are unique and some good turns are shown incidental to the story. Peg is kidnapped and Lund, Jr., comes to the rescue. The installment closes with both at the mercy of the Hindoo and his gang.

A SOUL FOR SALE (Rex), May 14.—A three-reel subject, enacted by an English company. This concerns a drunken father who allows a lord to marry his daughter for money. Later the father kills Sir Jasper and the wife is accused of the crime. At the trial scene she is freed by her father's dying confession. This is melodrama of the old type, but handled weakly and lacking the usual sensations. The best scenes are during the trial, but this does not come till toward the close. A rather weak production.

THE YOUTH OF FORTUNE (Red Feather), May 15.—A five-reel subject, by Otis Turner, featuring Carter and Flora Parker De Haven, Maude George, Harry Carter and Harry Depp. This is a breezy, light running story, with a pleasing juvenile flavor in the leading roles. The plot is not overly strong, but contains some good comedy situations and holds the interest well throughout. Carter De Haven appears as the grandson of a wealthy old fellow, who thinks the boy's parents are a little too anxious to get his money. The old man dies, leaving the property to the boy, amounting to $50,000,000. The fun comes in when the parents, who have been divorced, claim guardianship and are outwitted. An entertaining light comedy subject.

DARCY OF THE NORTHWEST MOUNTED (Gold Seal), May 16.—A strong three-reel outdoor subject by Walter Woods, featuring Herbert Rawlinson, Agnes Vernon and Barney Furey. The story concerns a trader who is falsely suspected of murdering and robbing a messenger. The young officer takes the trail and brings the true criminal to justice after many difficulties. The killing of the drunken mother in the cabin was too brutally done, but this may be cut if desired. The story closes with the young officer and the girl reunited and the trader cleared of suspicion. The photography is excellent and the wood scenes are unusually good.

HEARTACHES (Laemmle), May 19.—A two-reel number, by Grant Carpenter, featuring Emory Johnson, Alfred Allen and Dorothy Davenport. This is a tale of an old Southern plantation, in which the owner tells the girl how his romance was shattered as the result of a quarrel over nothing. This induces the girl to return to her lover and patch up their differences. There is no particular novelty of plot in this; it is just a pretty story of a sentimental sort, enacted by a pleasing cast amid attractive surroundings.

World-Equitable.

HER MATERNAL RIGHT (Paragon), May 8.—Playing a musical comedy star in this five-part melodrama, Kitty Gordon has a role that permits the wearing of many fashionable gowns. She always presents an attractive appearance in a picture of fair appeal, reviewed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

U. S. MARINES UNDER FIRE IN HAITI (Feinberg Amusement Co.), April.—In this collection of films we get a good idea of the work our marines are able to do when put to the test. Most of the scenes show the work of the U. S. Marines in Haiti, showing actual engagements between them and the rebel forces. These films are to be exhibited throughout the country in the interests of preparedness.

Irish Film Timely

Kalem Reissues "The Irish Rebel" at Request of Exhibitors Seeking Timely Offerings.

"THE IRISH REBEL," remembered as one of the strongest of Kalem's famous Irish dramas, will be reissued on Tuesday, May 16th, as the result of requests received from exhibitors seeking offerings that will benefit by current interest in happenings across the water. This is a one-reel picture, and it will be available to all exhibitors at General Film offices.

Every scene of "The Irish Rebel," also known as "The O'Neil," was taken in the vicinity of Dublin, and on the spots that have figured so prominently in the news columns. The story is one of Ireland in rebellion, taken from some of the most interesting pages of Irish history.

NEW HORSLEY PLAYER.

Thelma Salter, a blonde-haired, blue-eyed little miss of six, is the latest acquisition of the Horsley-Mutual studios. This charming little lady has been in picture work ever since she was two years old. Her engagements include numerous appearances in feature productions and comedies in which she has played in support of some of the screen's most notable stars. Her first appearance in Horsley-Mutual productions will be in support of Crane Wilbur in "The Wasted Years," a forthcoming Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition. The role she assumes in this production gives the little miss a wonderful opportunity to display her very rare talent as a child actress.

New Cub Players.

Rosebud Hill and Clair Alexander are among the recent additions to the Cub-Mutual studios. They will make their initial appearance in "The Traitor," featuring George Ovey.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

GEORGE BEBAN IN NEXT MOROSCO RELEASE.

As its next offering on the Paramount program, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company announces George Beban in "Pasquale," a stirring drama of modern times, written by the star in collaboration with Lawrence McClusky.

In "Pasquale," George Beban is displayed in what is felt will prove his greatest vehicle ever presented either on the screen or stage. The story has to do with the lives of a hard-working and kind Italian grocer and a wealthy banker, both of whom are called to the other side to defend their colors. The many dramatic qualities of the plot are offset by various incidents of unusual heart-interest, which are brought out to particular advantage and in a manner such as only George Beban can present. Aside from the merit of the story itself, the production offers many qualities, the combination of which results in making this one of the best subjects yet given to Paramount patrons by Oliver Morosco.

In the way of spectacular displays several immense battle scenes under the chief direction of William D. Taylor and showing monstrous machines of war at work, together with a thrilling hand-to-hand struggle in the trenches, are presented. A fleet of Zeppelins in the sky at night with searchlights playing upon them and the final destruction of a complete section of a modern trench display additional scenes of unusual quality. An unexpected thrill to the film was secured when an auto going at full speed almost completely overturned within the focus of the camera. Thus "Pasquale" will disclose the most remarkable pictures of an automobile accident ever filmed.

Supporting the star is another splendid cast of players such as is evident in all Morosco productions. Myrtle Stedman, as the banker's wife, and Helen Eddy, in the role of Margarita, the poor Italian girl, together with such talented players as Page Peters, Jack Nelson and Nigel deBruillier, appear in the most important characters. Homer Scott displays his usual abiilty as a photographer par excellence, and has secured several remarkable effects. "Pasquale" will be released on the Paramount Program May 18th.

REVIVAL SOLOIST IN PICTURES.

Edward Martindell, who will be seen as the leading man with Mme. Petrova in "The Scarlet Woman," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay, and who also had a prominent role in "The Lure of Heart's Desire," with Edmund Breese, began his professional career as a singer. He was born in Hamilton, Ohio, and studied singing in the Conservatory of Music in Cincinnati. After he was graduated from there he came East and for three years was the soloist at the Broadway Tabernacle. His first appearance upon the stage was with Lulu Glazer, with whom he remained for three seasons. Later he was starred in "The Alaskan," "Totem Pole Pete," "The Commanding Officer," and "Behold Thy Wife." His first appearance in motion pictures was in "The Foundling," playing the leading male role with Mary Pickford.

GEORGE LEGUERE STILL WITH METRO.

George LeGuere, who was last seen on the Metro program in "The Blindness of Love," with Julius Steger and Grace Valentine, is under contract to appear in at least two more Metro wonderplays, and has not given up motion pictures as reported. Mr. LeGuere has been granted a leave of absence, during which time he is privileged to do anything he desires, save appear in motion pictures. At present Mr. LeGuere is playing an engagement on the speaking stage with Margaret Anglin and Holbrook Blinn in "A Woman of No Importance," the Oscar Wilde play now enjoying a successful revival.

BURGER VISITS PHILADELPHIA.

J. K. Burger, in charge of the Hearst Exchange, has just returned from Philadelphia, where, owing to his efforts, an increase of $8,000 in booking resulted. Mr. Burger was very enthusiastic as regards conditions in the Philadelphia territory, and anticipates "The Mysteries of Myra" will establish a high-water mark for feature series. While there he entertained the executives and employees of the International Film Service in Philadelphia at luncheon.

POLICE DOG IN FLIRTATIOUS FROLIC (Paramount).

The flirtatious frolics of C. T. Anderson's police dog form the screen antics of the twentieth release of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, "The Police Dog in the Park."

Sitting with a cop on a park bench the police dog sees seated on a bench in the distance a small dog and a girl. Through his glasses he looks at his neighbor, and then, gazing off into the distance, catches a glimpse of a black and white cat, who are making love. The black cat chases the white one out of the picture and the police dog, throwing down his glasses, follows them. In his absence the small dog begins to flirt with a big bulldog. When the police dog returns the large black cat has reentered the picture and taken a seat near a fence. The police dog immediately picks up the cat and goes out. He enters a packing box, where the wife and children of the black cat are waiting, and leaves him safely at home.

Returning to his friends the police dog finds the little black dog sitting in the lap of the bull dog, while the cop is sitting beside the girl on the bench. He remonstrates with the bulldog, but is sent flying out of the picture. Then he remembers to use his police whistle and the cop, hearing it, starts to go out of the picture. Catching sight of the bulldog, the cop chases him and is at once engaged in a tooth and nail struggle. This leaves the police dog at liberty to carry on his flirtation.

ANITA STEWART AS A NIHILIST LEADER.

Anita Stewart, Vitagraph's famous star, will make her latest appearance in "The Suspect," a five-part Blue Ribbon Feature, which is listed for release the latter part of May.

The theme of the story was taken from H. J. Dam's book entitled "The Silver Shell." S. Rankin Drew is responsible for the picturization as well as its direction. He also plays the lead opposite Miss Stewart.

The popular Vitagraph beauty in the role of a leader of a society of nihilists is given many opportunities to display her ability. There are many big, intense moments in this photoplay masterpiece and they are put over in the inimitable "Stewart" way. In "A Million Bid," "The Goddess," "Sins of the Mothers," "My Lady's Slipper" and other photoplays of like repute, Miss Stewart won innumerable admirers. We feel justified in making the prophesy that in "The Suspect" she will add thousands to her already countless list of followers.

Many Vitagraphers of prominence, including Anders Randolf, Julia Swayne Gordon, Bobby Connelly and Edward Elkas, appear in the cast with Miss Stewart. It also introduces Frank Wupperman, a new face in the big "V" films.

Lovers of good drama—one which holds and has a punch—should not fail to see "The Suspect." S. Rankin Drew in filming the play presents Russian conditions which existed a few years ago in lifelike fashion. He also introduces some new and pleasing light effects.

THE PROOF OF STATE RIGHTS.

A policy adopted by the Sun Photoplay Company in disposing of their five-reel feature photoplay, "A Woman Wills," starring Elsie LeClaire, appears to be the last word in the systemization of the matter of sales of photoplays on the State Rights basis. Not content with depending upon their own judgment as to the value of a feature and in order to determine more truly the worth of the feature to State Rights buyers in territories conceded to be fruitful fields, the officers of that corporation have determined first to dispose of the States that are recognized in the industry to be less popular ones from the motion picture standpoint, which States are usually known as the "Mountain States" and far west. Contracts have been entered into for the sale of the rights of the production, "A Woman Wills," for the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Montana, Colorado and Idaho. These contracts call for the delivery of a total of eight prints. This quick sale of the production so soon after the announcement of its release substantiates the judgment of those exploiting the production that it must prove a vast success and more than a desirable feature in the middle western, far eastern and south territories. The production is unusual in its treatment of a theme entirely modern and is based upon a drama originally written around events that have occurred in real life, and the records of which form part of the official files of the United States Government at Washington.

"THE HARD WAY" (Selig).

Jack Pickford more than upholds the name of the versatile Pickford family in the role of Jack Ransom, a high school boy with a penchant for sowing his wild oats, in the Selig multiple reel feature, "The Hard Way," produced by T. N. Heffron, from the story written by Russell E. Smith, and released through General Film Company on Monday, May 15. Versatile Jack is most ably supported in this unusual and entertaining comedy drama by an exceptional company of Selig stars, which include Harry Lonsdale, Lillian Hayward, Vivian Reed, Sidney Smith and James Bradbury.

During the course of the action there is a thrilling automobile wreck in which the car, driven by Jack Pickford and loaded with merry-makers, crashes into a telephone post, capsizes and the occupants are dashed to earth. This automobile crash plays an important part in the unfolding of the story.

"The Hard Way" carries a good moral lesson to boys and girls who, just entering into the portals of young manhood and young womanhood, are sometimes prone to be tempted into the broad way, which very frequently leads to destruction. Parents should not only view this production, but should induce their children to accompany them to the theater where "The Hard Way" is presented. The production is bound to accomplish much good. The scenic effects in "The Hard Way" are beautiful, and the acting and production leave nothing to be desired. It is just another one of those unusual productions, being released through General Film Service by the Selig Company, and which are causing Filmland to sit up and take notice.

SPECIAL COURSE TICKETS FOR "GLORIA'S ROMANCE."

Exhibitors in many of the big cities where "Gloria's Romance," the new twenty-chapter George Kleine motion picture novel is booked are arranging to offer their patrons special course tickets for the entire twenty chapters of the big Rupert Hughes story. For instance, houses that customarily charge 15 cts. admission and for which the patron would ordinarily have to pay $3 for the full twenty admissions to the theater during the run of "Gloria's Romance," can secure a "season ticket," good for the entire twenty feature chapters of the tale, at $2.50. Ten-cent houses are making a corresponding reduction and offering their patrons "season tickets" at $1.50 apiece, thus cutting the total admission for the full twenty performances from $2. The plan is meeting with great favor and already thousands of the season tickets are being sold.

PATHE TO RELEASE CLYDE FITCH PLAY.

Pathe announces for release on their Gold Rooster program in the week beginning May 15, to follow "Big Jim Garrity," Clyde Fitch's successful drama, "The Girl With the Green Eyes." "The Girl With the Green Eyes" was produced by the Popular Plays and Players Company for Pathe's Gold Rooster program, and features Katharine Kaelred and Julian L'Estrange. The story has been sumptuously produced with careful attention to the big "little things," and Katharine Kaelred and Julian L'Estrange make splendid types for their respective parts.

WORLD'S FINE FEATHERS STOLEN!

A five (5) reel subject featuring Janet Beecher in "Fine Feathers" was stolen from the Plaza theater, Boonton, N. J., on the night of April 15th, 1916. The exhibitors and those connected with the industry will confer a great favor upon the World Film Corporation if they will wire immediately any information pertaining to the aforesaid named feature. Send all wires collect.

"A ROSE OF ITALY" (Essanay).

The predominating feature of this play is its strict adherence to type. It is an Italian story—a tale of immigrants meeting with their first experiences in the land of promise—America. The boy has been in America—long before the girl, with her quaint garb and strange luggage, arrived. He was on his way to becoming a lawyer. But she, ignorant even of the language, sprang to fame before he did. She laughed in the first flush of her success, at his seemingly hopeless attempts to rise in the new world. But, finding that all success has its price, and that too great, she finally decided that all worldly fame was empty compared to being the wife of one of her own people. Ann Kirk, who fits the part wonderfully, is seen in the feminine lead, with Edmund F. Cobb as the masculine principal. Patrick Calhoun and Richardson Cotton are seen in the chief supporting parts. The story is one that is delightfully told in three reels. A vendetta time clock bomb explosion is one of the best pieces of picture construction ever seen in a film of this length. The story was written by Charles Michelson and directed by Harry Beamont.

Scene from "A Rose of Italy" (Essanay).

"THE SHADOW OF A CRIME" (Universal).

Producer Henry McRae has just finished a two-reel railway film play entitled "The Shadow of a Crime," which fully lives up to the reputation of this director for putting a punch into every scene. But in this one McRae blew up a train of dynamite near Chatsworth Park in Los Angeles County that shook the neighborhood for miles around, threw rocks and dirt all over himself, Tom Walsh, his assistant, and fell all around the camera in charge of Cameraman Cook. The effects of this explosion will be shown on the screen and in addition there was some wonderful riding and other thrills in this remarkable photoplay.

"ARMADALE" IS FIRST GAUMONT RELEASE.

Believing that it is the best policy to give purchasers of shorter features the same service they get when buying a Gaumont five-reel feature, the Gaumont company has provided an exceptional cast for its first three-reel release. The story is "Armadale," from the celebrated novel of the same name by Wilkie Collins. To inaugurate these photoplays Gaumont presents in "Armadale" Miss Iva Shepard and Alexander Gadon, stars of such big productions as "The Haunted Manor" and "The Drifter." Playing with them are Lucile Taft, Kathleen Butler, Henry W. Pemberton, Robert Clugston, John Reinhard, Charles A. Travis, James Levering, John Mackin and Harry Chira.

These three-reel Gaumont productions are to be released as Mutual Pictures, one every other week. The first will be seen on the screen May 25th. The features are being made by the Gaumont company to supply the needs of vaudeville houses and summer theaters which do not charge enough to warrant running a five-reel Mutual masterpiece, since the spectators can only be given five reels at the most.

In "Armadale" these prominent Gaumont players have done some of their best work. The Wilkie Collins story gives prominence to so many characters that unusual opportunities have been given to a great many Gaumont favorites in addition to the stars. Mr. Gaden is seen in a particularly congenial role, that of Ozias Midwinter, son of the adopted Alan Armadale. Miss Shepard returns in this photodrama to an adventuress role, being cast as the malevolent Miss Gwilt. Robert Clugston appears as the cast-off son of the house of Armadale, losing his life at last in the locked stateroom aboard ship. The entire story has been filmed in an effective manner.

NURSE CAVELL PICTURE GREAT SUCCESS.

"Nurse and Martyr," the title of the feature film founded upon the story of the life and death of Nurse Cavell, has, in response to numerous requests, been shown in Vancouver first at the Orpheum theater, which is the largest motion picture house in that city, and proved to be a sensational success and to the taste of the large crowds that saw this realistic film. The Dominion Exclusives, Limited, which has acquired the entire Canadian exhibiting rights on this reverently treated production, report that it has proven to be the biggest success they have handled so far.

DEMOLISH HOUSE FOR "HAZARD."

Director James Davis, of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen" company, kept a crew of men at work for several days erecting a two-story bunk house and signal tower, and then in a half-minute razed the structure to the ground to provide a thrill for a coming one reel "Hazard." "One Chance in a Hundred" is the title of the release for which this thrill was filmed.

The story of the picture calls for Helen Gibson to pursue a runaway flat car on a motorcycle. One of the early thrills comes when she boards the flat car from the motorcycle by speeding up the runway of the baggage depot and then swerving the motorcycle so as to be above the flat car as it speeds along.

Helen then faces a brief struggle with the brakes before she discovers that they will not work. Fortunately a flagman ahead sees her signal and sends the flatcar on a siding just in time to escape the oncoming passenger. But on the siding another danger faces her. She cannot stop the flatcar, and immediately ahead there is a two-story building. It is then that the smash-up comes, Helen and the injured superintendent, who was lying on the flatcar, barely jumping to safety in time.

So great was the speed of the flatcar when the scene was photographed that it crashed right through the house, carrying the upper story along for many feet before the whole structure tumbled to the ground. "One Chance in a Hundred" is scheduled for release on Saturday, May 20th.

PATHE'S "GOLDBERG ANIMATED CARTOONS" BRING RECORD PRICE.

Records in the motion picture business, which have been fractured several times of late, were again eclipsed on May 2 when Pathe announced that the Strand theater, at Broadway and 47th street, New York, had paid $1,500 for one week's first run of the "Boob Weekly," the first Goldberg Animated Cartoon to be released. As this cartoon is but five hundred feet in length, the rental figures a price of $3 a foot for the week, or in running time of the picture $200 per minute. This price has never been approached, and it is hard to believe that it will ever be equaled.

No vaudeville star ever drew such a princely income for a seven and a half minute show; no favorite of the speaking stage has ever come anywhere near it, and only one grand opera singer has ever equaled it. On the face of the evidence, humor seems to be more profitable by far than drama.

Messrs. Mitchell Mark, B. A. Rolfe and Max Spiegel, of the Strand forces, and Messrs. C. R. Seelye and Epstein, of Pathe, who closed the contract, have made arrangements whereby the Goldberg Animated Cartoons will be shown at the Strand regularly for several months.

Chaplin's Latest Feature, "The Police" is Here

This New Vehicle of Tremendous Laugh-Getting Possibilities Ranks With His Greatest Work.

THE preceding Essanay-Chaplin release, "Charley Chaplin's Burlesque on Carmen," broke all attendance records in the history of every theater where shown. "Police" is its only rival—another comet amidst a firmament of film. "One of my greatest pictures," said Chaplin when he completed it. It is not any greater than "Carmen," but it is still great. "Carmen" kept spectators laughing all the while; so will "Police." Both of them are comedy classics.

In this picture Chaplin is a released convict. A prison parson exhorts him to go straight, but takes the $5 which was given him on his discharge. Chaplin's efforts to recover his money are mirth-provoking. He falls in with a burglar whom he knew in prison. They try to break into a house. The "jimmy" will not open the window, so Chaplin walks in the door, which was open all the time.

He breaks open the mail box, the piano and the kitchen stove—being a rather inexperienced burglar—and then contents himself with stealing the flowers off the table, much to the disgust of his accomplice, who takes the rings of the lady of the house. She saves Chaplin from arrest when the police come, and gives him some change. He goes to a 10-cent lodging house and demoralizes the place, showing the others how to quiet noisy guests. He accomplished this in a simple manner, merely striking them over the head with bottles.

His burglar friend comes in, and with a free-for-all fight Chaplin recovers the lady's jewels and returns them to her next day. Then a policeman whom Chaplin had never done anything to, except hit on the head with a mallet, chases him off the steps just when he had hopes of winning the wealthy widow. If there is anything funnier than Chaplin's walk, it is his run. He is constantly dodging policemen in a manner to cause merriment to all.

"BADGERED" (Selig).

James Bradbury, Al W. Filson, Edith Johnson and a strong supporting company of players contribute to the excellence of the Selig drama, "Badgered," released Saturday, April 29th, through Scene from "Badgered" (Selig).

General Film Service. This is a drama produced by T. N. Heffron, from the story written by Wm. M. Henry, and it convincingly and appealingly presents the story of how a political plot centered against a rising young statesman, was circumvented in the end, and how this statesman won the daughter of the political dictator. Exciting situations follow one another in repeated succession, and the final climax is a most powerful one.

FOUR KEYSTONES SHIPPED IN ONE WEEK.

To meet the demand for Keystone comedies, four new Sennett farces were shipped from the Edendale studios last week and will go out on the Triangle service at once. One of them, "The Lion and the Girl," is expected to duplicate the thrills of "The Snow Cure," which preceded it out of the west and is S. L. Rothapfel's comedy feature at the Rialto theater this week. "The Snow Cure" gave Ford Sterling a chance to pit his speed against a bear; in "The Lion and the Girl" Claire Anderson is a foil for a husky specimen of the king of beasts. Joe Jackson is the star of this feature.

MISS GOODE, "THE SAMARITAN" (Triangle).

De Wolf Hopper's third Triangle picture, "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan," soon to be released, is like a family reunion. Fay Tincher, previously the huge comedian's petite foil in "Don Quixote" and "Sunshine Dad," again has the principal feminine role; Chester Withey completes his trio of scenarios and the heavy roles as well; Edward Dillon is again the director and for the second time plays a part. This combination will be broken up when the Hopper film version of the baseball classic, "Casey at the Bat," is completed. Margaret Marsh, Lillian Langdon and Max Davidson have the other important roles in "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan."

Hopper is Alphonso Irving Goode, a philanthropic character, whose wife and daughter are snobbish. Having discharged the chauffeur for some petty reason, the Goodes start on a motor trip with Evelina, the daughter, at the wheel. She is soon replaced by her father and trouble begins. He stalls the engine and later throws in the reverse, the car bumps a tree and catches on fire. Father, mother and daughter escape and start to walk the two miles to their destination. On the way they are picked up by a crook who has stolen a machine. He sells it to Goode, who is arrested for the theft and thrown into jail. Conditions here are so vile that he is moved to reform all jails. He invites the pair of crooks to a party, at which the man who sold him the automobile is also present.

On this foundation Hopper and his associates erect an elaborate structure of fun. The last week in May is the date set for general release of "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan."

HAZEL DAWN STARS AS "THE FEUD GIRL."

There are many points of exceptional interest about "The Feud Girl," the Famous Players release of May 15, as it is the first feud story ever to be filmed in a real feud country. The mountains which form the background for "The Feud Girl" have been the actual setting of many a grim scene in days gone by, for it was in these very hills that some of the most bitter struggles have been fought out. Many of the bearded old men who responded to Director Thomson's call for volunteers when he was collecting "fighters" for the Haddon-Bassett feud were men who had taken part in these scenes of years gone by, and there were many interesting and exciting tales spun by them.

Thomson, always ready to adapt himself to his surroundings, incorporated some of the best incidents into the action of the photoplay, with the result that the feud is perhaps the most realistic that has ever been depicted on the screen.

As Nell Haddon, the wild mountain daughter of old Haddon, the leader of one of the warring factions, Hazel Dawn does superb work. It is one of the most tenderly sweet, but unusually powerful characterizations which she has ever done on the screen. In support of Miss Dawn there appear Irving Cummings, Hardee Kirkland, Arthur Morrison, Russell Bassett and several others who are equally well known.

"THE HOLDUP OF THE HARDING SPECIAL" (Universal).

Scenes of surpassing beauty form a feature of "The Hold-Up of the Harding Special," a Universal feature photoplay scheduled for release in the near future. In one scene more than five hundred sheep are seen browsing on a hillside while the action of the play takes place in the foreground.

So many pastoral dramas have been produced at Universal City that more than eighteen months ago it was decided to get a small flock of sheep. Many of the ranchers and employees of the city also purchased a few head and put them in to graze with the Universal's stock so that in the last year and a half the total number of lambkins has risen to a considerable total.

"The Hold-Up of the Harding Special" was written by Wright Roberts and produced by Henry McRae. Marie Walcamp plays the role of Ruth Martin, who wanders away while a child and falls in with a band of roving sheep thieves. Miss Walcamp is supported by E. N. Walleck, Lois White, Lee Hill, L. C. Shumway and Marc Fenton.

"GLORIA'S ROMANCE" (Kleine).

Chapter one of "Gloria's Romance," the new George Kleine motion picture novel from the pen of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, gave Billie Burke a rather strenuous introduction into the realm of motion pictures, when the fair star was compelled to drive a big automobile far out in the breakers of the Atlantic Ocean and then wade ashore at the ruin of an expensive Lucile frock. Chapter two is a strenuous one for Henry Kolker, who heads the supporting cast, for he has to engage in a hand-to-hand conflict with a real Seminole Indian, and since Director Edwin insisted upon the fight being a real one and not make-believe, Henry emerged from the conflict with a sore and aching body, though he had the satisfaction of knowing that he landed a few pretty solid punches on the frame of the Indian. The redskin, however, was armed with a knife during the contest, and Henry had nothing but his bare knuckles, so he had to perform in real championship form.

Chapter two begins with Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke) still lost in the Everglades, and Dr. Royce (Henry Kolker) and Richard Freneau (David Powell) in search of her. Gloria makes her way to the humble shack of a Florida "cracker" and there obtains a bite to eat and a suit of boy's clothing to replace her own tattered Lucile frock, which is by this time hanging in shreds about her. When the cracker's young son grows impudent and is rebuked by Gloria he revenges himself upon the helpless girl by sending her in the wrong direction in her hunt for the road to Palm Beach. Thus it happens that she comes upon a Seminole Indian camp, is captured by the redskins and claimed for a squaw by a husky young chief. Just at this time Dr. Royce appears and proceeds to demonstrate to the chief the art that made Jess Willard famous. While Royce is engaged in a hand-to-hand combat with the Indian Gloria faints away, and Freneau, coming up at that moment, bears her away and restores her to the arms of her anxious father and excited brother. Gloria naturally gives Freneau the credit for her rescue, having been unconscious when Royce played the role of hero. After the young Indian had been thoroughly thrashed Royce returned to the spot where he had left Gloria and was amazed to find her gone. The trail taken by Freneau was easily discernible, however, and soon Dr. Royce joined the group gathered about Gloria. Then only he learned that Freneau was being hailed as a hero, and had been cad enough to accept the credit for Gloria's rescue. With this situation on the screen the chapter ends.

"INTO THE PRIMITIVE" (Selig).

"Into the Primitive," the Selig five-reel Red Seal play, to be released through V-L-S-E on Monday, May 29, is claimed by the Selig Company to be on a par with those other unusually successful Selig V-L-S-E productions, "The Rosary," "The House Of A Thousand Candles," "Thou Shalt Not Covet," etc. Robert Ames Bennet, the famous author, wrote the story which features Kathlyn Williams, supported by Guy Oliver, Harry Lonsdale, Eugenie Besserer and other star players.

In prehistoric days, the Cave-man chose his mate by brute force. In "Into the Primitive," the Cave-man, the veneer of civilization dimmed, defends Jennie Leslie from a coward; from hunger-maddened jungle beasts, and from herself. And in the end, womanly intuition discovers the strength, the resourcefulness and the honorable love comes from the Cave-man and not from Hon. Cecil Winthrop, considered by the world a man, but who in reality proves a weakling and a coward.

The drama, "Into the Primitive," abounds in thrilling situations and climaxes and many wild beasts and reptiles are logically introduced in the course of the action. There is a herd of wild elephants, lions, tigers, a river swarming with alligators, wild monkeys and pythons, etc.

A realistic hurricane, said to be the most wonderful spectacle of its kind ever depicted on the animated screen, is presented. The sky grows dark, a terrific wind ensues accompanied by dashing rain and vivid flashes of lighting; gigantic trees sway and bend and crash to the earth in the face of the hurricane.

"Into the Primitive," according to all advance notices, promises to make Filmland sit up and take notice. The production carries more action than does many film dramas of seven reels or more in length.

EDWIN AUGUST FINISHES "THE PERILS OF DIVORCE."

Edwin August has just completed the motion picture production, "The Perils of Divorce," with Edna Wallace Hopper, Frank Sheridan and an all-star supporting cast, including Alee B. Francis, Macey Harlan, Frank Beamish and Ruby Hoffman. The picture is scheduled for early release, and promises to be a huge success.

"TEMPTATION AND THE MAN" (Universal).

Hobart Henley will shortly be seen in a five-reel Red Feather Universal drama entitled "Temptation and the Man," which is consistent in quality, strong in theme and full of compelling action. Mr. Henley is at his best in the picture.

He plays the role of a Bowery boy who fights hard to make a man of himself despite the handicap of his surroundings. Sydell Dowling plays opposite Mr. Henley, taking the role of a banker's daughter who has interested herself in slum work and who establishes a mission in the poorer quarter of the city.

The love interest in the play is incidental to the tense dramatic situations, compressed strength and tremendous punches of the situations. The Bowery boy befriends a wild young son of the idle rich who has fallen into the hands of a professional gambler and his mistress. The young millionaire is played by Sidney Bracy, the gambler by Joseph Cranby and the latter's mistress by Clara Byers.

The slum scenes of the play are laid in New York's East Side, and a number of well-known "pugs" play minor roles in the picture. Cauliflower ears are the badge of the gangster, and to have an auricular deformity these days gives one a definite value around a picture studio when a slum play is being cast. Besides the famous "Kid" Broad the Universal now has half a dozen delightfully "marked" ex-pugilists on its call list.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

SIDNEY J. VAUGHN, who has acted all winter as office manager for the Gaumont Company at Jacksonville, Fla., will come north with the Gaumont stock companies the end of May. To Mr. Vaughn will probably be assigned many of the technical details of production.

Following the completion of her first photoplay for the Lasky Company, Cecil B. De Mille's production of Hector Turnbull's "The Heart of Nora Flynn," which will be this week's attraction at the Strand theater, New York, Marie Doro is taking a brief vacation before commencing work on her next important production for this company.

The Smalleys have started a new five-reel feature to be made under the working title of "The First Stone," a psychological drama, in which Mary McDonald will play the featured lead and with a supporting cast including Laura Oakley, Grace Johnson, Kathleen and Agnes Emerson, Nanine Wright, Marion Seigler, Horace (Kewpie) Morgan, Ernie Shields, Jack Mulhall, Charles Marriott and Dana Ong. The Smalleys have practically finished the picturization of "Shoes," in which Miss McDonald is also featured.

Fredericke Warde, Shakespearian star who appeared in the title role of "Silas Marner," the Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, and who was recently signed by Edwin Thanhouser to star in a series of feature productions to be released through Mutual under the title of "Thanhouser Classics," will, it is expected, begin work on his first production within the next two weeks.

Florence La Badie, who has been selected as the heroine of another series of these features to be released as Classics, has already completed one. It will be released through Mutual under the title of "The Fugitive." Her second classic, "Woman, Saint and Devil," is now in work.

Director Jay Hunt is near to the completion of a five-reel society drama entitled "The Iron Grip of Crime," a story by Frank Wiltermood, which is being produced at Universal City with the leading roles being taken by Francelia Billington, Helen Leslie, Gilmore Hammond, Jack Holt and Paul Byron. When this photoplay is finished Hunt expects to start on a five-reel feature with Miss Billington and others of the Universal stock company in the cast.

So important does the Gaumont Company consider Yosemite National Park in its "See America First" series that the release has been divided into two parts. The first was shown May 3. The second part will be given to the screen in the release of May 17. These views were taken as a matter of record by a government cameraman, and are released by Gaumont through Mutual by special arrangement with the Department of the Interior. These are shown on a split reel with Harry Palmer's Kartoon Komics. The release of May 24 will show scenes of Savannah, Ga.

Six of the fifteen episodes of "The Secret of the Submarine," the new American-Mutual chaptered photoplay, have been completed. The first release goes to the public on May 8. In the filming of a number of the scenes the "2-2," a U. S. submarine attached to the Naval Station at San Pedro, Cal., is being used with the sanction of the Navy Department.

Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, will produce the next photoplay in which Mae Murray will star. Miss Murray recently completed "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" from the David Belasco play, which will be released soon on the Paramount Program.

Winnifred Greenwood makes her second appearance as a featured star in Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, in "A Man's Soul," recently completed at the American studios under the direction of Edward Sloman. Franklin Ritchie and Roy Stewart appear in her support.

A five-reel comedy drama, entitled "His Date in Honolulu," featuring Miss Myrtle Gonzales and Fred Church, has been finished by Director Lynn Reynolds, and he is making preparations to begin work on another feature with his company. The comedy-drama just finished deals with slavery in a mythical country with plenty of dramatic action, touches of comedy and a pretty love theme.

"The Fugitive," written by Philip Lonergan, and directed by Frederick Sullivan, is the title of the first Thansouser Classic, featuring Florence La Badie. Ethyle Cooke gives a splendid performance in this production, which also marks Robert Vaughn and George Marlo for merit. Another feature of the picture is the work of Hector Dion.

Director Billy Mason has completed the first episode in one reel of the "Baseball Bill" series which he is making at Universal City and in which he plays the featured lead with Peggy Coudray opposite and a strong cast in support. The series deals with the adventures of a baseball player with a lot of comedy and action running throughout the film play.

Blanche Sweet whose last photoplay, "The Sowers," created more than usual interest, is completing at the Lasky studios for early production, a photoplay entitled "The Thousand Dollar Husband," written and directed by James Young.

"The Wasted Years" is the title of the next Horsley-Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, featuring Crane Wilbur. It will be released in five acts.

Director E. J. Le Saint has commenced on a two-reel drama, entitled "Donahue," in which Harry Carey and Stella Razeto are featured. This is a Western story and carries the big punch always found in pictures made with Carey and Miss Razeto in the leads. Others in the cast are Frank Lanning, Hayward Mack, Albert McQuarrie, Frank Newburg and Harry Mann.

Harry T. Morey is seen as a "just missed it" newspaper reporter in "The Accusing Voice," a three-part Vitagraph-Broadway Star Feature, by Ross D. Whycock. The story has just been completed by Director Harry Davenport. Belle Bruce, Robert Gaillard and Thomas R. Mills appear in the cast with Morey.

"Woman, Saint and Devil," second of the Thanhouser Classics featuring Florence La Badie, is well under way at New Rochelle studios. In this production, Miss La Badie will attempt the playing of a quadruple character. Director Sullivan, who is in charge of the screening, has worked in some exceedingly novel effects. Phil Lonergan prepared the scenario.

A two-reel drama entitled "Lee Blount Goes Home" has been finished at Universal City by Director William Worthington, with Herbert Rawlinson and Agnes Vernon in the leading roles. A new photoplay is being prepared for Rawlinson to be directed by Worthington.

For the third release of "Reel Life, the Mutual Film Magazine," C. M. White, its editor, will feature Gaumont Animal Studies, made at the Bronx Zoo by Edwin R. Sanborn. These pictures are nature studies in every sense of the word. The most important shown on this reel is that which depicts the growth of the antlers of an elk. The weekly growth is shown from the first sprouting until all the tines have been developed to their full length and strength. This same reel also shows how railway tracks are now quickly repaired, the renewals being made with the aid of electricity. The third part of the reel gives entertaining pictures of the maple sugar industry in Vermont, showing the process in its entirety from the tapping of the trees to the moulding of the cakes of sugar. This issue of "Reel Life" will be released May 21.

Director Richard Stanton is filming "The Mollycoddle and the Rounder," in which Carter De Haven is featured and a strong cast in support, including Vola Smith, who is a new arrival at Universal City, Lucille Younge, Jessie Arnold, Jane Bernoudy and Margaret Whistler. The story is by Bess Meredyth and will be filmed in two reels. At its completion it is planned that De Haven will appear in a serial under the direction of Stanton.

Boston Business Notes

Eastern Manager Fred B. Murphy, of Unicorn Film Service, Believes in Short Picture Programs as Money Makers for Small Theaters Especially—International Film Service Has a Conference of Managers and Road Men.

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, Mass.—The Unicorn Film Service, the latest of the film distributing organizations to venture into the New England exhibitors' field, has a very promising outlook, judging from the enthusiasm displayed by Fred B. Murphy, Eastern manager for the new corporation.

Mr. Murphy was formerly president of the United Film Service. He is one of the best known film men in New England and as a result of his long experience with moving picture affairs in New England his opinion is to be regarded seriously.

The Unicorn Film Service is distributing about 21 reels of one and two-reel subjects in New England every week. The features take in comedies, dramas and western films and are distributed under the brand names of Supreme, Gayety, Hiawatha, Judy, Buffalo, Hippo, Puritan, Lily, Jockey, Rancho, Sunset and Utah.

Mr. Murphy shares the opinion of many other moving picture men in New England that the future of the industry at least as far as most of the smaller houses are concerned, depends largely upon short reel money productive programs of great variety. It is to just this sort of program that the Unicorn Film Service is devoting most of its energy in circulating in this territory, and the results so far are reported to be very encouraging. In commenting on this phase of the present situation for the Moving Picture World Mr. Murphy said:

"It has been found by hosts of exhibitors that there is a distinct scarcity of the smaller reel subjects of distinct merit with which to fill out a program. Thousands of instances may be cited where exhibitors who were unable to find suitable short subjects to complete their programs have been forced to book another large feature, even by so doing he knew he was disappointing many a transient patron. Added to this there is the extra cost of renting multiple reel features when shorter subjects would suffice. It was just to meet this want that the group of men that compose the Unicorn Service formed the company.

International Conference.

Boston, Mass.—J. K. Burger, assistant general manager of the International Film Service, came to Boston last week and held a hurried conference with Frank H. Vine, New England manager of the International and members of the road staff of the new organization, including Edwin H. McCloskey and Daniel Hogan. Mr. Burger on leaving expressed himself as very much pleased with the way things were going in New England, especially "The Mysteries of Myra."

The Past Week in the National Capital

Changes Among Local Exchanges—Film Stars in Grand March at Knights of Columbus Ball—Crandall Helps Play-Grounds.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Washington Film Corporation, which markets the productions of the Universal Film Company, will soon vacate its quarters at 419-421 Main street, Northwest, according to the gossip of the street, as its lease will run out on June 1 and will not be renewed. J. Leo Yates is manager of this exchange.

M. Rosenberg Closes His Office.

Washington, D. C.—M. Rosenberg, who has been covering the territory comprising the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, Kentucky, West Virginia and North Carolina, with "The Spoilers," has closed up his offices and turned over his business to the Masterpiece Film Attractions Company, of which Sol Lesser and Leon Netter are the organizers. This company, which is located at 1325 Vine street, Philadelphia, will handle this feature in the territory referred to and in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Mr. Rosenberg, in addition to being a member of the L. & R. Film Company, is at the head of the De Luxe Attractions Company, in Seattle, Wash., and it is to that place that he is returning. Here the bookings for "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er Do Well," and the Annette Kellerman films are so heavy as to demand his personal attention.

Kleine-Edison Office Here.

Washington, D. C.—Harry Scott, manager of the Kleine-Edison Feature exchange, in Philadelphia, Pa., has been in Washington for some little time opening up an office for that company here. He has secured the quarters in the Bank of Commerce and Savings Building, formerly occupied by M. Rosenberg, and has installed Rudolph Berger as manager. Mr. Berger is well known in this section, having been a roadman representing several film concerns. He was with the Picture Playhouse Film Company for two years. Upon severing his connection with that company he joined the Kleine-Edison Company, traveling out of the Philadelphia office, and he remained with them until the first of the year when he became a traveling representative for Pathe, Inc. He will look after a territory which will include the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and the northern part of North Carolina. He will have associated with him as roadman Marx Nathan, who was formerly employed by the V-L-S-E in a similar capacity.

Moss, Knight of the Road.

Washington, D. C.—C. O. Moss, traveling representative of Pathe, returned to Washington after a four weeks' trip through West Virginia. While in that section he met with many experiences. He spent most of his time in the mining sections and, although doing a satisfactory business, accomplished the bookings under difficulties. He soon became a real "Knight of the Road," for by reason of the layout of the railroad lines he often found it necessary to hike from place to place in order to make more than one town in a day, so that a ten-mile walk soon became a familiar proposition.

Film Stars Lead in Grand March.

Washington, D. C.—Hazel Dawn and William Courtleigh, Jr., led the grand march at the ball given under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus for the benefit of St. Ann's Infant Asylum. The ball was one of the biggest events of the year, marking the end of the Lenten season. It is estimated that fully four thousand people attended the affair.

Crandall Helps Playground Cause.

Washington, D. C.—Harry M. Crandall is again lending his co-operation to the school playgrounds and for that purpose is giving a number of benefit performances at his several theaters. Last year seven schools took advantage of his offer and there was realized nearly $1,000 from the sale of tickets. One-half of this sum was used to maintain the playgrounds of the schools, while the balance was used on the city playgrounds. The benefit performances are run before the regular shows in the morning. Mr Crandall furnishes the tickets, the operators, and the full equipment. The schools recess at ten o'clock and the pupils go in a body to the theater where the show is to be given. The films are educational in nature and not always to the liking of the youngsters, but the teachers compel them to remain. The performance is over by 12 o'clock and the pupils march back to the school, where they are dismissed.

Federal Tax Receipts in March.

During the month of March, 1916, there was paid into the treasury of the United States by theater owners the sum of $31,454.75 in taxes under the provisions of the so-called War Emergency Revenue Law of October 22, 1914. This is an increase of $3,220.31 over March, 1915, when the theater proprietors were assessed $28,234.44 for the same purpose.

IN PHILADELPHIA.

Buys Building With Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The new building at the northeast corner of Fifty-sixth and Pine streets, which includes a modern moving picture theater, with stores and apartments on the second floor, has been conveyed by its owner, Cornelius W. Van Artsdalen, to Winfield H. Yonker, subject to a mortgage of $40,000. The purchaser has given to the Mortgage Building and Loan Association a second mortgage of $15,000 on the property.

East Stroudsburg, Pa.—With the performance of Saturday evening, April 22, A. L. Fox relinquished the management of the Playhouse moving picture theater

Philadelphia Matters

A New Curfew Ordinance Just Introduced Into the City Council—Moving Picture Exhibitors Are Prepared to Combat the Measure—Local Operators to Hold a Grand Ball—Other Notes of Local Interest.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—William J. Harrington, select councilman from the Fourth Ward, has introduced a bill into Council whereby the attendance of children at places of amusement during school hours and after nine o'clock in the evening will be governed by law. It is proposed to prohibit boys and girls under sixteen years of age from attending theaters, moving picture theaters, skating rinks and dance halls, unless they are accompanied by adult persons.

Proprietors and doormen of the various amusement places will be held strictly responsible for seeing that children do not violate the ordinance, according to its provisions, and a fine of from five to ten dollars is provided for each offense. .

Members of the moving picture industry in this vicinity consider the ordinance as a slur upon the trade and are prepared to fight the measure from every angle. While the ordinance has been referred to the Council's Law Committee, it is the general belief among theatrical circles that the measure will be defeated and the dignity of the profession upheld.

Palm Theater Opens.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Palm theater, Frankfort avenue and Norris street, formerly known in theatrical circles as the Hart theater, was formally opened to the public on Saturday, April 22, no admittance fee being charged. An excellent program was offered and the consequence was an exceptionally large audience. William Jones, who has been vested with the management powers, reports being more than satisfied with the successful opening and declares that there is every indication that the theater will enjoy an excellent patronage in the future. First-class pictures will be exhibited and, as the theater has been entirely remodeled and equipped with the latest and very best apparatus, the utmost prosperity should be experienced by the new management.

Palace Theater Sold.

Reading, Pa.—Another extensive Penn street theater deal was consummated recently when Carr & Schad, Inc., purchased the entire interests in the Palace theater, the oldest amusement house of the kind on Penn street. Only a few weeks ago this same enterprising firm leased the Breneiser property at Seventh and Penn streets and started work on a theater to seat 2,000 persons.

Operators to Give Ball.

Philadelphia, Pa.—An eleventh hour change has been made in the plans of the Philadelphia Moving Picture Operators' Local No. 307. Instead of holding the much heralded banquet it has been definitely decided upon to give a ball in the Eagles' Temple, Broad and Spring Garden streets, on the evening of May 29. Various committees have been appointed to assume charge of the actual preparations for the event. Brilliant and beautiful decorations will be in order and a handsome souvenir programme will be tendered the guests. The entire moving picture industry in this vicinity has been interested in the affair and the advertising in the programme is being rapidly completed. It is expected that many familiar faces will be seen at the Eagles' Temple on the evening of May 29, and a record-breaking attendance is looked for.

Charles Ghalih Takes the Majestic.

Milton, Pa.—Charles Ghalih, formerly manager of the Family theater, Milton, Pa., has taken over the Majestic theater, Jersey Shore, Pa., and is preparing for an elaborate opening following the completion of many repairs and improvements. Mr. Ghalih was a recent visitor to Philadelphia and spent considerabie time purchasing new equipment and preparing his future bookings.

To Mr. and Mrs. Swaab, a Girl.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The home of Mr and Mrs. Mark L. Swaab, 5859 Rodman street, West Philadelphia, was blessed with a baby girl on Friday morning, May 5. Both baby and mother are reported as doing nicely and Mr. Swaab goes about his daily tasks with an increased air of confidence.

Pike Street Theater Sold.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The moving picture theater located at the northeast corner of Sixth and Pike streets, lot 75 by 103 feet, assessed at $25,000, has been sold by Esther Altman to Thomas Kilcourse for $17,000, subject to a mortgage of $17,000.

Berks Theater Brightens.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Berks theater, located at Twenty-second and Berks streets, which has been idle for some time past, has recently been taken over by Mr. Lowenhaupt, who announces that it is his intention to conduct the theater on the lines of a first class photoplay theater. With this object in view he has recently purchased considerable new equipment at the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street.

Local Film Batsmen.

The baseball nine of the Philadelphia Moving Picture Operators' Local No. 307 is fast rounding into shape and a first-class schedule is being prepared by Manager Joseph V. Freil, operator at the Famous Palace theater, Thirteenth and Market streets.

Local Notes of Interest.

Pittston, Pa.—P. J. Joyce, proprietor of the Princess theater, Pittston, Pa., was a recent visitor to Philadelphia and visited the supply establishment of Lewis M. Swaab, 1327 Vine street, where he purchased considerable new equipment including a new Simplex projecting machine.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Abe Steifel, proprietor of the Poplar theater, Sixth and Poplar streets, is having plans prepared for the enlargement of his theater. Mr. Steifel has purchased the property in the rear of his establishment and declares that he will spend a tidy sum in endeavoring to provide the residents in that section of the city with one of the most modern moving picture theaters in Philadelphia. The new theater will have a seating capacity of one thousand persons and will be equipped with the most modern and scientific moving picture apparatus.

Philadelphia, Pa. — The Enterprise Amusement Company has recently been incorporated under the laws of the state of Delaware for the purpose of conducting places of amusement. Herbert E. Latter, Norman P. Coffin and Clement M. Egner are the principal incorporators, the new concern being capitalized at $5,000

A New Film Company.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The United Mutual Exhibitors' Film Corporation was recently granted a charter under the laws of the state of Delaware for the purpose of engaging in the manufacture of moving picture films and slides. The new concern has been capitalized at $150,000, John W. Frazier, John W. Frazier, Jr., Bertram G. Frazier, Samuel G. Simpson and Spencer S. Houston, all of Philadelphia, being the principal incorporators.

BALTIMORE NEWS LETTER

By J. M. Shellman, Special Correspondent, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

New Pickwick Theater Sold.

BALTIMORE, MD.—April 26th, the New Pickwick theater, 115 North Howard street, was sold to G. Horton Gaffney by J. Howard Bennett, the former owner and manager. The theater is now under the management of Edwin Powell. Mr. Gaffney stated that no others were connected with the ownership of the house and that at present he contemplates no changes.

Theater for Madison Avenue

Baltimore, Md.—Revised plans are now in progress for the new $30,000 moving picture theater to be erected at 2207-13 Madison avenue, of which Sparklin and Childs, Law building, are the architects. The Madison Amusement Co. are the owners.

The building is to be built of brick with terra cotta trimmings, with re-enforced concrete foundations and floors, and structural iron and steel and tile work.

Management of New Aladdin Changes

Baltimore, Md.—B. Friedman has purchased the New Aladdin theater, 930 West Baltimore street, from the Investment Corporation and plans for improvements are under way. Mr. Friedman intends to manage the theater himself and has arranged for an entire change of program.

Bluebird Now Rialto.

Baltimore, Md.—Through Myer Fox, president of the Linden Amusement Co., it is announced that the name of the theater now under course of construction at 846-8 West North avenue, has been changed from "Bluebird" to "Rialto." As this company intends to make the new theater the best equipped and handsomest in Baltimore, they thought it appropriate to name it after the new Rialto theatre recently opened in New York.

Walbrook Theater Soon to Open.

Baltimore, Md.—It is expected by the Walbrook Amusement Company that the Walbrook theater at North avenue and Rosedale street, which is owned by them and is now being constructed, will be ready to receive the public before the full moon of May. The officers of the company are: H. L. Stiles, president; Oscar Teschner, vice-president; Otis J. Tall, treasurer; H. L. Konze, secretary, and C. W. Wattenscheidt, Marion S. Pearce and Philip J. Sheck, directors.

Managers at Peabody Change.

Baltimore, Md.—Corbin Shield, who has successfully been associated with several theatrical enterprises in Richmond, Va., and is a newspaper man of experience, has succeeded Jacob Schaub as manager of the Peabody theater, 11 East North avenue. The resignation of Mr. Schaub was tendered, owing to his being obliged to give his attention to other work. The Peabody prospererd under his management. Many changes are now under consideration by Mr. Shield.

New Film Enterprise.

Baltimore, Md.—A new film producing company which is known as the Milo Pictures Corporation will shortly begin active operations in Baltimore at 356 North Gay street. The officers are: Dr. Harry E. Buckner, president; Arthur Howes, vice-president and general manager; A. Kurnick, treasurer; and George Orth, secretary and director. The authorized capital of the company is $50,000.

Employees Remembered in Will.

Richmond, Va.—The will of Miss Elanora E. Leath, sister of the late Thomas G. Leath, who controlled the circuit of legitimate theaters in Virginia, devises the bulk of the estate valued at $25,000 to W. G. Neal, owner of the Academy of Music and one of the associates of Jake and Otto Wells in other extensive theatrical interests. Robert Waitt, who has been connected with the advertising branch of the business in Richmond for some years, comes in for $3,500 in seven annual installments of $500 each. Charles W. Rex, manager of the Lyric theater, and Mose Stein, orchestra leader at the Academy, will each receive $1,000. Corbin Sheild, now manager of the Peabody theater in Baltimore, Md., and Leo Wise were also bequeathed $1,000, but were cut off by a codicil to the will.

New Airdome in Hopewell.

Hopewell, Va.—Theater activity here continues and among the latest additions to the field is the Garden theater, an airdome having a seating capacity of about seven hundred. This proposition is being operated by the Continental Amusement & Investment Company, recently incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000. The officers are Charles J. Stein, president, residing at 1340 Fairmount street, Washington, D. C.; A. Krupshaw, vice-president, and John Krupshaw, treasurer, both of 712 K street, Northwest, and W. H. Daniel, secretary, of Hopewell. It is the intention of the company to erect a modern theater this fall which will have a seating capacity of about five hundred American Theater Reopens.

Norfolk, Va.—The American theater here was reopened last week after having undergone a complete overhauling. The interior of the theater, which has been renovated from top to bottom, has been made very attractive by decorations that extend from the entrance to the auditorium clear back to the screen. The panels are of delicate gray and are in frames of mahogany and gold. The lights on the side walls are shaded with running vines and flowers, these providing a delightful and pleasing spectacle.

New Norfolk Ordinance

New License Tax Becomes Effective May 17—Charges for Picture Theaters of 350 or Less Are $100 a Year; for More Than 350 Seats, $150 a Year—Penalties and Additions for Delay in Making Payments.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington, D. C.

NORFOLK, VIRGINIA.—The new license tax ordinance, adopted by the board of aldermen and the city council, and approved by the mayor on April 25, became effective the first of this month and provides the taxes to be assessed during the ensuing year.

The new ordinance provides that no person shall engage in any business in the city of Norfolk for which a license is required by the laws of the commonwealth or the ordinances of the city without first having applied for and obtained such license. The paragraphs pertaining to the theatrical business are as follows:

"121. Every proprietor or occupier of a public theater or other public rooms, fitted for public exhibitions, where no admission fee is charged, shall pay $500 per year or portion of a year for the privilege.

"122. Penny arcades or automatic theaters in which pictures are shown or music played, or both, by means of slot machines, $100. Not proroated.

Moving Picture License Fees.

"123. Every person furnishing entertainment by the use of moving pictures, where an admission fee is charged, shall pay a license tax of $100.00 for each place, where the seating capacity thereof is 350 or less, and $150.00 for each place where the seating capacity thereof is over 350.

"124. Every person furnishing entertainment by the use of moving pictures, where an admission fee is charged, and publicly advertises the said business by means of a phonograph, or other musical or noise producting instrument, device or method, whether inside or outside of the building—for each such place of entertainment, $300.00 per year.

"125. On other theatrical performances or any performances similar thereto, panorama, or any public performance or exhibition of any kind where an admission fee is charged, $10.00 for each performance or $20 for each week of said performance, but any theater which desires so to do may take an annual license, in which event the same shall be taxed as follows: All theaters charging not more than 30 cents per seat shall pay $200 per annum; any theater charging not more than 75 cents per seat shall pay $300.00; and any theater charging over 75 cents per seat shall pay $350.00 per annum. The above prices to include price of box seats, payable in advance. Not prorated.

"No license, however, shall be charged when the whole of the net proceeds are applied for religious or charitable purposes.

"126. Any person other than the manager, proprietor, or his agent, of a duly licensed place of amusement who sells tickets entitling the holder thereof to admission to a theater or other licensed place of public amusement shall pay a license tax of $50 per year or any part of a year.

Applications for Licenses—Penalties.

"Applications for licenses must be made to the commissioner of revenue. It is provided that if any person shall fail to pay any license tax required by this ordinance on or before May 31, if paid any time during the month of June there shall also be paid in addition to the amount thereof a penalty of three per cent of the license, and there will accrue a further liability of one per cent per month for each additional month until the penalty shall have reached five per cent, after which the delinquent will have to pay interest on the aggregate thereof at the rate of six per cent a year. Section 153 of the ordinance further provides that any person who shall fail to pay a license tax on the day that the same becomes due shall be liable to a fine of not to exceed $20 a day for each day of failure to pay such license."

Sparks from Steel City

Pittsburgh Is Doing Its Share for Actors' Fund—Several Local Theaters Change Hands—May Moving Among Exchanges—Screen Club Asks for Equal Rights for Film Cameramen—Other Notes.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—Chairman Al. W. Cross, of the Actors' Fund committee of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, reports excellent progress with the plans for National Tribute Day, May 15, when this city will come forward to contribute its share toward the $500,000 donation. From present indications Pittsburgh will give a very good account of itself.

Will Handle "Dumb Girl" Film.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Negotiations have been concluded by Harry C. Grelle, well-known Pittsburgh film man, for the purchase of the Universal Company's Pavlowa picture, "The Dumb Girl of Portici." A company is now in the process of formation to handle this subject in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. Mr. Grelle is to be head of the new concern, which has also purchased "The Unwritten Law," featuring Beatriz Michelina, for this territory. Other subjects are to be purchased from time to time, and the intention is to handle the biggest things in the photoplay line.

Star Family Theater Sold.

New Kensington, Pa.—The Star Family theater has been purchased from G. J. Becker by George Kyros, who recently closed his Colonial theater at this place. The M. Comnus Co., the well-known exhibitors of McKeesport, Pa., are also now interested in the Star Family. Mr. Kyros has taken charge of the theater in person. It will be closed for about three weeks for remodeling and enlarging to a seating capacity of 500. Other improvements are to be made at a cost of about $5,000, and the Star Family will be up-to-date in every particular when completed.

May Moving Among Exchanges.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Further removals of Pittsburgh film concerns continued after the May 1st moving week, when the exodus of many exchanges from the "film row" district took place. The latest changes were made mainly in the old section, a number of firms going into larger quarters that had been left vacant recently both on Fourth avenue and on Ferry street. There are thirteen exchanges still located in this neighborhood—the V-L-S-E, Kleine, Fox, Weiland, Hudson, New, Enterprise, Paragon, Triangle, Unicorn, Grelle, Mutual and Specialty.

For Right to Take Film Pictures.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The campaign committee of the Pittsburgh Screen Club has presented a petition to the Pittsburgh City Council asking that body to pass an ordinance giving the same privileges to moving picture cameramen as is accorded to newspaper reporters in recording local happenings. At the present time cameramen are frequently denied the privilege of getting views of parades and other interesting incidents on account of the rigid police rules. In seeking recognition for the cameramen the committee points out in its petition that since the animated pictures have become an important factor in disseminating news the right to record events should not be withheld from the men who make the films.

Bradford Theater's New Management.

Bradford, Pa.—The Bradford theater, Bradford, has been leased by the Bradford Amusement Company, who operate the Grand theater, at this place. The new management is preparing to book some big feature films, to be run in addition to road attractions, which will be continued as heretofore. The Bradford has a seating capacity of 1,600. V. H. Oxly, who has managed the Grand theater, an exclusively moving picture house, for the past five years, will now direct both houses.

F. Houston to Manage the Nemo.

Johnstown, Pa.—Frank Houston has been appointed manager of the Nemo theater, Johnstown, Pa., recently leased by George Panagotacos, proprietor of the Grand theater. Mr. Houston resigned from the managership of the Garden theater, Johnstown, to take charge of the Nemo for the new lessee. He is a widely experienced moving picture man, having operated and managed a number of theaters in this section and at Toledo, O., where he formerly conducted the Orpheum.

Supply House in New Home.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Ludwig Hommel & Co., the well-known moving picture supply house, formerly located at 422 First avenue, are now comfortably established in their new quarters at 947 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh. They have nearly 5,000 square feet of floor space, well-lighted, conveniently and handsomely arranged. The location is a central one, being in the center of the film section and convenient to all the express offices and the Union Depot. The greatly increased space has enabled the firm to multiply its stock of machines, supplies, etc., to care for its large trade.

New Theater in Sharpsville.

Sharpsville, Pa.—A modern moving picture theater is to be erected in the near future on Main street by C. A. Ruggles, formerly of West Middlesex, Pa. Mr. Ruggles has purchased a plot of ground excellently located for the theater and is having plans prepared. He successfully conducted a house at West Middlesex until recently.

Buys Poster Plant.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Penn Poster Mounting Company, 127 Fourth avenue, of which D. R. Cratty is head, has purchased the poster plant of the Liberty Film Renting Co., 940 Penn avenue. The Penn Company will in the future do all mounting for the Liberty exchange, as well as for a large number of other local concerns.

P. R. Fullwood Takes Charge.

Bloomsburgh, Pa.—The Lyric theater, at Blossburg, was leased recently from Mrs. Frank Place by P. R. Fullwood, who has taken charge. The Lyric is a cosy house, seating about 300 persons, and has a splendid patronage in its district. Program and feature pictures are shown daily at 5 and 10 cents admission.

W. J. Curns Takes National Theater.

Steubenville, O.—The National theater has been taken over by W. J. Curns, who operates the Rex theater. Mr. Curns until recently conducted the Majestic theater, which he has sold. The Rex, which recently fell under the ban of the inspectors of the Ohio Industrial Commission, as it was on the second floor, is being extensively remodeled so as to come up to all requirements. Improvements are being made in the National theater, adding greatly to its attractiveness.

To Enlarge the Lyric.

St. Mary's, W. Va.—The Lyric theater is to be enlarged to bring the capacity up to 400 and will be closed during the last two weeks in May. The owner, H. E. Dutz, has sold half interest in the Lyric to Howard McBride, mayor of St. Mary's.

NORTH CAROLINA NOTES.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N.E., Washington, D.C.

H. O. Savin Heads Paramount Theater.

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.—H. O. Savin, formerly of Lynchburg, Va., has assumed the management of the Paramount theater in this city, relieving Marvin Terrell. Mr. Terrell will devote his entire time to the Pilot and Elmont theaters. Mr. Savin has been in the amusement business for about twenty years.

Edgar Pearce Visits Atlanta.

Winston-Salem, N. C.—Manager Edgar Pearce, of the Amuzu theater, spent a week in Atlanta, Ga., recently, looking over the field in that city. While away he booked a number of big features for early exhibition. The Amuzu has just been redecorated, inside and outside, and the interior walls have been festooned in a very attractive manner. A big change in the theater was the lowering of the floor of the auditorium to the level of the street, eliminating the incline ot the entrance.

Lyric Company Incorporates.

Burlington, N. C.—A charter has been granted by the state corporation commission to the Lyric Company of this place. This company has been formed to engage in the motion picture business and has a capital stock of $10,000, of which $300 has been subscribed. The incorporators are J. E. Lasley, of Smithfield; R. L. Holmes, of Graham, and R. K. Lasley, of Burlington.

North Carolina Briefs.

Winston-Salem, N. C.—The Pilot theater has been made ready for the season's business by a local firm of painters and decorators, and the house is now presenting a very attractive appearance.

Charlotte, N. C.—Ed. G. Gidley, manager of the Dreamland theater, in Chester, S. C., was a visitor here recently. Mr. Gidley was one of a number of out-of-town men who came to Charlotte for the purpose of taking higher degrees in Masonry in connection with the Scottish Rite. Mr. Gidley was formerly manager of the Piedmont theater in this city and has a host of friends here.

Ashville, N. C.—A large pipe organ has been installed at the Galax theater at a cost of $4,000. It is announced that organ recitals will be given occasionally and description music will be rendered during the exhibition of the pictures.

Asheville, N. C.—The Princess theater last week offered as an extra attraction comedy and novelty songs by Frank Halligan, a well known entertainer. Mr. Halligan changes his program daily.

Asheville, N. C.—In order that all of the school children of the city might have an opportunity of seeing "The Battle Cry of Peace," the management of the Strand theater gave a matinee performance for their benefit, the admission charge of which was reduced 15 cents. The general admission to all other exhibitions of this feature for the children was 25 cents. The admission price to adults to the 10:30 a. m. and 2 and 4:30 p. m. shows was also 25 cents, and the 8:15 p. m. show 50 cents.

Grove Park Inn at Asheville has turned to motion pictures as an additional means of entertainment for its guests. It has found the idea a most popular feature. On every evening except Sunday the "Big Room" of the inn is filled with guests and their friends. Two pictures are shown, one a travel subject, the other a comedy.

PEARL WHITE GUEST OF HONOR.

Montreal Exchange Managers and Exhibitors Had Dinner.

The assembling of a number of motion picture exhibitors and exchange managers at a "get together dinner" held recently at the St. Regis Hotel was made the occasion of paying a decided compliment to Pearl White, the Pathe star who is paying a visit to the city, accompanied by Miss Ruth Hoffman, she being the guest of honor of the evening. The fifty or more persons present were agreed that the gathering was in every way a success. Mr. A. Hirsch, manager of the Tivoli, was chairman, and there were no dull moments. The personnel of the gathering was representative of both the large and small theaters of the city, while the leading exchanges had their managers and other members of their staff present. The speeches were few and brief, but all were marked by humor and good feeling.

The Guests.

Among the exhibitors present were: George Nicholas of the Strand and Mrs. Nicholas, Gerald Barry and H. Bryan of the Windsor Photo-Plays, Frank Warnicker of the Regent and Mrs. Warnicker, F. Jackalin of the Moulin Rouge, H. Jodoin of the Electric, Mayer Schlesinger of the Francais, J. Laurie of the Canada, J. Sperdakos of Fairyland, F. McMahon and W. Lester of the Strand, L. Schlessinger of the Royal Alexandra at Lachine, H. Desjardins of the Alexandra, J. H. Paquet of the Auditorium at Quebec, Ernest Cousins, president of the Independent Amusement Co., and Mrs. Cousins; J. Crepeau and J. S. Lowden of the Independent Amusement Co., J. Dunning of the Park theater at Verdun, S. Lerkos and E. Southgate of the Alhambra, E. K. Sperdakos of the Queen's Palace, J. Rosenthal of the Tivoli, R. L. Ballee of the Princess theater at Sherbrooke, and J. Gallagher of the Motion Picture World.

Among the exchange managers present were: H. Kaufmann, Famous Players; L. E. Ouimet, general manager of the Specialty Film Import Co., representing Pathe; Charles Lalumiere, A. H. Beaune, Rene de Chalus, Eugene Lefebvre and Leo Rosseau, all of Pathe; T. O. Byerley, Canadian Universal Film Co.; J. J. Orkney, Blue Bird; E. S. Groneau, Red Feather; C. B. Price, Mutual Film Corporation; N. Hepworth, L. H. Watrous, V.L.S.E.; R. S. Bell, Colonial Film Co.; T. Wells, General Film Co.; Sol Kaufman, Kaufman M. P. Co.

We may add that T. H. Frazier of the Montreal Gazette, who wrote the story as given, had copies of his paper at the dinner before the guests departed at 4.30 A. M.

Charles Lalumiere.

Montreal, Quebec.—A gentleman who has met with a creditable amount of success in the distributing end of the film business is Charles Lalumiere, Montreal manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, the Canadian distributors of Pathe films. It is just a few months more than a year ago that Pathe films began to be exploited in Canada independent of any program. The first office was opened in Montreal with Mr. Lalumiere as its booking manager. Since that time branches have been opened in St. John, Vancouver, Winnipeg, and Toronto. Mr. Lalumiere was one of the men who helped to put Pathe across the plate in Canada. The gentleman is essentially a Canadian, having been born and educated in Montreal. That he speaks English fluently is a testimonial of the progressiveness characteristic of the successful French-Canadian business man. Mr. Lalumiere has been in the film business a surprisingly short time. His previous trade connections were with the Picture Playhouse, Montreal and Warners Features, also of the same city.

Chas. Lalumiere.

Buffalo News Letter

Buffalo Branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc., Moves Into Larger Quarters—Formal Opening of the Screen Club—Outlook for the Coming Film Ball May 15 Is Bright—Business Notes from Exchanges and Theatres.

By Jos. McGuire, Special Correspondent, 611 Erie County Bank Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—James K. Morgan, manager of the Buffalo branch of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., will have his large quarters at Erie and Swan streets open to the public at an early date. The improvements will include the removal of the main offices of the exchange from the second to the main floor. Other important alterations will be made.

James K. Morgan.

"We have one of the best locations in Buffalo," said Mr. Morgan. "On May 15th, the date of the Buffalo Screen Club's ball, we hope to be located in our new headquarters, where we will gladly welcome the many enthusiasts who will be in Buffalo to attend the ball. A large American flag will be unfurled in front of our building, and all will be warmly welcomed."

Mr. Morgan is a member of the house and entertainment committee of the Buffalo Screen Club.

The Pathe Exchange was opened by Mr. Morgan in June, 1915, as a distributing office for the Syracuse branch. On November 1st of last year the Buffalo office was made a main exchange.

"The Pathe service is represented in 80 per cent. of all the theaters in Rochester," said Mr. Morgan, "and in 67 per cent. of all the theaters in the twenty counties of this territory. N. I. Filkins is our special outside representative in Erie and Niagara counties, including Buffalo. He is having an excellent business on all the Pathe serials. Our new serial, 'Who's Guilty?' has been booked for six days each week at the Olympic theater, Buffalo, beginning May 8th."

Leo A. Dee is special reporter and photographer for the Pathe in this territory.

CLUB'S FORMAL OPENING.

Local Screeners With Their Wives and Friends Have Good Time.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The formal opening of the Buffalo Screen Club's new quarters at 11 Court street Saturday evening, April 29, was attended by many members, who brought along their wives or sweethearts. A luncheon was served, followed by an entertainment and dancing. It was a regularly open-house affair and the best of good-fellowship prevailed.

Many tickets for the Screen Club's ball are being sold at all the local theaters, downtown cigar stores, leading hotels and film exchanges. Thousands of signs bearing the words: "See your favorite screen star in person at the Screen Club's ball, Monday, May 15th," are being distributed.

Among the theaters where slides advertising the affair are being shown are Shea's vaudeville theater and Shea's Hippodrome, where, as a rule, advertising of every description is excluded from the screen. The members of every committee are working overtime to make the ball a success, and there will be no disappointments. The decoration scheme, according to the committee in charge, will be a creation. The 74th Regiment band and the Hippodrome orchestra will furnish the music.

President Daniel J. Savage of the club hopes that Marguerite Clark and Pauline Frederick, Paramount stars, will be among those who will attend the ball.

Reopening of the Central Theater.

Silver Creek, N. Y.—L. R. Snow has remodelled the Central moving picture theater at Silver Creek, N. Y., and has made arrangements for an elaborate opening of his house. Mr. Snow was a recent caller at the Buffalo branch of the World Film.

"Please put my name on the Moving Picture World's subscription list," said Mr. Snow. "The information contained in each issue will be of great value to me."

Mr. Snow was accompanied to Buffalo by L. Stearns, Palm theater, Forestville, N. Y.

P. K. Johnston Assistant Manager.

Buffalo, N. Y.—P. K. Johnston, former manager of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Co.'s office in Syracuse, has been appointed assistant to Daniel J. Savage, manager of the Sherry Co. in the Buffalo territory. The Syracuse offices of the Paramount have been discontinued. Mr. Savage attended the exposition of the Motion Picture Art in New York City.

August Aichinger Buys the Cozy Corner.

Buffalo, N. Y.—August Aichinger has taken over the Cozy Corner theater, Genesee street and Fillmore Avenue, Buffalo. Frank Minor was the last manager of the house.

F. L. Smith with Triangle.

Buffalo, N. Y.—F. L. Smith has been appointed special traveling representative of the Triangle in the Buffalo territory. J. E. Willis is in charge of this exchange. Mr. Smith was formerly road representative of the General Film Co. in Cleveland. After a trip through his new territory Mr. Smith gained the impression that the moving picture theaters of New York, from the viewpoint of capacity, high quality of their shows and heavy box office receipts, are among the best in the country. According to his observations, five out of every six of these houses charge ten cents admission, and these exhibitors are noted for their high-class business methods and their ability to keep engagements.

Family Theater Sold.

Jamestown, N. Y.—M. Slotkin, proprietor of the Olympic theater, Buffalo, and A. A. Fennyvessy of the Family theater, Rochester, have taken over the Lyric theater, Jamestown, N. Y. Bruce Fowler, manager of the Olympic, recently reopened the Lyric for the new owners. Chester Fennyvessy is manager. The house seats 800. The programme consists of vaudeville and moving pictures.

Miss Miney Gets Transfer.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Miss Leona Miney, bookkeeper and cashier at the Buffalo branch of the Unicorn Film, has been transferred to the company's Syracuse offices, managed by G. A. Hickey.

Death of Mrs. J. W. Carr.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Mrs. J. W. Carr, mother of Henry Carr, manager of Shea's theater, Buffalo, and of John Carr of the Paramount Service, this city, and of Edward Carr, a vaudeville performer, died at the family home here recently. Her daughter is the wife of Michael Shea, head of Shea's theater and Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo's largest moving picture house.

Exit the Bijou.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Bijou, at Main and North Division streets, one of Buffalo's oldest moving picture theaters, will close permanently June 3. The building will be razed and replaced by the Bank of Buffalo. The Bijou was conducted by the Tifft Theater Corporation and managed by M. H. Lee.

The face of Manager Moses of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, was wreathed in smiles when he noted his lobby and the street in front of his house overflowing with men, women and children, eager to attend the recent performance of "Chaplin's Carmen." These pictures attracted capacity business for the week.

Louisville Doings

Strand Theater, Recently the Masonic, Closes Again—Will Put on Vaudeville—Aladdin Film Reorganizes—Mutual Company's District Manager Weds—Other Items About Local Theaters and Business Notes.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The Strand Theater Company, operators of the old Masonic theater, closed the house on Sunday, April 30, after running pictures for a little more than four months. According to George E. Gans, secretary of the company, arrangements have been made to remodel the stage and operate the house with vaudeville entertainment, charging ten, twenty and thirty cents, the theater to start operations about May 14.

Aladdin Film Reorganization.

Louisville, Ky.—The Aladdin Film Corporation of this city, organized some two years ago as the Children's Feature Film Co., and later reorganized as the Aladdin Company, has again been reorganized. R. W. Conant, the active general manager, and Norman M. Sweet, the secretary, are no longer actively connected with the management of the organization.

Henry A. Guthrie, who for several years has been connected with producing companies, film exchanges, etc., has been named as general manager and acting secretary until such a time as the board elects new officers. The board at present is composed of Col. Nathan J. Shelton, Charles Bauer, T. M. Gilmore, Jr., T. J. Morrow, Jr., Helm Bruce, Jesse A. Gathright and Henry A. Guthrie.

The Spiller-Courtney Co., an advertising agency of Louisville, will handle the company's new advertising campaign, and Charles Emerson Cook, of New York City, has been named as publicity agent. The plans of the company have been generally revised.

R. W. Conant, who is also general manager of the Enterprise Film Syndicate, is giving his attention to the latter concern which is specializing in pictures for news weeklies and local color production material.

Percy L. Smith Weds.

Louisville, Ky.—Announcement was recently made of the marriage of Percy L. Smith, district manager in the state of Kentucky for the Mutual Film, to Miss Dessa E. Wright of Kalamazoo, Mich., the ceremony taking place at Kalamazoo. Mr. Smith is widely known among the moving picture fraternity of Louisville and the state, but is still better known in New York. He came to Louisville to take charge of the local office about five months ago. He is a Virginian.

Fined for a Sabbath Show.

Lexington, Ky.—J. H. Stamper, Jr., proprietor of the Orpheum moving picture theater, has been tried on an old indictment charging violation of the Sabbath by operating his moving picture theater on Sunday The jury in the case found him guilty and fixed the punishment at a fine of $10 and costs. There will probably be no follow-up in this matter, as the mayor and some of the other city officials are in favor of Sunday shows and have resisted the efforts of certain factions to interfere in the matter.

Edward V. Dustin Visits.

Louisville, Ky.—Edward V. Dustin, branch manager of the International Film Company, who in 1908 opened the old Hopkins theater as a moving picture house, recently paid a visit to Louisville, where he gave a private showing of "The Mystery of Myra" before local exhibitors. Mr. Dustin has not been in the city for several years. When the old house was opened it had nearly twice the seating capacity of any other moving picture theater in the United States, and the theater did a nice business until about two years, ago, when the building was entirely gutted by fire.

A Three Falls Cities' Film.

Louisville, Ky.—The Rex theater, the McHenry Company of Akron, O., and the Louisville Herald have entered a combination whereby a local color play will be produced by the McHenry Company and shown at the Rex theater. The Herald will handle the publicity, and has started a big voting publicity campaign in which several hundred would-be moving picture stars have entered their names. The principal character will be "Ruth," and there are fourteen other main roles to be filled. The leading character will be selected from Louisville, while the others may come from any of the Three Falls Cities, including Louisville, New Albany and Jeffersonville, Ind. It is stated that 2,000 feet of film will be made, and when completed will be shown for one week at the Rex.

Summer Films at Keith's.

Louisville, Ky.—Announcement has been made to the effect that the local Keith house will wind up its vaudeville performance in a few days and that the theater will be utilized as a moving picture house during the summer months. The theater was so utilized during the greater portion of last summer and did a nice business. It is stated that the Chaplin, Mutual releases, will be shown at this theater for one week and then transferred for a week's run at the Mary Anderson, the Keith moving picture theater.

New Clarksville Theater.

Clarksville, Tenn.—Joe W. Holman, of the architectural firm of Marr & Holman, Nashville, was recently in the city with plans of the new Elite theater, to be erected at Third and Franklin streets by W. M. Daniel, Sr., and leased to the Crescent Amusement Co. of Nashville. The plans call for a very elaborate and commodious structure. The ceiling will be forty feet from the orchestra pit and will be equipped with three large exhaust fans. A large pipe organ will be installed when the theater is completed. The seats will also be upholstered in leather, 750 on the first floor and 250 on the balcony. Two of the latest moving picture machines, such as used in the New York Strand, will be installed.

Local Film, "The Invisible Peril."

Louisville, Ky.—Much interest has been shown in a locally made picture entitled "The Invisible Peril." This picture deals, as this paper noted a few weeks ago, with the hidden perils in open garbage and the public dump problem in Louisville, and was arranged to be shown in film form by Mrs. Alice Hegan Rice. The film was recently shown at the Majestic and later at the Star, a five-cent house. The picture was strongly endorsed by the Men's Federation, the Woman's Civic Association, and a number of other leading clubs and charitable organizations.

Edgewood Buys Studio Site

Joseph W. Farnum, President of New Producing Company, Comes to Cincinnati to Inspect Ground for Film Plant.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Special Corresponde nt, 610 1st Nat. Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—The Edgewood Photoplay Co., which was recently organized here, announces that it has purchased the 33-acre tract which has for many years been used by the Erlanger fair, at Erlanger, Ky., not many miles from Cincinnati, and Joseph W. Farnham of New York, the new president of the company, was in the city recently for the purpose of inspecting the tract and attending to other business. Mr. Farnham has been associated with several leading film concerns, including the Film Supply Co., the Bioscope Film Co. and the All-Star Feature Corporation. He intends to push things forward so that actual production can be started as soon as possible, and while bad weather conditions have delayed outdoor work, the Erlanger site will be prepared for use in a short time. Mr. Farnham expects to have all arrangements made for the release of the company's first production not later than September 1. [Mr. Farnum, "Joe" Farnum as he is known at the New York Screen Club, has the good wishes of his many friends here in New York. Ed. note.]

SCREEN CLUB GROWS.

Many Applications for Membership—Second Meeting.

Cincinnati, O.—The Cincinnati Screen Club is one of the lustiest infants ever seen in these parts, judging from the rate at which it is growing. According to President C. E. Holan, applications for membership are being received daily, and indications are that the organization will before long number representative men from all branches of the film world in this section; which, as he points out, is exactly what is desired. A second meeting is to be held at an early date, at which additional members will be taken in, and preparations will be made to get down to real business.

FIRE MARSHAL'S INSPECTION.

State Official and Deputies to Begin Rigid Investigation.

Cincinnati, O.—According to State Fire Marshal Bert H. Buckley, who was in the city a few days ago, his department is preparing for a rigid inspection of approximately 2,000 moving picture houses in Ohio, this number being in active operation in the state. He pointed out that more stringent requirements are being enforced in the matter of electric wiring, and that it is the intention of the state authorities to see that no fire in a picture house due to defective wiring shall take place, if it can be avoided by careful inspection.

NATIONAL THEATER BURNS.

Newly Redecorated House Catches Fire—Loss Is $60,000.

Dayton, O.—The destruction by fire of the National theater, on Wednesday night, April 26, endangered the Lyric theater, where a large audience was attending a theatrical performance, and deprived Dayton of one of its leading houses. The National had been idle for some time, while complete redecoration was in progress, and Messrs. Dickson and Talbott, owners of the house, had spent $15,000 on this work. The theater would probably have been devoted exclusively to moving pictures, although this was not certain. So far the cause of the blaze is a mystery, although an investigation by the state fire marshal has been under way since. It was at first thought that waste resulting from the redecorating work might have caught fire, but the owners declared at once that the building had been thoroughly cleaned up, and that no oily rags or other inflammable material had been left lying around. The loss is estimated at $60,000. The owners intimated that they might rebuild the house, but have not yet decided definitely on this point.

SUMMER SEASON OF FILMS.

Lyric and Grand Open With Popular Feature.

Cincinnati, O.—After two weeks of the Universal Pavlowa pictures, during which crowded houses at high prices were the rule, the regular summer moving picture season at the Lyric theater opened, Sunday, April 30, with the World feature, "The Feast of Life," starring Clara Kimball Young. It ran for a week, its unusual merit deciding the management on giving it double the time. Two films a week will be shown, the change being made on Sundays and Thursdays, with a uniform admission of ten cents.

The regular summer season at the Grand opened the following week, a World-Brady release also being used. This was "Her Maternal Right." Manager Baum, of the Cincinnati World office, was highly pleased at starting the two largest houses in the city with World pictures, and William K. Howard, in charge of the sales campaign, reports that the new series of pictures, produced under the personal direction of Mr. Brady, are being booked rapidly by local and out-of-town exhibitors.

Childrens' Films at Kleine Exchange.

Cincinnati, O.—The local Kleine exchange is finding the demands made upon it just now rather severe, as the interest of exhibitors in the new Billie Burke serial is calling for a considerabde volume of detail work, while other subjects which are in hand for booking are meeting with marked interest. For one, the great Griffith production, "Judith of Bethulia," is a general favorite on account of its Biblical flavor and will be seen in several houses around the latter part of the month. A number of reels designed especially for child audiences has also been received, and the demand for this kind of film is in proportion to its scarcity.

DETROIT NEWS LETTER.

Comment of Cost of Films.

DETROIT, MICH.—The World's Detroit correspondent has met quite a number of exhibitors of late who object to the policy of certain manufacturers of charging more for their best pictures and putting them on special releases. "We have to pay the regular price for the poor pictures and why are we not entitled to the good pictures also at the same prices?" is the general opinion expressed. Exhibitors claim that if manufacturers are going to charge more for their best pictures, then they should charge less for the poor ones.

Commissioner Winship's Report.

Lansing, Mich.—The annual report of Insurance Commissioner John T. Winship, of Michigan, shows that theatres, including those pertaining to motion pictures, to the number of 1,385 were inspected during 1915. Licenses were issued to 1,225, while 85 were ordered closed and 13 were discontinued. Orders to close numbered 20 in Detroit, 5 in Grand Rapids, and 3 in Port Huron, and 2 each in Hancock, Mt. Clemens, Newberry, Pontiac, Ann Arbor and Battle Creek, while 3 discontinued of their own accord in Grand Rapids.

Earl Hennessy Goes to Majestic.

Detroit, Mich.—Earl Hennessy, former manager of the Duplex theater, has been appointed assistant manager of the Majestic, Woodward and Willis, succeeding R. Von der Goltz, who has gone on the road for Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The Majestic theater did an immense business with its first Triangle picture, "Hell's Hinges," week of April 30.

Manager Starr's Mother Dies.

Detroit, Mich.—The World extends its sympathies to M. Harlan Starr, manager of the Washington theater, Detroit, in the death of his mother, Mrs. Moses Starr, at Wilmington, Del., who was buried there on April 27.

Special Friday Matinees.

Detroit, Mich.—The Alhambra theater, Detroit, is having big success with its special Friday afternoon performances, which are designed to interest the school children in that section.

New Kunsky House by December.

Detroit, Mich.—John H. Kunsky fully expects to be operating his newest theater, The Madison, Broadway and Grand Circus park, by the first of December. The excavation work is now completed and the brick foundations are now being set.

Joe Wood Managing Garden Theater.

Detroit, Mich.—Joe Wood has been appointed manager of the Garden theater, to succeed H. W. Smith, who resigned. L. H. Gardner, manager of the Royal, will hereafter have charge also of the Empress theater, formerly managed by Mr. Wood. A new Venetian stage setting has recently been installed at the Garden theater which is very effective.

Local Business Notes.

The Standard Film Service, Inc., of which J. C. Fishman is the Detroit manager, is having a big call for the "Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons" and the "R. & G. Jungle" pictures. These pictures are finding their way to the best houses in every city.

Charlie Chaplin, in "A Burlesque on Carmen," attracted over seven thousand persons to the Avenue theater on Sunday, April 30, the first day of the showing. Prices were 25 cents for the first floor. The picture was shown in Detroit for the ensuing eight days to immense business under the auspices of C. W. Deibel, of Youngstown, Ohio, who leased the Avenue theater for the eight-day period.

Cleveland Letter

Higher Admission Prices Go Into Effect on May 15—All City Picture Houses May Remain Closed During Month of July—Notice on Detached Frames in Lobbies—Other Notes of Local Interest.

By Hubert Persons, Special Correspondent, Standard Theater Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—Increased admission prices went into effect May 15 in almost every motion picture theater in the downtown section. Houses which have been charging ten cents have increased their prices to fifteen cents and some of the five-cent houses have put out ten-cent signs. The change was informaly agreed upon after a conference between a group of downtown exhibitors.

Patrons are not expected to take exception to the change, as the class of pictures shown in Cleveland recently has been of such a uniformly high standard that the public realizes the cost of booking such films.

SCREEN BALL A SUCCESS.

Dance at Gray's Armory on May 1 Brilliant Affair.

Cleveland, O.—It would be difficult to make Cleveland motion picture fans believe that New York has anything on Cleveland since the first moving picture ball was held at the Grays' Armory, the night of May 1. The ball was given under the auspices of the Moving Picture Leader for the benefit of the Red Cross membership campaign fund.

Mayor Harry L. Davis led the grand march with Miss Alice Brady, film star, who came on from New York. There were more than 1,000 dancers in line.

Forty girls, who were declared winners in the Leader's moving picture contest recently, attended the ball in costume, representing various reel stars.

There were Indian girls, gypsy girls, Little Lord Fauntelroys, Cupids, Dutch girls, just scads of Mary Pickfords, and Mrs. Vernon Castles, and Billie Burkes and Vivian Martins. And a Theda Bara simply vampired all over the hall, and one Carmen actually smoked cigarettes the whole evening in the most blase manner possible. Also there was quite a squad of Charlie Chaplins.

Between dances, moving pictures of the forty Cleveland girls were shown. They were taken in the studio of the Reserve Photoplay Company, 717 Superior avenue. Charles H. Weston, director of the company, also attended the ball and put the girls through a sketch to show the public how films are made.

Talk of July Closing.

Cleveland, O.—July closing of all Cleveland motion picture theaters has been practically agreed upon and without the debate which had been planned to convince a few doubters of the wisdom of such a movement. It is proposed to close the theaters about July 3, to reopen a month later. Redecorating and repair work will be undertaken during the closed season. Many exhibitors are also talking about fishing trips.

Notice on Frames in Lobbies.

Cleveland, O.—The city building department has just sent notices to all motion picture theater owners, informing them that detached picture frames or stands will not be permitted in lobbies under the safety code. The matter has been referred to the executive committee of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. There is no disposition on the part of the League members to question or disobey the ruling, but in some instances it is believed exceptions can be made to the rule with mutual benefit to the public and the exhibitor. Such cases will be taken up with city officials.

Sawyer Speaks at Sociology Dinner.

Cleveland, O.—A number of officials and members of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League were the guests of the Cleveland Council of Sociology at a banquet in the Colonial hotel, May 8, when Charles G. Williams, member of the Ohio board of censors, was the principal speaker. Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the League, gave the exhibitors' view of censorship after Mr. Williams spoke.

Two Theater Sales.

Cleveland, O.—S. W. Manheim & Co., brokers, have just reported the sale of two Cleveland motion picture theaters. The Homestead theater, Detroit avenue and W. 117th street, was sold by Henn Brothers to the Homestead Amusement Company, headed by A. L. Wilson. The price was declared to be around $10,000.

The other deal was the sale of the Chaplin theater, Woodland avenue and E. 76th street, to James Filkin. It was sold by Emil C. Meyer for close to $1,500.

Babyland Film Leases Studio Site.

Cleveland, O.—The recently organized Babyland Film Company has just leased three acres of land on Woodhill road as a studio site for the production of moving picture films for children. The first film to be undertaken will be "Puss in Boots," with nearly 300 Cleveland children taking part.

Joe Williams Becomes Manager.

Cleveland, O.—Paul Mooney, district manager of the Fox Film, has just announced that Joe Williams, formerly assistant manager of the Cleveland office, has been appointed manager. Mr. Williams succeeds John D. Raridan, who resigned to become director of publicity in the Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation. Mr. Williams is a newspaper man of long experience.

Cleveland, O.—The first week in May was one of the biggest weeks Cleveland motion picture exhibitors have experienced in years from the viewpoint of big attractions.

One of the outstanding attractions was Pavlowa's "The Dumb Girl of Portici," which ran all week at the Alhambra theater. In the downtown houses some of the attractions were Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life," showing at the Strand theater; Beatriz Michelina in "The Unwritten Law," at the Orpheum theater; and Virginia Pearson in "Blazing Love," at the Standard.

Sociologist on Films

Student at Iowa University Makes Survey of Films Shown in Iowa City—Finds Twenty Per Cent. Harmless—Finds That Girls Like Comedy and Boys Like Adventure—Praise for Exhibitors.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

IOWA CITY, IA.—After a week's survey of Iowa City moving picture shows with the child problem in mind Ray L. Short, graduate student in sociology at the Iowa State University, feels that nearly 20 per cent. of the films he saw were "practically or wholly free from scenes detrimental to the best ethical or moral standards." This shows more pictures harmless to immature minds than the average survey. Mr. Short in his report says censoring without accurate and definite knowledge is wrong. His deductions were made from personal observations and questions submitted to 726 boys and 546 girls between the fifth and twelfth grades of the public schools.

Acting upon the premise that the motion picture is the most popular recreation of today and needs serious consideration, Mr. Short urged closer co-operation between the people and the manager of the theater, support for the Iowa City managers who were doing all they could to get good pictures. He emphasized the "Tell the manager" idea —let the exhibitor know whether the picture pleases or disgusts.

Of the young patrons 518 boys and 350 girls attended after 7 p. m. Twenty per cent of those between the ages of 9 and 14 years were properly accompanied.

The younger grades liked war, wild west or detective films. The fifth grade showed a preference of 56.8 per cent and the sixth of 50 per cent. In the seventh grade 17.1 per cent liked comedy and in the eighth love of the ludicrous jumped to 44.5 per cent.

Summing up, 36.2 per cent of all the boys preferred pictures of an adventurous type and 34.1 per cent of all the girls favored films of the humorous sort.

FILM BALL IN DES MOINES.

Plan to Have One During Convention Time This Year.

Des Moines, Ia.—Plans for a big exhibitors' ball in connection with the convention of the Iowa exhibitors are being considered. It is suggested that by holding the meetings about the same time that the conventions are held in Kansas City and Omaha it will be convenient for the producing companies to send out a number of stars who can appear at all three gatherings.

A booster meeting held at the Chamber of Commerce was attended by Messrs. Ballantyne, Hiersteiner and Meyers of the Mutual exchange, Jeffries and Isaacson of the General Film, Ross, Frisch and Sheridan of the Pathe, Smith of the Metro and LeBeau of the Paramount.

Des Moines Council Meddles.

Des Moines, Ia.—A resolution barring "The Birth of a Nation" scheduled at the Berchel theater was passed by the city commission by a vote of four to one. The resolution was offered at the suggestion of the corporation council. Councilman Fairweather said later the body had no right to vote on it but that it was a matter for the legal department. Elbert Q. Getchell, manager of the Berchel, went ahead with the ticket sale, maintaining that in order to stop the show the city would have to establish the fact that it had caused trouble in other cities, or after the first show here prove that it caused trouble here.

Councilmen were flooded with messages and telephone calls asking them to rescind their action. The Greater Des Moines Association passed a resolution favoring the showing of the picture.

A Baseball Challenge.

Des Moines, Ia.—A number of the local film exchanges have baseball teams this season. The employees of the General Film have issued a challenge to a team made up of bona fide employees of any film company. This nine recently defeated the Laemmle Film aggregation 11 to 4.

Suffragettes Hire Theater.

Oelwein, Ia.—The Oelwein Woman's Suffrage Association has leased the Colonial theater for the remainder of the season and will show moving pictures, book theatrical attractions, in addition to spreading the "Votes for Women" gospel.

Sabbath Law Fine.

Mason City, Ia.—Frank Turst, manager of "The Birth of a Nation" company, was fined $8.35 and costs for violation of the Sabbath law by showing the film at the Cecil theater. The managers of the Cecil, Regent and Bijou theaters were each fined a like amount because they kept their shows open on Sunday.

No Sunday Shows Yet in Centerville.

Centerville, Ia.—Opposition developed to Sunday shows in Centerville, and the Orpheum theater decided not to make such an innovation as it had planned to begin with Easter Sunday.

Report a New Producing Company.

Burlington, Ia.—Local papers say that Louis Jacobs, manager of the Palace theater, has been in Chicago, where he and Julius and Abe Stern of that city have formed a $50,000 company which will have a producing plant in either Los Angeles or New York. Contracts are said to have been secured with Francis Ford and Grace Cunard.

Changes in Iowa Theaters.

Anamosa, Ia.—E. J. Kratoska now controls the Crystal theater and Airdome, having purchased the interests of George & Polten.

Palmer, Ia.—Residents of Palmer project the erection of a new opera house.

Sioux City, Ia.—A band of Hawaiian musicians was a feature of the opening program at the new Model theater, 915-917 Fourth street. For the regular musical programs a ten-piece orchestra will be used.

Woden, Ia.—Funds are being raised here for the construction of an opera house.

Casey, Ia.—Oakley Lewer has purchased a moving picture theater here.

Nebraska Theater Notes.

Lincoln, Neb.—Manager Garmann of the Strand theater now changes his bills three times a week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Omaha, Neb.—Novak & Vasco will erect a moving picture theater to cost $12,000 at Twelfth and Williams streets. E. A. Vrana is architect.

Lincoln, Neb.—Plans are being made to film "The Pageant of Lincoln," to be staged June 5 and 6 on Athletic field at the Nebraska State university. The pageant will be historical as well as spectacular, one part being based upon Coronado's excursion into Nebraska in search of the seven cities of Quivera.

Dakota Theater Notes.

Beach, N. D.—R. H. Markus has purchased the interests of James Power in the Beach opera house.

Humboldt, S. D.—James Campbell has purchased the interests of the Humboldt Moving Picture Company.

Grand Forks, N. D.—The Metropolitan theater is playing many features the second time. Among recent repeaters were "The Soul of Broadway" and "The Regeneration."

Profit Sharing Theater at Eau Claire, Wis.

New Palace Theater to Distribute Half of What Is Left After Paying Not More Than 10 Per Cent. Dividends and Sinking Fund.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—Moving picture patrons of Eau Claire will get rebate from the money they spend for tickets under the plan which the Eau Claire Profit Sharing Theater Company has outlined for its operation of the proposed Palace theater.

The company has just been incorporated with capital stock of $50,000 under the laws of Wisconsin. Emil Weinfeld is president; W. S. Kelley, vice-president; R. H. Johnson, secretary, and G. J. Lange, treasurer.

A section of the articles of incorporation provides as follows: The directors, subject to the revision of the stockholders at any annual or special meetings, shall apportion the earnings by first paying dividends on the paid up capital stock not exceeding ten per cent per annum, then setting aside five per cent of the net profits for a reserve fund. One half of what is left of the net profits shall be paid by uniform dividend upon the amount of profit sharing or patronage coupons turned in at their office between the first and tenth of January of the year following the issue thereof, and the remainder of net profits—the other half of what has been left after stock dividends and sinking fund—to be an additional dividend upon the paid up capital stock.

Frank E. Grey, architect, Milwaukee, and Volkman & Hancock, associate architects, of Eau Claire, are drawing plans for the theater, seating 900, to be used for both vaudeville and pictures. The lobby will be entirely of marble.

Palace Theater Opens.

Racine, Wis.—The Paramount picture, "Poor Little Pepina," ran the first two days at the new Palace theater on Monument square. The Palace has been thoughtfully planned for the convenience of patrons and employees and to insure satisfactory projection of good pictures. The equipment includes a Minusa gold-fiber screen, a Hope-June unit orchestra and an automatic ticket-selling machine.

German War Films.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The films of big Charity War Bazaar, which was held at the Auditorium, are playing the outlying houses. A share of the receipts is given to the war victims in Germany, Austria and Hungary.

Wisconsin Theater Changes.

Northwest Picture Assn.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest Wants All Possible Members to Join—Important Work Is Coming—Assessment Is Only One Cent a Year for Every Seat in the Theater.

By Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest is launching a hot campaign for members in order to be ready to protect the interests of the exhibitors when legislation affecting their business is up before the law-making bodies of the various communities and states in the organization's territory. Much proposed legislation in the Northwest is held to be harmful to the trade and the association wants a full treasury in order to make the determined fight which will be required, says C. E. Van Duzee, treasurer of the organization. His offices are at 740 Temple Court, Minneapolis, Minn. The dues of the Northwest Association are based on a one-cent assessment per year on each seat in the member's playhouse.

Atlanta, Ga.—Business was most excellent in all the houses in Atlanta Confederate Memorial day. The Forsyth and the Piedmont did a turn-away business all day, and every moving picture house in the city was crowded.

SALT LAKE NEWS LETTER.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake City Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—A sweeping change in the management of the Swanson theaters in Salt Lake—the American, Rex and Liberty—was made May 1, following the arrival of William H. Swanson from his headquarters in New York.

Harry A. Sims, who has had charge of the three Salt Lake houses since they were purchased last year by the Swanson interests, has retired as managing director and secretary, and will devote his entire time to the conduct of his own motion picture theaters, located in towns in Utah and southern Idaho.

He is succeeding by W. Maurice Tobin, who has acquired an interest in the three big houses, and who arrived in Salt Lake several days ago from Japan, whence he was summoned by cablegram from Mr. Swanson. Through the managerial experience of Mr. Tobin, Mr. Swanson expects to see a great increase in business for the three theaters and promises for Mr. Tobin that Salt Lake will see some entirely new "wrinkles" in motion picture exhibition.

Mr. Tobin has had years of experience in the amusement and motion picture business and was at one time connected with the Strand theater in New York.

Charles W. Meighan, formerly a newspaper man of Ogden and long associated with Mr. Swanson, will be assistant to Mr. Tobin, having in charge the Liberty and Rex house management. No other changes in the theater staffs are contemplated, so far as can be learned, and it is expected that E. C. Schmidt will be retained as publicity director for the Swanson theaters.

Called the Metropolitan.

Homer E. Ellison Recovered.

Salt Lake City.— Manager Homer E. Ellison, of the Paramount-Empress, resumed active direction of the house last week, after being discharged from a hospital, where he underwent three major operations for a throat affliction.

The Deseret Film Company, of Salt Lake, is rapidly climbing the ladder of fame and prosperity hereabouts and has made a distinct impression with its live local news features, which have been shown regularly at the American.

FROM KANSAS CITY.

Herbert Spencer's New Theater.

Yale, Oklahoma—Herbert Spencer, owner of the Empress theater at Yale, Okla., is building a beautiful new theater which he expects to occupy in 60 days. The house will be one of the finest theaters in the oil field. It will cost about $15,000, with terra cotta front, port cochere, etc. Mr. Spencer was formerly in the mercantile business, and in the past few months has been very successful with pictures. "The application of business principles wins in this line as well as in others," he says.

Kansas City Screen Club

Local Picture Men Forming an Organization of Exhibitors and Exchange Men—Will Fill a Long-Felt Need—Messrs. Mills and Gilday Are Serving as a Special Sub-committee to Look Out for Its Beginnings.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—This city wants such an organization, and has been waiting for it many years. In the old days, when Eugene Field and a few others like him were working on Kansas City newspapers, there was a press club that was a hummer, but since then, there has been no organization that in any way resembled the Press Clubs, the Lambs, the Gridiron, the Screen Clubs of other cities. And it is purposed to give such an organization to the city in the new club.

The movement was started only a few weeks ago, the first meeting being held April 10. A committee on organization was appointed, including E. R. Pearson, R. O. Proctor, E. C. Mills, and Joseph Gilday, and they are now perfecting the plans. It is purposed to begin the club with exhibitors and exchange men, and perhaps later include other persons connected with the industry. Mr. Mills and Mr. Gilday are a special subcommittee on details.

WILL WORK TOGETHER.

Wichita Exhibitors Form Phalanx to Open Sunday Doors.

Wichita, Kan.—A new organization has been recently formed in Wichita, Kansas, composed of every eligible moving picture exhibitor in that town, with the object of getting the places of amusement in that city open on Sundays. There is at the present time a local ordinance prohibiting any form of amusement in Wichita, whether admission is charged or not. The moving picture men claim that the law is clearly unconstitutional, but rather than go through a long court proceedure to prove this have banded together for the purpose of getting a special local election called to decide the question quickly, and what they believe will be for all time. The question to be put before the Wichita public is: Do you want Sunday pictures?

The movement was started by prominent business men of Wichita and not by the moving picture owners, but the latter are lending every possible effort to get the election called. The result of this is being watched with the greatest of interest over the entire state. Practically every town in Kansas has a law prohibiting the showing of pictures on Sunday, and moving picture men are more than eager to get such action as a starter.

Harry Rosenberg Goes East.

Harry Rosenberg, who has been a special representative in this territory for the Blue Bird Photoplay Company, has left Kansas City for the East, where he will be connected with a similar exchange. Rosenberg is too valuable a man to let loose, the Blue Bird people think, and they are holding on to him.

J. C. Woolf Heads Local Unicorn.

J. C. Woolf, well known to Kansas Citians, is now managing the Minneapolis office of the Unicorn Film Service. Mr. Woolf has a large acquaintance in this city and was formerly connected with J. W. Morgan, who owned the Universal Film and Supply Co. several years ago, now manager of the local Unicorn Film Service branch. Mr. Woolf was for some time with the Warner Feature Film Company.

J. C. De Walt With Mutual.

A new traveler with the Mutual in Kansas City is J. C. DeWalt, formerly with the Universal Film and Supply Co. Mr. DeWalt has "made" Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma territory for some time and is well known to exhibitors. His district with the Mutual will be Oklahoma.

Theater Changes Hereabouts.

Kansas City, Mo.—Leo Spaulding, who for some time has guided the Princess theater at Ninth and Prospect, has sold his interest in the place to J. R. Dennison, the change to take effect the first of May.

Marshall, Mo.—The Orpheum theater at Marshall has been sold to Forrest Kerrens by C. A. Rohrer, who has had it recently. Mr. Merrens is a Missouri exhibitor and has had much experience in the game, formerly handling the house at Butler, Mo.

Winfield, Kan.—After using a program booking for a long period, Frank Garrety, proprietor of the Novelty theater in Winfield, has changed to that of features and now uses the service of the following exchanges: Triangle, Fox, Paramount, V.-L.-S.-E., and Pathe.

Webb City, Mo.—The Blake theater at Webb City is undergoing a series of improvements that will make it one of the largest houses in that section of the state. Additional seats are to be put in the gallery and the stage is to be altered in such a way that additional boxes may be added on the sides. Forty feet of the stage is to be cut away, and the present footlights will be moved back the same distance. Boxes seating twenty people will be built in. Manager I. L. Davis will then begin holding regular afternoon performances.

Among Kansas City Exchanges.

Two prominent visitors to the Fox office recently were H. J. Roberts, traveling representative of that company, and Harry Leonhardt, district manager. Both were in this territory looking the ground over.

A. A. Chatkin, local manager of the United Film Service, is very enthusiastic regarding the new policy of twenty-one releases out of his office, recently adopted. The new plan is to release one big feature each week, including the regular service. Eventually, and as soon as the field ripens, it is very probable that the number of features will be increased to four.

If anyone doubts the success of the Bluebird pictures in this territory, all he needs to do is to ask George H. Bowles, publicity man for the company, and such thoughts will instantly be dispelled. W. B. Emrich won another five-dollar gold piece in the Bluebird contest, making five out of a possible six prizes.

Ever since E. H. Wachter, the new manager of Fox, took over his duties in the Kansas City office, he has desired to make a trip over the surrounding territory, but the stress of business has kept him from it. However, he really did make such a journey during the first week in May, during which time he made several new acquaintances.

The opening week of the Unicorn Film Service has been a very satisfactory one from the viewpoint of the officials in the Kansas City office. The second week was much better. Topeka and St. Joe are two surrounding towns that have taken to the new company's service

Over twenty Kansas City theatres have secured bookings for the new serial of the Universal, "The Adventures of Peg of the Ring," and are declaring that it is "the greatest ever!"

Brady-made features are starting out in the Kansas City territory with a rush. The exhibitors of this territory were invited to come here on April 24 for an exhibition, 63 night letters being sent out by Richard Robertson, local exchange manager, in the interests of the display. Twenty-two persons came in from all parts of Missouri and Kansas to see the pictures. Of these twenty signed for the features.

Board of Indorsers

Indianapolis Children's Film Movement Takes Definite Form—New Board Refuse to Be Called Censors—Name Is Board of Indorsers of Junior Motion Pictures—First Special Shows at Keith's a Success.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—In forming an organization to promote the "better pictures for children" movement, which now holds Indianapolis in its grasp, club women of the city who are thoroughly conversant with the undesirability of censorship of the motion picture refused to be called "censors" when forming the organization to select the pictures for the children, and said they would be called "Indorsers." In fact, the official name of the organization is the Indianapolis Board of Indorsers for Junior Motion Pictures.

They pointed out that they intended in no way to restrict the liberty of the motion picture industry and were not prudes. They merely wanted to view the pictures before they were thrown on the screen, they said, and did not propose to be called censors. They said, too, that the objection to the average censor was so widespread that it was not desirable that they should obtain the reputation of being censors. The result was that when a name was adopted for the organization the word censors appeared nowhere in it.

One of the factors toward making a success of the movement for children's shows is the help which is being given by James L. Weed, manager of the Keith theater of this city, where the children's shows are given. Mr. Weed recently came here from Louisville, where he was connected with a Keith theater and where he helped to establish the first children's show. He is thoroughly familiar with what the women want to do because of his experience in Louisville and is doing much to relieve their difficulties.

The first shows have been given in the Keith theater and have been a success. They were well attended. The attendance from certain neighborhoods was so great that it brought up the proposition of holding the shows in the best of the neighborhood theaters. This may be done if enough large theaters can be found to accommodate the attendance.

Ask New Sabbath Law Trial.

Lafayette, Ind.—The three motion picture house owners of this city who are seeking a new trial in an effort to overcome the recent conviction against them on a charge of conspiring to break the laws of the state by operating a moving picture house on Sunday, have entered their pleas in circuit court and the court has asked for time in which to render a decision. The case got into the courts months ago and created a big sensation in this part of the state.

Grand Theater Dark.

Terre Haute, Ind.—There was some mystery concerning the sudden move of Charles Smith, manager of the Grand, when Smith suddenly paid off his employes, settled his accounts and closed his theater. Smith disappeared for a few days but returned later and announced that the theater would remain closed indefinitely.

New Lyric Opens.

Covington, Ind.—The Lyric, Covington's newest moving picture theater, is open. The theater played to capacity business the first week, and much favorable comment was aroused because of the beautifully appointed interior of the picture house.

Grand Opera House Sold.

Vincennes, Ind.—The Grand Opera House, the largest theater of this city and one catertering to the legitimate until this time, is going in the moving picture field and the house will be open the year round. W. R. Crackel, Guy A. McJimsey and J. T. McJimsey sold the theater for a consideration of $50,000 to J. F. Ward of Boulder, Colo., and R. R. Trueblood of Lawrenceville, Ill. The new owners announced that the changes necessary to start moving pictures will be made at once and that feature pictures will predominate. Mr. Louis F. Brumer of this city will be in full charge of the new moving picture house.

The Colonial Improvements.

Ft. Wayne, Ind.—The Colonial was closed for two weeks while repairs were being made. Manager H. C. Heisler said that improvements would be made rapidly and that the patrons of the theater would not be kept away long.

To Run Only Saturdays and Sundays.

Mt. Vernon, Ind.—Romelia Bishop, owner of the Colonial theater, has purchased an interest in the Dreamland theater and hereafter will operate the Colonial only on Saturdays and Sundays.

New Albany, Ind.—William Conklin, photoplay director for the McHenry Film Corporation, is filming local celebrities for a home picture under the auspices of the New Albany Tribune. The Tribune recently conducted a popularity contest, and the "actors" for the film were suggested in this way.

ILLINOIS NEWS LETTER,

By Frank H. Madison, Special Correspondent, 6747 Emerald Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Thomasboro, Ill.—Elmer Hudson has started a moving picture show here.

Kankakee, Ill.—The Royal theater is now under the management of Jeffries Brothers. Carnations were given women patrons the first night.

Morrisson, Ill.—Mr. and Mrs. William Boston of Sterling have leased a site here for the erection of an airdome and will use vaudeville and pictures.

McHenry, Ill.—Manor Brothers, who have been operating a moving picture show at Hebron for the last three years, have opened another show in Simon Stoffel's hall in McHenry.

Hoopeston, Ill.—A. M. Keller of Keller & Betts, owners of the Princess theater, has purchased the Lyric theater from B. W. Williamson, who recently acquired it from Thomas Kennedy.

St. David, Ill.—John Lakin, Sr., has resumed the management of the Lakin theater.

Elgin, Ill.—The Mann building on Chicago street is said to have been rented for use as a motion picture theater.

Hull, Ill.—L. H. Kennedy has reopened the moving picture theater here.

Among Illinois Exhibitors.

Cuba, Ill.—The Orpheum theater suffered a small film fire which was checked by slipping a galvanized box over the machine.

Canton, Ill.—The Idylhour theater is now using Universal service exclusively, giving four reels daily for five cents, except Sunday, when one is added.

Jacksonville, Ill.—Manager Scott of Scott's theater had to turn away business with "The Battle Cry of Peace."

Peru, Ill.—Manager Forrest Fletcher of the Werner theater has purchased a $5,000 pipe organ.

Lincoln, Ill.—The Star Theater's new screen setting is a Japanese garden.

Maywood, Ill.—Manager Gollos of the Strand theater selected the Vitagraph feature "The Price of Folly" for Royal Neighbors' night.

Rockford, Ill.—"The Wall Between" was shown at the Orpheum theater under the auspices of the Rockford Art Guild.

Oquawka, Ill.—The Airdome here is being remodeled and will be reopened some time in May .

Rockford, Ill.—The Grand theater did a good business at a two-day return engagement of Billie Burke in "Peggy."

Danville, Ill.—The day that Vermilion county Odd Fellows celebrated the anniversary of the order, the Fischer theater gave a benefit, using a special reel of Odd Fellow pictures in addition to the Triangle "Aloha Oe."

East St. Louis, Ill.—Erber's theater will not close this summer but will continue to offer feature pictures and vaudeville.

Marengo, Ill.—"St. Elmo" was the selection for a woman's club benefit at the Royal theater.

Michigan Theater Changes.

Three Rivers, Mich.—George Pierce of Grand Rapids, who operates theaters in Grand Rapids and Flint, has purchased the Vaudette theater here from Starr Wilson of Constantine. He will manage the house himself and will make this city his home. Paramount and Metro service will be used.

Bay City, Mich.—Four weeks of trying out pictures proved a success at the Washington theater, and on May 15 it will close while it is being made over into a picture house. It will still be able to accommodate one of those almost extinct attractions—a good road show, but henceforth the photoplay's the thing with the management.

Niles, Mich.—D. S. Scoffern will erect a theater, seating 800, here.

Escanaba, Mich.—The Grand theater, pictures and vaudeville, has been reopened under the maangement of Con Sullivan.

ATLANTA NEWS LETTER.

By A. M. Beatty, Special Correspondent, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Screen Club Gives Dinner.

ATLANTA, GA.—The members of the Atlanta Screen Club declare the Transportation Club quarters, on the eighth and ninth floors of the Walton building, will make them a splendid new home. A formal dinner will be tendered the club members and their friends as soon as the organization is established in its new quarters some time in May.

The Georgia exhibition will be taken to Auburn, N. Y., August 15 by Verne H. Barber, road manager, and then will be shown in other points in New York State. The regular tour of the east and west will begin early in September.

Texas Federation Liberal

Two Liberal Resolutions, One on Censoring of Film and One on Sunday Shows, Are Adopted by Texas State Federation of Labor at Meeting on April 28—Committee to Help in the Sunday Show Fight.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Special Correspondent, 618 Comal St., Dallas, Texas.

HOUSTON, TEX.—The meeting of the Texas State Federation of Labor, which closed here April 28, devoted much time to matters of interest to the moving picture trade. The meeting displayed a sentiment of broad-minded liberality and deep thinking and a determination to maintain the spirit of American liberty in amusement matters.

Favor Sunday Shows.

Two very strong resolutions were passed, one endorsing the movement to pass a local option law permitting incorporated cities to open shows on Sunday if the people so desired. The resolution follows:

"Whereas, our state law dealing with the regulation of Sunday observance is antiquated, obsolete and in many instances impossible of enforcement, and in other instances its provisions are useless, and in other instances its enforcement is undesirable; and

"Whereas, conditions have so changed in Texas since the passage of this law that its provisions are entirely unsuited to the present needs of many localities where the enforcement is impossible, as in the case of the sale of certain commodities, permitting some forms of amusements and forbidding others; therefore be it

"Resolved, by the Texas State Federation of Labor that we go on record as endorsing the movement inaugurated for the amending of the present Sunday law, so that incorporated cities may be given local option in the matter of operation on Sunday of theaters and motion picture shows and similar places of amusement; and be it further

"Resolved, That a special committee be appointed from this body to assist in this movement for an amendment to said Sunday law."

This resolution went over with very little opposition, and a strong committee was appointed to look after the matter, auxiliary to the regular legislative committee of the federation.

Oppose Censorship.

The federation also went on record as opposing censorship in any form as being inimical to American liberty and liable to create unfair conditions. The resolution follows:

"Whereas, there is an indication that at some future time an abridgement of the freedom of the press will be attempted through the same subtle means now employed to censor the motion picture films, and

"Whereas, the time is coming when the motion picture films will be equally, if not a greater agent of publicity in promoting propaganda, disseminating information, of education and for promulgating ideas, opinions and truths, than is the press today, and

"Whereas, there are laws against exhibition of indecent and immoral subjects; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we do believe that the censoring of picture films is like the censoring of printed publications, with the same effect and the same end in view, and we go on record as opposing such censorship, it being considered unfair, prejudiced, and wrong in principle, we preferring rather that laws should be enacted setting forth what should not be exhibited; thus treating all alike and the same, thereby eliminating the censorship power over publication."

This resolution also passed with an easy majority and copies were ordered sent to interested persons.

Endorses the World.

It will be noticed that the latter resolution takes the same stand as that exploited by this paper, that is, the entire elimination of the censor, considering that the police laws are amply sufficient to cover any pictures that might be obscene and indecent. And no manufacturer is going to be insane enough to try to put out anything of this kind any more than a magazine publisher would try to print obscene literature. It also endorses the World's contention that the censoring of pictures will prove an opening wedge for the censoring of newspapers and other publications.

As to the Sunday law, Texas has long been a state noted for its adherence to the principles of local option. Many times has statewide prohibition failed in this state because of this, and there are many statutes on the books now making local laws permissible in numberless matters.

Organized labor has spoken. It is now up to the exhibitors and others with money invested in the game to give their support to these matters so vital to the life of the industry. If these latter will just get together and help forward these two propaganda there can be no question of the outcome.

Fox Manager Busy.

W. M. Byrd, Dallas manager for the Fox Film, was on the road so much during the latter part of April that he might almost be accused of moving headquarters and just paying visits to Dallas. He was in town April 25-27, between trips to El Paso and San Antonio, and was in a very optimistic and happy frame of mind, so we suppose business had been good.

Big Four Has New Traveler.

John A. Steinson has been added to the traveling forces of the Big Four and will devote his time to that portion of Oklahoma handled from Dallas. Mr. Steinson was formerly manager of the Liberty theater at McAlester, Okla., and is thoroughly conversant with the business.

Chaplin's "Carmen" a Mop.

Dallas, Tex.—The Chaplin burlesque on "Carmen" was shown at the Washington theater, Dallas, for the week of April 23-30 and proved to be a mop-up. Although the critics had said this picture was not so good as most Chaplins, the audiences at the Washington seemed very well satisfied, keeping up an almost continuous run of laughter.

Two Specials at Dallas.

The Jack London pictures of the South Sea Islands played in Dallas the first week in May, doing a good business. The lobby display of trophies of Mr. London's travels attracted considerable attention.

Under the auspices of the Dallas Dispatch, the official war pictures from the various Teutonic fronts were shown at the Hippodrome theater, May 1-6. The pictures drew quite well.

Louisiana Force Added To.

Dallas, Tex.—The Dallas office of the Big Four announces that J. P. Luening will travel for that company in Louisiana outside of New Orleans. Mr. Luening was formerly in a similar position with the General Film Company.

J. A. Holton Gets Control.

Port Arthur, Tex.—James A. Holton, manager of the Port Arthur Amusement Company, operating the Pearce and Peoples theaters at Port Arthur, Texas, is now sole owner of the two picture houses, having recently acquired the forty per cent of stock held by Dan A. Williams, former treasurer of the company. Mr. Holton is considered one of the livest exhibitors in the South. He is using Metro, Paramount, World, Equitable and V-L-S-E at the Pearce, and Universal and General at the Peoples. Mr. Holton is figuring on some extensive improvements within the next year.

World Staff Gets Together.

Dallas, Tex.—The office and road staffs of the World Film Dallas office had a general get-together meeting Wednesday, April 12. Manager Max Graf entertained the road force and the office staff joined in. A sort of round-table discussion was had of the business in this section, which is rapidly increasing, and all hands felt lots better and more enthusiastic as a result of the meeting.

Manager Max Graf in His Office.

The World Film Corporation's Dallas Force.

Left to right: John Lanfranconi, bookkeeper; Eddie Goodrow, shipping clerk; M. Ramsey, shipping clerk; Miss M. Hibbetts, inspector; Miss I. Carter, billing clerk; Miss G. C. Tenney, stenographer; Max Graf, manager; A. Raymond, traveler; George Slater, booking clerk; W. S. Tuttle, traveler; Miss Bess Miller, stenographer; A. J. Xydias, of the Rex and Star theaters, Houston.

Unusual Combination House.

Galveston, Texas.—A house for the pleasure of the general public that is an extremely unusual combination will be built at Galveston. It is being constructed by G. K. Jorgenson and will be known as the Crystal Palace. The building will occupy about a full square block on the wonderful beach at that city and will cost something over $600,000, being entirely of concrete. It will consist of theater, dance hall, restaurant and hotel, and a magnificent promenade will be built about the place and down to the water.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Screen Club's New Home.

THE Rocky Mountain Screen Club has moved into its new quarters in the Tabor Grand opera house, held a house warming and is now comfortably settling awaiting the steadily increasing growth that will require another move into still larger clubrooms.

The new home of the moving picture men is in keeping with the advancement that is being made in the business to which the members devote their energy. It is twice as large as the birthplace of the organization, has more and better conveniences and is located right in the heart of the moving picture section.

A second pool table has been installed and several more card tables put into place and initiated. A bigger and better library is now the aim of the house committee. Already this feature has become one of the most popular of the club's attractions. Complete files of the Moving Picture World are not the least important of the library's equipment. Most of the exhibitors and exchange men have files of The World, but those who have not find the Screen Club file a handy reference to look up old releases or even brand new releases to get material for advertising films that they are about to show.

Denver Film Ball Team.

W. H. Cree, manager of the General Film exchange and also manager of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club Baseball team, has twenty diamond stars of various brilliancy who responded for the first practice of the season. Most of the players had been working out on the quiet and showed mid-season form.

There are a dozen or more players among the candidates who won reputations as ball tossers while in college or on semi-pro nines, while in Harry Cassidy, road man for the Mutual, the club has a professional who ranks as one of the best outfielders in the minor leagues.

A Ty Cobb-Benny Kauff controversy is threatened between Manager Cree and Walter Rand of the Triangle. Rand has earned the title of Cobb by his heavy stickwork and daring base running, while Cree claims that he will emulate Kauff and make his rival look like a novice.

Among the score of other players who threaten to give both a race for honors are: Harry Nolan, All Hagan, W. S. Rand, Gene Gerbase, Denham Palmer, John Doman, Carl Stern, Sam Baxter, Joe Ashby and Jap Morgan.

The players represent all branches of the film industry. Palmer and Stern are managers of the World and Bluebird exchanges, respectively, and Baxter is owner of the Isis theater, one of Denver's biggest and best photoplay houses.

New Universal Manager.

Denver, Col.—E. H. Goldstein, assistant general manager of exchanges of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was in Denver superintending the transfer of the management of the Denver exchange into the hands of a new manager. Louis Goldstein, former manager, has severed his connection with the Universal company in accordance with his resignation.

Denham Palmer Now Exchange Manager.

Denham Palmer, former division manager of the World Film for all the Western county is now exchange manager in Denver for the same company. Announcement of the change has just been made.

Charles R. Gilmour, who was manager of the World Exchange in Denver up to the time he was stricken with appendicitis a few weeks ago, will be transferred to the Coast.

Palmer is a Denver product in the moving picture industry. He started here with the General Film, then became local manager of the World. Later he opened the World's office in Salt Lake and has been division manager both East and West for the same company.

When Gilmour was taken ill suddenly he came from San Francisco to take charge of the Denver Exchange. Now he will remain permanently. Palmer was desirous of the change because his wife's health requires that she live in Colorado.

San Francisco Letter

Local League Promoting Children's Shows Makes Arrangement with Republic Theater—Local Office of George Kleine Opens—Two New Film Concerns—Business Notes and Changes.

By T. A. Charce, Special Correspondent, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.—The League of the Children's theater, of which M. Lebowitz is superintendent and Mrs. D. E. F. Easton is manager, has made arrangements with the management of the Republic theater, Sutter and Steiner streets, for a period of one year, to set aside Friday and Saturday afternoons of each week for the purpose of giving performances for and by children. to include moving pictures, for the nominal charge of five cents. The League has offices in the Phelan building and is affiliated with the Recreation League, besides having the endorsement of the San Francisco Drama League. Large quantities of tickets have been purchased by wealthy persons for distribution among the homes of the poor. On the opening day moving pictures of the youngsters entering the theater were taken and these will be shown at a later date.

GEORGE KLEINE OFFICE HERE.

Frank McCoy to Manage New Exchange on Golden Gate Avenue.

San Francisco, Calif.—W. O. Edmonds, who arrived in San Francisco recently to open an office for George Kleine and to establish Pacific Coast headquarters, is now well settled in the quarters taken over on Golden Gate avenue, near Hyde street. Great success has been met with in booking Gloria's Romance, featuring Billie Burke, as many as thirty exhibitors having visited the exchange in a single day to investigate this serial. The Turner & Dahnken circuit has booked this production for its nine houses, including the new one at Portland, and it is being placed rapidly in the large cities of the Coast. Frank McCoy, for some time with the Progressive Film exchange, has accepted a position as office manager for George Kleine, and R. H. Allan, formerly with the General Film Company, is on the road in Northern California. A branch exchange will be opened at Los Angeles about May 8th.

Film Concerns Incorporated.

San Francisco, Calif.—The Sun Photoplay Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000 by C. A. Sullivan, T. R. White, B. Smolenski, R. D. Sullivan and J. T. Sullivan. Offices were opened a short time ago in the David Hewes Building on Market street.

Articles of incorporation of the Atlas Educational Film Company of San Francisco have been filed by E. P. Cady, T. L. Haines and R. R. Behm, the capital stock being placed at $15,000. This concern has been engaged in business here for some time, with offices in the Pacific building, handling Atlas projection machines, Universal cameras and educational films. The incorporation of the concern was delayed, owing to the fact that the name Atlas was used by another firm in the film business which was incorporated about a year ago, but which has retired from the field.

Board of Trade Manager Visits Los Angeles.

San Francisco, Calif.—Fred S. Peachy, manager of the Board of Trade of San Francisco, has returned from a trip to Los Angeles, where he made a short stay visiting friends in the film exchange business. He found the pay-in-advance plan working splendidly there, with exhibitors well pleased with the system. Before returning home he made a short trip to San Diego.

International Film Service Busy.

San Francisco, Calif.—Although no releases have been made as yet at the local office of the International Film Service, Inc., bookings in this territory have aggregated more than $25,000 and over fifty theaters have signed for the serial "The Mysteries of Myra." A private review of the second episode of this serial and a split reel release was given recently in the Mechanics Bank Building before exhibitors and newspaper men. H. I. Krause, who traveled out of the Denver office of the Pathe exchange when this was under the management of H. L. Knappen, now manager of the local branch of the International, arrived here recently to fill a position as road man and is covering the Sacramento valley for the new exchange.

Golden Gate Adds New Film Line.

San Francisco, Calif.—The Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., has secured the Pacific Coast rights to the releases of the Juvenile Film Corporation and will release a one-reel comedy every two weeks. The All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has secured the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to "Captivating Mary Carstars." Louis Hyman, booker for the All Star, recently made a road trip through the northern part of the state.

San Francisco News Pointers.

The Grand theater at Twenty-second and Mission streets, one of the oldest moving picture houses in that district, and for the past six years conducted under the management of Ed. S. Stark, has been sold to R. A. Floodberg.

Owing to the high cost of colored paper the price of tickets has been advanced by all of the supply houses here.

The College of Notre Dame has installed moving picture aparatus furnished by Walter Preddey.

The opening of the Rialto theater on Market street has been postponed for one week, owing to the fact that the artisans could not complete their work on the house by the date originally set.

M. G. Jonas, publicity man for the Universal, was a recent visitor here from Universal City.

I. N. Cohen has gone upon the road in the interests of the California Film exchange.

The Baird projection machines used in the exhibit of the Argentine Republic at the recent Exposition has been sent to Buenos Ayres.

Plans for a motion picture theater to be erected at Third and Tehama streets are being prepared for Benj. G. McDougall and Arthur Arlett. The house is to have a seating capacity of 1,200.

Among the recent visitors here have been John Ratto, of Jackson; L. H. Killingsworth, St. Helena; F. Atkins, Marysville, and L. Frietas, Stockton, all prominent exhibitors.

California Theater Notes.

Pinola, Calif.—A new theater is to be erected here by Mr. Toherrassy, of the Point theater, Richmond, Calif.

Fruitvale, Calif.—Fisher's theater has been sold by E. Staub to W. Sommer.

T & D Enter Portland

San Francisco Firm Takes Over Empress Theater from Ackerman and Harris, Who Recently Acquired It—Pictures Will Be Featured—No Vaudeville—Name Changed to T. & D. Theater—Large Organ to Be Installed.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Turner and Dahnken, of San Francisco, have entered the Portland field. Sam Harris, of Ackerman & Harris, new owners of the Empress and Orpheum theaters, passing through Portland recently en route to Seattle, announced that his firm had leased the first named house to the California moving picture theater men. The transaction was entirely unexpected, but was a logical solution to the enigmatical problem that had been causing much discussion among the exhibitors already established. The first visit of Bruce Johnson, secretary of the T. & D. company, some time ago was regarded as inconsequential by the local men. The deal was closed in San Francisco, and Mr. Johnson returned to Portland to arrange the opening of the new house.

Ackerman and Harris leased the theater to Turner and Dahnken only upon the condition that no vaudeville shall be shown, and the newcomers will therefore feature music and pictures only. It is planned to install an organ costing $35,000, similar to the one in the Tivoli in San Francisco, and to employ a symphony orchestra of 12 pieces. The prices will be 10 and 15 cents, and 8 or 10 reels will constitute a show. The best pictures obtainable on the open market will be shown. Mr. Johnson stated that his firm had closed a contract with George Kleine for the Billie Burke serial, "Gloria's Romance." The house will be renamed the T. & D. theater. The lighting will be altered to make the front of the house a blaze of lights and a new screen will be installed. The opening date will be May 14. Mr. Johnson will manage the house until a permanent man is selected.

At the Hippodrome.

With the leasing of the Empress to Turner and Dahnken, Ackerman and Harris announced the policy of their other Portland house, the Orpheum, which will be renamed the Hippodrome. The name Hippodrome was taken by the Baker theater two months ago, but this house has recognized the prior right of Ackerman and Harris to the name and the question of its use has been settled. The Hippodrome will feature vaudeville with moving pictures as auxiliaries. The vaudeville acts will be booked from New York and start from Chicago west by the southern route. Lester Fountain, former manager of the Los Angeles Hippodrome, will manage the Portland house until the enterprise is well under way. The brand of pictures to be shown has not been announced except that the Pathe Weekly and the Pathe series, "Who's Guilty?" will be a part of the film attractions. The prices will be 10 and 15 cents.

Film Situation Unsettled.

The effect of the coming of these new enterprises is being carefully watched by the men already established. With the possible exception of the Columbia, every house in the city has been controlled by local people and their services have been booked independently of any other house in any other city. Turner and Dahnken own over a dozen houses on the coast, and Ackerman and Harris own several. It is contended by the dopesters on Film Row that the newcomers are in a better position to control big service than any of the individual houses. The reported consolidation of Lasky and Famous Players with Triangle coming about the same time as the entrance of the San Francisco concerns into the city has given the Film Row strategists a lot to talk about.

New House for Oregon City.

Oregon City, Ore.—W. A. Long has purchased a large lot adjoining the court house in Oregon City and is having plans prepared for the erection of a photoplay theater seating 800. Mr. Long now conducts the Star theater near the site of his new house.

War in Roseburg.

Roseburg, Ore.—Following the attempted price raise when two theaters increased their admission to 15 cents and a third cut to 5 cents, a price war is being waged here. All theaters have cut to a nickel. The best services are being used and 8 and 9 reels are shown. Both sides have intimated they will fight to a finish.

Idaho Man Visits.

Theodore Johnson, general manager of the Idaho Amusement Company, operating 4 theaters in Boise, was in Portland recently arranging service. Picture theaters in Boise have been compelled to close on Sunday for some time past, but exhibitors have been conducting a campaign for Sunday opening which Mr. Johnson thinks will be successful.

Wilson Goes To G. F.

Portland, Ore.—H. M. Wilson, who has been exploiting Kalem's "Social Pirates," in this territory, has been employed as road man for the General Film to work out of Portland. Mr. Wilson was formerly an exhibitor and was associated with T. C. Penny, controlling four houses between Glasgow and Havre, Montana. He has a pleasing personality that is peculiar to "big fellows" and will undoubtedly make a most popular road man.

Fire at Hubbard.

Hubbard, Ore.—The Empress theater, operated by A. C. Kreiger, was burned recently in a fire that destroyed a business block here. The fire happened at a time when the theater was not operating and no films were destroyed.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Takes Local Pictures.

Medford, Ore.—D. L. Sharits, manager of the Star theater, has acquired a moving picture camera and is taking local stuff to show in his house. Pictures of the Medford school children were recently shown at the Star with good success. The negatives have been finished by J. G. Sill, of Portland.

Dr. Clemmer's "Klemerklink"

A New Idea for Children's Shows That Will Probably Attract Some Attention to Clemmer's Spokane Theater.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Dr. H. S. Clemmer is said to have been the third moving picture show exhibitor in America to establish a special weekly program for children and if he had acted upon his first hunch a year before and not waited until his fine new playhouse was completed he would have been the first. A New York and a Louisville moving picture show preceded him. Now there are 150 all over America, 10 in Cleveland alone.

Since June 1, 1915, Dr. Clemmer estimates he has exhibited programs, especially adaptable for child interest, to over 30,000 kiddies. This is an average of nearly 700 for each Saturday morning performance.

"The Klemerklink."

Now he has evolved a new scheme for getting hold of his juvenile friends, and has put out a book called "The Klemerklink."

Dr. Clemmer said, "Every child loves pictures and from our great great grandmothers down we have all loved nursery rhymes. Just as the child will rush for the colored funny section of the Sunday paper, so, I am anticipating, will he beg his mother to take him to the Saturday morning children's hour that he may learn what new adventure has befallen his new friend, the Klemerklink.

"My book and its contents are fully copyrighted and fully patented, and it would not be surprising if it should become known all over the land. I have had inquiries as to the success my house has had in its children's programs from almost every state in the south and from a great many eastern cities. I have had a dozen or more letters from various women's clubs and scores from fellow exhibitors, not only in this immediate territory, but from distant cities, asking about the children's shows.

Good Business, Not Immediate Profit.

"Nearly every exhibitor asks: Does it pay? To all I have written that it does not make any profit, but that it is good business as a method of advertising, and besides, who doesn't want to do something to help the kids?

"Spokane has had considerable publicity on account of this children's hour stunt, the Woman's Home Companion and the Sunset magazines, as well as motion picture magazines, paying some attention to us.

"In the introduction of the Klemerklink I believe I have hit upon a happy advertising idea, but perhaps I've helped bring a little sunshine into the lives of some kids and added a few hundred laughs to the measure of the day's juvenile amusement in Spokane. Give me credit for a little sentiment.

"I have limited my first edition of this booklet to 1,000 copies. I will have 1,000 covers only with 1,000 leaf inserts for each Saturday. Strictly speaking I probably will not refuse a child a cover on any later date than the first Saturday in which the book is to be introduced, but I can only give out 1,000. First come, first served.

"Some have asked where to get the children's films, and how they are made. For the Clemmer theater I have searched the exchanges at San Francisco, Seattle and Los Angeles for split program reels. Some of them have been very expensive. Birds, animals and flowers are always interesting to the youthful mind."

Spokane, Wash.—Secretary of State I. M. Howell called upon the Spokane Chamber of Commerce to make an investigation of everything in the vicinity of Spokane that might appeal to or seem valuable to a moving picture concern or manufacturer.

"It is the intention of this bureau, the publicity division of statistics and immigration, to go after this business and secure as much as possible of it for the State of Washington," said Secretary Howell. "You will undoubtedly agree with me that a share of such business is due this part of the northwest. In the state of California it amounts to something between $7,000,000 and $20,000,000 annually.

"I am desirous of securing all the cooperation possible from the various commercial bodies. It seems to me that there is no better way you could co-operate than by making special investigations of everything in the shape of scenic wonders that might appeal to moving picture concerns."

GETTING BRITISH FILMS.

Short Delay Caused by Embargo—Reels Coming Freely.

By W. M. Gladish, Special Correspondent, 1263 Gerrard St. E., Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—Following the embargo on exportation of moving picture films from the British Isles, a number of Canadian exchanges experienced difficulty in securing regular shipments of news pictures from the Old Country. The Specialty Film Import Company, Limited, distributors of the Pathe and British Gazettes, were unable to secure these weeklies for some time, according to Mr. Travis, manager of the Toronto branch. Arrangements were made by Mr. L. E. Ouimet of Montreal, general manager of the Specialty Film Import Company, with Honorable Rudolphe Lemieux, a member of the Canadian Government, whereby war and other news views would be passed by the Imperial authorities for shipment from England to Canada.

Mr. Phil Kauffman, Toronto manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Limited, reports that his company is now having no difficulty in securing "Topical" reels from across the pond.

Not long ago a ten-reel feature, "Britain Prepared," was brought out to Canada by the Famous Players. Mr. Kauffman now announces that another set of official British war pictures, showing the activities of British troops in France, have been secured and the latest feature will also be shown from coast to coast.

ASSOCIATION ACTIVITIES.

Exhibitors Will Help Veterans Become Skilled Operators.

Toronto, Ontario.—President Baillie of the Moving Picture Protective Association of Ontario has offered, in behalf of the association members, to provide training for returned Canadian soldiers as moving picture machine operators if the city will place a room in the City Hall at the disposal of the association for the purpose. If arrangements are made, the association intends to install practically a miniature theater with projecting machines, operating booth, screen and other features.

The Tax on Patrons.

A committee of the association recently waited upon the provincial treasurer, Hon. T. W. McGarry, for the purpose of securing details of the system to be employed in the collection of war taxes on amusements in Ontario. The opinion is generally expressed that the Government is somewhat in a quandary as to the proper method to use in the taxing of patrons at moving picture shows and other amusement houses. The exhibitors are anxious to know something of the selected system so that they can make arrangements to follow official instructions.

Association Grows.

Since the big moving picture ball in the Toronto Arena, the membership as well as the funds of the Moving Picture Protective Association have increased. A number of out-of-town exhibitors have enlisted with the association and the officers hope to make the organization a real provincial body in fact as well as name. The ball gave the association a good boost.

Pearl White to Make Short Tour.

Toronto, Ontario.—L. E. Ouimet, Montreal, general manager of the Specialty Film Import Company, Pathe renters in Canada, recently spent a day in Toronto on his way to New York to sign up Pearl White for a short tour of leading picture houses in Eastern Canada. He brought tidings of good business elsewhere in the Dominion and he went away satisfied with the state of affairs in Toronto.

Short Picture Programs at Regent.

Toronto, Ontario.—Notice has been received at the Canadian Universal headquarters here that the management of the new Regent theater, Ottawa, had decided to return to short picture programmes instead of following the policy of running features almost exclusively.

Buys Royal Victoria

Dominion Theater Company of Vancouver Secures Control of the Finest Picture Theater in Western Canada—Company Already Owns the Dominion in Vancouver—Triangle Service to the Columbia Theater.

By E. C. Thomas, Special Correspondent, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

VICTORIA, B. C.—Through a deal just consummated by J. R. Muir of Vancouver, the Dominion Theater Company, of which he is managing director, has secured control of the Royal Victoria, the largest house in this city, and one of the finest in western Canada devoted to moving pictures. It was erected two years ago at an approximate cost of $450,000. The new management was dated to take possession on May 1. Clifford Denham, the popular manager of the house, who has held this position since the opening, will continue in charge. Although no definite announcement has been made as to the pictures to be shown here, it is expected that the initial subject under the new lessees will be "The Code of Marcia Gray," with Constance Collier, probably followed by George Beban in Ince's feature, "The Alien," which is controlled in this territory by the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd.

The new acquisition gives the Dominion Theater Company the two largest houses in this city—the Royal Victoria and the Dominion—as well as the Dominion theaters in Vancouver and Nanaimo, and the company also holds the Paramount first run franchise in the three cities mentioned.

W. P. Nichols, general manager of the National Amusement Company, which formerly conducted the Royal Victoria, states that the Triangle releases, scheduled for this house, will be transferred to the Columbia, which will discontinue the present policy of moving pictures and small time vaudeville.

OPPOSITION TO PICTURES ACT.

Liberals Dislike Autocratic Powers Given to Censor—Other Points.

Victoria, B. C.—Opposition to the amendment to the Moving Pictures Act, introduced in the Legislature by Premier W. J. Bowser, has developed in the ranks of the Liberals, and H. C. Brewster, leader of the oposition, recently spoke in the House against the measure, contending that it centralized too much power in the provincial government.

The amendment to Section 5, after stating, as before, that the censor or his assistants "shall have power to permit or absolutely to prohibit the exhibition of all films or slides which it is proposed to exhibit in the Province," provides for the appointment of a board of examiners for operators, and changes paragraph 1 of section 10 as follows, adding also the clause printed in capitals: "Notwithstanding and law to the contrary, no municipality, whether incorporated under the 'Municipal Incorporation Act' or any special act of the Legislature, shall issue a license in respect of any moving picture theater or film exchange unless the applicant for such license shall have first obtained a license therefor under this Act, AND NO SUCH MUNICIPALITY SHALL ISSUE A LICENSE TO ANY OPERATOR OR ANY APPRENTICE OPERATOR."

Section 4 of the amendment states that "this Act shall come into effect on the first day of October, 1916."

During his speech in the House Mr. Brewster took occasion to refer to the autocratic powers of the censor, and protested because there was no power of appeal, no matter how much he might err.

ECONOMICS AND SOLDIERS.

Labor Organizations and Returned Soldiers—a Deep Question.

Winnipeg, Man.—The present situation in Calgary, where striking operators have been replaced by returned soldiers, is causing considerable discussion in union labor circles throughout western Canada. At a recent meeting of the Winnipeg city council, H. Hayes, local representative of the White Rats, stated that a class had been started here by means of public subscriptions, to teach returned soldiers the art of operating, and charged that when these men become competent they will constitute a menace to organizd labor. No action was taken by the council.

Edmonton, Alberta—At the latest meeting of the Edmonton Trades and Labor Council a communication from the central union organization in Calgary, and pointing out the operators' situation there, was discussed. The Calgary union stated that it was understood to be the intention of the Dominion Hospitals Commission to inaugurate vocational schools for the instruction of returned soldiers, and urged that no scheme of vocational training should be established without a full understanding of the economic conditions existing in the various provinces.

The Edmonton organization embodied its idea of the best way to prevent this in the following resolution, which was communicated to the Labor Council in Calgary: "That we notify the Dominion executive of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress as to the actual conditions existing in this strike, and we request that they at once take up with the Dominion Hospitals Commission the necessity of providing against the use of returned soldiers by unscrupulous employers, as strike-breakers."

Globe's Lobby Improved.

Vancouver, B. C.—Manager Creighton of the Globe theater, with the inauguration of the Triangle service at this house, has made a vast improvement in the appearance of the lobby by the elimination of all paper, except a stock Triangle one-sheet, which is encased in a neat brass frame. Photographs of Triangle stars are hung on the walls of the lobby, which extends the full width of the house, while scenes from the plays being shown are arranged artistically in large cardboard mats, decorated and littered for each production by a local card writer, and hung in the center of the lobby in swinging brass frames.

A Woman on Censor Board.

Winnipeg, Man.—At a meeting of the Winnipeg Local Council of Women, held recently, the committee appointed to look into conditions obtaining in moving picture theaters of the city reported that each house had been visited with a view to studying the programme, ventilation and lighting. The committee contended that the appointment of a woman to the censor board would be beneficial, and the local council went on record in favor of the appointment of Mrs. Hugh Patriarche, a local writer.

Saturday Show at the Monarch.

Edmonton, Alberta.—The first children's Saturday morning matinee, held at the Monarch theater recently, was a distinct success, more than 350 children attending the performance; and Manager Allen has received several letters from mothers, commending the show and the idea behind it. One party of forty children was escorted from the Children's Shelter and Day Nursery to the theater by members of the board in charge of the institution.

Tax Corporations of Over $20,000.

Edmonton, Alberta.—Before being prorogued the Alberta Legislature passed a measure which will doubtless affect many companies connected with the film industry. The bill provides that all companies incorporated with a capitalization of more than $20,000 shall pay a provincial tax of 20 cents on each $1,000 capitalization. Companies with a capital less than $20,000 are exempted under the Act.

VITAGRAPH.

JANE'S HUSBAND (May 1).—The cast: Jane (Edith Storey); Ben (Thomas R Mills). Written by Elizabeth R. Carpenter. Produced by Geo. D. Baker.

Poor, lonely Jane is pining her young life away in the fruitless search for a life companion, genius male. She tries her wiles on every man she meets, but to no avail. Fate plays into her hands, however, by sending Ben, a hungry tramp, into her kitchen in search of food. While the poor fellow is contentedly nibbling the proverbial piece of pie, Jane enters and traps him in the closet. She then gives him the choice of marriage or arrest. After a moment of serious thought, he accepts the former sentence in hopes of making a getaway.

After her tireless search, Jane is too happy in her possession to lose him now, so she phones the minister and the marriage is performed in the house. The bridegroom makes the best of matters, helping himself to all the food in sight, and also to a roll of bills he sees laying around. Thinking this a good time to make his exit, he expresses the hope that his wife does not find him out. Jane is horrified by the words. She sees her air castles bursting, and, bitter against the man who is responsible, she drives him out of the house with a broom. Once outside Ben enjoys a hearty laugh, and caresses his newly acquired fortune lovingly. Poor Jane throws herself on the bed and sobs bitterly. It is a safe bet that she will have some wait before she corrals another helpless male.

SOME CHICKEN (May 5).—The cast: The Girl (Mary Anderson); The Boy (Webster Campbell); Her Mother (Anne Schaefer); His Father (Otto Lederer); The Minister (Jack Mower). Authors, William Wolbert and Dave Smith. Director, William Wolbert.

The music of a healthy rooster's early morning crow is not appreciated by those who love their sleep. Mother, awakened from her blissful dreams by the crowing of Caesar, the pet rooster of her neighbor and affianced husband, attempts to squelch the clamor. With womanly accuracy, she hurls a water pitcher at the offender. It alights on the head of her beloved and is smashed to smithereens. Their love dreams are shattered with it.

Mother's daughter and father's son, also in love, are forbidden to see each other. They plan to elope, and their plotting is overheard by their parents, neither knowing that the other had been eavesdropping. Each plans to thwart the other's child. Love is blind; that night, when the young lover calls in his machine, he does not notice that his companion is not his sweetheart, but her mother in disguise.

Likewise, daughter elopes with her beau's father. At the minister's, a general unveiling follows and every one accuses every one else of kidnapping. Father renews his suit to mother and is told to make his choice between herself and Caesar. Sorrowfully he signs the death warrant, and at the first feast of the two newly married couples, Caesar is the guest of honor, and is enjoyed by all—especiallly mother.

THE RESURRECTION OF HOLLIS (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—May 6).—The cast: Jack Hollis (Walter McGrail); Nellie Bland (Belle Bruce); Ned Dunton (Kalman Matus); Jeff Wayne (Arthur Cozine); Mrs. Bland (Mrs. Pillsbury); Mr. Bland (Francis Chapman); Betty (Kate Davenport); Burglar (Frank Mason). Written by George Strayer Maxwell. Produced by Harry Davenport.

The body of a man, charred beyond recognition, is all that the rescue party finds on entering Hollis' room. This corpse is believed to be that of Jack Hollis, and all his friends, particularly Nellie Bland, who was in love with him, mourn his untimely end. Hollis had been in love with Nellie and his love was returned, but he was too bashful to propose to her. In order to aid him in overcoming this bashfulness, Nellie allows him to think that she is encouraging Ned Dunton. Her plan succeeds—too well. Hollis takes her action to heart and continually broods on the matter. Jealous to the point of insanity he calls her up on the telephone. She decides to treat him coldly. Frantic over her actions, Hollis tells her he is about to shoot himself and says good-by. She then hears a shot over the wire and all is still. Jeff, Jack's roommate, also hears the shot, and hurries up to the room. Here he sees Jack lying on the floor with a revolver by his side. He feels his heart, and, thankful that it still beats, rushes out for the doctor.

After Jeff's departure, a burglar enters the room and Hollis, who had been acting, in order to frighten Nellie, stands up to grapple with the intruder, and stuns him. Jack then locks the door and leaves through the window, not noticing that a match which he dropped is igniting the trash basket. In a very short time the bed is in flames, and the clothes of the unconscious burglar, who has fallen on it, catch fire. When the rescue party returns, they find the door locked, and after considerable difficulty succeed in breaking it. Inside, they extinguish the flames and find the charred body with Hollis' watch, which caught on a button of the coat during the struggle.

Hollis decides to hide and get even with Nellie. Ned Dunton calls on Nellie, and after some time gets her consent to his proposal. She delays setting a date for the wedding, for she cannot forget her old love for Hollis. The latter has a vivid dream in which he sees his friend Jeff, accusing Nellie of his murder. This vision fills him with a premonition of evil and, repentant of his cowardly action, he writes to Jeff, telling him the truth. Jeff induces Hollis to return to Nellie, who is overcome with joy at seeing him once more and breaks her engagement to Dunton to be free to marry him.

THE DOUBLE DOUBLE CROSS (May 8).—The cast: Harold Hopeful (William Dangman); Ada Good (Lucille Crane); E. Z. Doe (Winthrop Mendell); Susie Grab (Jessie Miller); "Slip" Card, gambler (William Lyttel, Jr.). Written and produced by Frank Currier.

"You fellows can all go home now. I've got your names, and if we want you we'll send for you." After the disappointed applicants slouch off, Harold has a clear field and lands the job with ease. He had just used a little strategy in getting a position. Seeing that he had too much competition, he made a noise like the boss and told the others to seek elsewhere for employment. Mr. Doe, the dapper chief clerk, gambles away a sum of money which he is unable to repay. Susie, his stenographer and personal friend, agrees to help him out. Their plans are overheard by Harold, who decides to do a little Sherlock Holmes "stuff."

After helping herself to one of the pay envelopes and hiding it where her friend can get it, Susie fakes sickness and is sent home. As they escort her out, Gumshoe Harold grasps the opportunity to replace the envelope with another containing blank paper. Doe uses this to pay his debt, then reports the loss to the boss and tries to cast suspicion on Harold. The latter reveals the plot and returns the salary to his employer. The gambler then enters and registers a full sized kick against the dishonest office assistant for paying his debt with blank paper. This proves Harold's testimony and the clerk is fired. Harold is now chief clerk.

OUT AG'IN, IN AG'IN (May 12).—The cast: Father (John T. Kelly); Mother (Kate Price); Daughter (Jewell Hunt); Tubby (Hughey Mack); Burglar (Donald McBride). Arthur. George McManus. Producer, Lawrence Semon.

Some mix-up! And all because father had to have his daily bracer. When father tries to escape to Dinty's, the corner saloon, mother makes him remove his clothes and go to bed, where she thinks he is safe. Daughter's beau, Tubby, calls and asks her to elope with him. She consents and he goes to get the proverbial ladder. When he returns he sees two windows open and chooses the wrong one. Father is bemoaning the unkind fate which gave him a teetotaler for a wife when opportunity enters in the form of Tubby. A gentle tap on the head finishes the intruder, who is tucked into bed after having his clothes removed.

A burglar enters daughter's room and, thinking it is Tubby, she embraces him. The burglar rushes out of the room and a fight follows which could only be rivalled by the "battles-royal" of other days. Every member of the family is considerably bruised and Tubby gets his share, too. Father, at Dinty's "booze emporium" is finishing the last drink. With an air of resignation he starts for home. In his room he finds the strange form of the burglar in his bed, and jabs him with the business end of a hat pin. The burglar doesn't stop to say good-bye, he just vacates. When mother enters, she finds father, apparently "sawing wood," and all ends happily.

THE ACCUSING VOICE (Broadway Star Feature—Three parts—May 13).—The cast: Hard Luck O'Hagan (Harry T. Morey); Blanche Palmer (Belle Bruce); Edmond Golden (Robert Gaillard); Jack Manning (Thomas R. Mills); City Editor (Harry Davenport); Wilkins, the cashier (Hugh Wynne). Author, Ross D. Whytock. Director, Harry Davenport.

Sent out to get a big story on the suicide of Banker Golden, O'Hagan, a reporter, returns with an excuse after all the other papers have their extras out. He asks the editor to let him follow up the golden case, and is given permission to do so. He enlists the aid of his friend, Blanche, who writes for the same paper. While at the office of the dead banker, O'Hagan had seen a dictaphone record on the machine and had taken it in the hope that it might give some evidence. This record they run on the omce dictaphone and tney hear the voice of the dead banker crying: "You murderer, I've always paid you to keep my secret—mercy—mercy." This proves that Golden had been murdered, and they set out together to find the murderer.

Blanche trails Manning, Golden's nephew. She finds him in a drunken stupor. He gives her important evidence and she decides to follow it up. O'Hagan follows Wilkins, Golden's former cashier, who, after a terrible gruelling, admits having purchased a revolver. He tells how Golden ruined his daughter's life, and of his vow to kill the banker. He had purchased a revolver and was waiting for a chance to do the deed when he found himself robbed of vengeance by another hand. His story seems to clear up the secret which Golden mentioned in his dying words, and O'Hagan determines to find out who else might have known this secret. Blanche consults with him and tells him her suspicions. They arrange a spiritualistic seance at which they have Manning present. They succeed in working Manning up to a high pitch of nervousness, so that when the final shock comes he will be unable to stand it. The spiritualist, really a detective, tells him that a spirit wishes to speak to him. Then the dictaphone record is turned on and he hears the voice of his dead uncle accusing him of his murder. Cringing like a cur before the accusation, Manning breaks down and confesses his guilt.

With an effort O'Hagan rises from his seat, leaves the room and returns to the office, where for the first time in his career he puts over a scoop. He is congratulated by the editor and his associates, and is reinstated to his position. Blanche is promoted to the enviable position of star reporter. She doesn't hold the job long, though, for O'Hagan, on time for a change, claims her for his bride.

THE HARD WAY (Three Parts—May 15).—The cast: Jack Ransom (Jack Pickford); His Father (Harry Lonsdale); His Mother (Lillian Hayward); His Sister (Vivian Reed); Bert Keyes, his pal (Sidney Smith); The Professor (James Bradbury). Written by Russell E. Smith. Directed by T. N. Heffron.

Jack Ransom, high school boy, begins to sow his wild oats, thus causing his parents and his sister much worriment. He becomes intimate with Bert Keyes, who introduces Jack to fairies of the footlights and many and varied games of chance. Jack also looks upon the wine when it is red, and his dad orders Jack to remain home each evening and pursue his leisure time in reading good books. Jack seats himself in a comfortable chair after visiting his father's wine cellarette.

Bert Keyes comes with his automobile, and Jack, despite the pleas of his mother and sister, joins Bert and two girls in a joy ride. They visit a roadhouse; Jack loses his money and, listening to the blandishments of the others, forges his father's name to a check for $100. En route home their automobile turns turtle and the two girls die in a hospital.

Jack awakens in the wine room of a grog-shop. He must have money to make his escape from the hands of the law. He steals home, takes his mother's jewels, and returns to meet Keyes, who pawns them. Keyes returns with the money and refuses to share the same with Jack, who, in a rage, strikes Keyes over the head with a bottle. Jack finds himself imprisoned, charged with homicide and forgery.

Jack is rudely awakened, to find that the terrible experiences he has encountered were but details of a dream. His friend, Bert Keyes, calls for him. He tells the servant that he is no longer home to Bert Keyes. He calls his father, mother and sister, tells them of his dream, and promises hereafter to keep in the straight and narrow path.

A BOARDING HOUSE HAM (May 20).—The cast: Artisto (Sidney Smith); Maybelle (Miss McKeen); Maybelle's mother (Mrs. Prusche); Olga Petrino (Olga Celeste); Horatio Payne (Charles Le Moyne). Produced by Thomas Persons. Written by Wallace C. Clifton.

Maggie De Gray and her daughter, Maybelle, run a theatrical boarding house. Horatio Payne is a star boarder. Olga Petrino, a vaudeville queen, arrives with her pet leopards. Horatio Payne makes eyes at Maybelle and incurs the enmity of Thomas Blake, a property man, who is fair Maybelle's intended. He tells Maybelle and Olga Petrona that Horatio is nothing more or less than a street faker.

Maybelle's mother wishes her to marry Horatio. Olga Petrino comes to the girl's aid and arranges that a monster leopard shall wander at will through the boarding house. The beast, in search of food, visits the strong man, the lightning sketch artist and finally Horatio, who, leaving Mrs. De Gray to face the animal, hurriedly leaves the boarding house and also leaves Thomas Blake unhampered in his courting of Maybelle.

BIOGRAPH.

THE PERFIDY OF MARY (Reissue—May 15).—The cast: Mary (Mae Marsh); Rose (Dorothy Gish); Mary's father (Lionel Barrymore); her sweetheart (Harry Hyde); Rose's sweetheart (Walter Miller); the poet (Henry Walthall).

Rose and Mary were cousins. Rose was a country girl and while she always had all the luxury that a country girl might desire, she had not the sophisticated ideas of life of her city cousin, Mary. Their favorite book contained a poem which pleased their romantic ideas, giving a vivid description of love-land. Mary was possessed of a determined young city youth, whose material wealth evidently did not live up to her father's expectations. Accordingly, Mary was packed off to her country cousin, Rose, where she might forget this interfering young gentleman.

Rose, too, was in the height of a love affair. In contrast to Mary's determined young man, he was a timid gentleman, and when he came to propose to Rose, instead of a direct assertion of love, he asked for a drink of water and when she was gone her new hat, with its wreath of daisies, seemed the most excellent inspiration either to hide his embarrassment or to find his fate, for he tested it with a "she loves me, she loves me not." It was never found out just what the outcome of this test might be, for Rose entered at that moment with the water and found her hat. That was how the timid one, while Rose found solace with a gay young Lothario who had come to visit the village. She was his next fancy and next day a ring was put on her finger.

That was just before Mary's unexpected arrival. Lothario, out for an airing, met her at the station as she was inquiring the way from the timid one, who scarce was able to point in the direction of Rose's house. But the bold Lothario took her handbag and her wraps and gallantly offered to see Mary to her cousin's house. But he took a step too far. No maid wishes to be kissed by a stranger, however gallant he may be, so Mary found the way alone and came in just as her letter was arriving, telling of her intended visit. While Rose told her of her engagement, she told Rose of her cruel father and his determination to keep her separated from her lover. At that point there was a ring at the bell and the maid ushered in the gay Lothario. Mary was introduced, but made no sign that she met him before, while Rose was called out of the room. Then Lothario made her promise to say nothing and she consented.

The next day when he called upon Rose he left them both to read in the garden. Here she was met by by the timid one, who told her his troubles. She agreed to help him. It was evident that Lothario was becoming tired of Rose, for when he left her that day he came upon Mary in the garden and told her that it was she he had been loving all along, and asked her to elope with him. Then Mary saw her way to help the timid one, to make Rose happy and to win her own point in love, so she agreed to elope with him. That afternoon she sent a telegram to her determined young lover in the city whose continued persistence finally won her father to his manly virtues and worth.

Then Mary proceeded to elope. As she came out of her chamber door, she let her valise fall heavily in front of Rose's door. Then she ran quickly downstairs where Lothario was waiting for her. The sound brought Rose out of her chamber and there in the hallway she saw the faithless Lothario departing with the perfidious Mary. As she sat nursing her grief at the foot of the stairs, the timid one came, and won her then and there.

Meanwhile, Lothario and Mary were on the way to the station. Once there the unexpected happened, for Mary's determined young lover stepped forward, seized Mary's suitcase and tipped the gay young Lothario as he would tip a porter. Back Lothario ran to the house, only to find Rose locked in the embrace of the timid one. Thus in the last scene Mary and Rose are seen walking out into loving-land reading their favorite book containing the description of this place where the loves of the centuries met and renewed their eternal vows. This same scene appears at the beginning of the picture, showing the various loves of the centuries, from the primeval man up to Romeo and Juliet. Juliet is seen meeting Romeo in the garden and walking into love-land with him. Here also is Paul and Virginia and Ruth and Boaz.

BEVERLY OF GRAUSTARK (Three Parts—May 17).—The cast: Beverly (Linde Arvidson); her maid (Clara T. Bracey); Prince Dantan (Charles Perley); his sister, Candace (Gertrude Robinson); General Marlanx (Robert Druet); Lieut. Quinnox (Charles H. West).

Beverly Calhoun is invited by Princess Yetive, ruler of Graustark, to pay her a visit. Beverly starts on her journey with gifts bearing Princess Yetive's monogram. Gabriel, pretender to the throne of Dawsbergen, has risen against Prince Dantan (his half-brother), ruler of Dawsbergen, and seized the throne. Prince Dantan, Princess Candace, his sister, and their followers fly to the mountains where Dantan takes the guise of "Baldos," the goat hunter.

Graustark makes a formal demand on Dawsbergen to give up Gabriel and recognize Prince Dantan as their ruler. Gabriel ignores the demand and sends out spies in search of Dantan. The spies overtake the coach in which Beverly is traveling and try to capture her, believing her to be Princess Yetive of Graustark, having discovered Beverly's gifts with the royal monogram.

"Baldos" and his followers rout Gabriel's men and induce Beverly, whom they also mistake for Princess Yetive, to seek safety in their camp. Dantan is smitten with Beverly but keeps up his disguise as the goat hunter. Princess Yetive, worried over the non-arrival of Beverly, sends General Marlanx and Lieutenant Quinnox to search for her. They arrive in time to prevent Beverly being captured by Gabriel's men. In the fight between the bands of Dantan and Gabriel, Dantan is wounded. Beverly tells Marlanx and Quinnox that "Baldos" thinks she is the Princess and that she has promised him protection.

Dantan accompanies Beverly and Princess Yetive's soldiers to Graustark, where he is rewarded with the post of guard. Dantan accepts the position to be near Beverly and plan the capture of Gabriel. General Marlanx, infatuated with Beverly, is jealous of her attentions to "Baldos" and suspects him of being a Dawsbergen spy. Dantan soon finds that Beverly is not the Princess Yetive and enjoys the situation. Dantan's drawings of the Graustark fortress are seized by Marlanx, but when Beverly explains that "Baldos" made the drawings for Graustark's benefit in case of war, Yetive hesitates to order his arrest.

Dantan's plans to capture Gabriel are about consummated when Marlanx persuades the Princess to arrest him. Beverly and Dantan are now deeply in love with each other. Ravonne, Dantan's follower, warns him of his coming arrest. Beverly sees Dantan embrace Candace, not knowing that she is his sister. Beverly, though her heart is breaking over "Baldos'" supposed faithlessness, hides him in her room, which is observed by Marlanx. Dantan is about to escape when Marlanx returns with the guards. After a fierce exchange of sword play, Dantan manages to escape when Beverly shoots Marlanx in the arm. Dantan returns to the mountains and completes his plans.

Candace, disguised as a boy, takes a note to Beverly from Dantan, begging her to believe in him no matter what happens. Beverly is happy when she learns that the woman she saw in "Baldos'" arms is his sister. Candace, leaving the castle, is stopped by Marlanx, who arrests her as a suspicious person. Ravonne, watching for Candace, discovers Gabriel and his guards and aids Dantan and his followers to capture the usurper.

Marlanx informs Princess Yetive that Beverly betrayed her friendship by aiding "Baldos" to escape. Yetive demands an explanation, but Beverly remains silent. Dantan, coming to Graustark to seek his sister, tells Yetive it was a "boy" who helped him escape but refuses to reveal his motive for leaving Graustark. Candace is sent for and when Marlanx insists upon having "him" searched, Dantan tells Candace to give up the note signed "Beverly." Marlanx accuses "Baldos" of having been in Beverly's room, but Beverly's maid tells the Princess she called "Baldos" in to help her close a trunk. Yetive, believing "Baldos" and the "boy" are spies, orders their arrest. Marlanx incites the mob around the castle to demand the execution of "Baldos" as a spy.

Ravonne fights his way to the Princess and informs her that "Baldos" is Prince Dantan of Dawsbergen and the "boy" is Princess Candace. Yetive informs the crowd that "Baldos" is Prince Dantan and that the unpopular Gabriel is his prisoner. Upon this news the crowd cheers. At an elaborate reception to Prince Dantan, Beverly is astonished to recognize her "Baldos" and it is then that Prince Dantan announces Beverly as "the future Princess of Dawsbergen."

LUBIN.

SKIRTS AND CINDERS (May 8).—The cast: John Windom (Davy Don); Mrs. Greene (Florence Williams); Betty Greene (Patsy De Forest); her husband (Francis Joyner); Mr. Greene (George Egan). Written and directed by Edward McKim.

John Windom, a comedian of the Kentucky Bells Company, is stranded. He is up against it, and being desperate he steals a suit case belonging to Betty Greene, while she is talking to her future husband, whom she met at the railroad station and with whom she is eloping.

Windom hurries away with the suit case and opens it, thinking to find something of value. He is disgusted when he finds only a girl's wearing apparel, and is about to leave it when he discovers a note which reads that the young lady is being sent to a girl's seminary.

Windom gets an idea. He secures a wig and dresses up in the girl's clothes and proceeds to the seminary, presents the letter and is admitted. The girls make it lively for him until he is unmasked by the visit of the girl's mother, who denounces him as an impostor. He escapes and goes to a hotel and is assigned the only vacant room. The girl's mother is compelled to remain in town over night and stops at the same hotel. She is assigned to the same room with Windom. When she enters she finds Windom taking life easy, smoking a pipe. He makes his escape through a window. The mother gives chase and enters another room, to find her own husband embracing Windom, who has gone there to escape her. Again he is forced to run from her and enters the room of a bride and groom, no other than the daughter. Windom helps himself to a suit of the bridegroom's and makes his exit, only to be seen by the family later. They have him arrested and sent to jail.

THE WHEAT AND THE CHAFF (Three Parts—May 11).—The cast: Charles Torrance (Cecil Van Auker); Jerry Torrance (Allan Forrest); Mrs. Torrance (Adelaide Bronti); Peggy Woods (Ruth Saville); John Conway (George Routh); Margaret Conway (Evelyn Page); Allan Woods (Walter Spencer). Written by Josephine McLaughlin. Directed by Melvin Mayo.

Charles Torrance and Jerry Torrance are half brothers. Charles, the older, is a prominent lawyer and politician, while Jerry is half stupid and the cause of constant annoyance to his stepmother and brother. Accompanied by his dog, "Rags," Jerry wanders into a reception, almost breaking it up. Mrs Torrance tells the boy that his stupidity will be the ruin of his brother's career. Jerry's one great love is for his brother, and rather than risk ruining his career the boy decides to go away. He writes a note to that effect, and gathering together his "treasures," among which is an old revolver, he takes Rags and leaves home.

On the other side of the city live Peggy Woods, a cabaret dancer, and her brother, Allan. Jerry wanders into the vicinity of their home, where he is teased by a bunch of boys who try to take his dog away. In the scrap Jerry is hurt and Allan, who has come to his rescue, takes him home with him. Charles has met Peggy at the cafe where she dances and is greatly attracted to her. As time goes on, Peggy is deeply in love with him, and he, finding his love for her stronger than anticipated, is going to marry her. Margaret Conway, the only child of the political "Boss" of the State, also loves Charles, and seeing him at lunch one day with Peggy, she confesses her love to her father. Conway resolves to get Torrance for her. He offers him his backing for Governor on condition that he marry his daughter. Charles' love succumbs to his ambition, and his engagament to Margaret Conway is announced.

Peggy is broken-hearted. Charles goes to her house to explain. Unable to calm her he leaves, but reaching the street his conscience prompts him to go back and try to straighten matters out. Peggy, desperate, decides to kill herself. She writes a note to Charles, telling him of her intention, and gets the revolver, which is Jerry's, but her courage fades away. She puts the revolver on the table, from which she accidentally knocks it off to the floor. It explodes, killing her. Charles hears the noise and rushes up to find Peggy dead. Believing her a suicide, the shock affects his heart, and recovering, sees the note on the table. He realizes that the note will ruin his career if found, so he takes it and hurries away. Jerry, coming in with Rags, sees his brother leave. Upon entering the room, he finds Peggy dead. Believing his brother guilty, the boy's one idea of saving him is to hide the revolver. Allan comes in as he is doing so, and as Jerry will make no explanation he accuses him of murder.

The campaign for Governor and the trial for murder run side by side. Love for his idol seals Jerry's lips. Charles is aware of the identity of the boy on trial and knows he holds the evidence to free him. But again his ambition holds him back. The night of the election returns is the night the jury is out on the case of Jerry. Remorse has taken hold of Charles, and still unable to get himself to produce the note, he broods over the possible fate of his brother. The returns show his probable success, but leave him untouched. Sitting by the fire, the fantastic flickerings of the shadows on the screen nearby make a noise, and before Charles tortured mind comes a picture of the execution of Jerry. In horror and remorse he springs to his feet to shut out the vision. The shock is too much for his heart and he falls dead. The following morning newspapers print the news of the sudden death of the newly-elected Governor, and next to it the news of the acquittal of Jerry.

JENKINS' JINX (May 13).—The cast: Jeremiah Jenkins (Francis Joyner); Mrs. Jenkins (June Daye); the cook (Margaret Moore); the elevator boy (John Shermer); Sadie (Adelaide Hayes); Jess Jolly (Kempton Green). Written by Dave Reed. Directed by Clay M. Greene.

Jeremiah Jenkins has been a victim of hard luck and misfortune for eight months. At the opening of the story we find him doing the marketing for the family because the cook has a toothache, and his wife cannot go for the reason that she cannot leave her lap dog. He arrives home with his burden of marketing, only to stumble over it while flirting with a young woman, and reaches his apartment in disgrace.

His friend, Jess Jolly, tells that a jinx and hoodoo must be following him, and this jinx is decided by this superstitious person to be peacock feathers, because even a letter bearing bad news has the device of a peacock on it. Struck by the seeming good sense of his friend, Jenkins decided to rid the house of everything bordering on a peacock feather and crams them into a suit case. This is thrown from a window only to fall on the head of a passing woman, and it cost him $20 to settle the matter. He bribes the elevator boy of his apartment to make away with the suit case, but he is stopped by a policeman, and the case comes back again.

Jenkins takes it to a quarry, and places it on top of a blast. But the case is blown into the air and lands at his feet unharmed. He throws it from a bridge, when it upsets a boat in which are Jess Jolly and his sweetheart, and not knowing that this is the hoodoo suit case, they take it to the Jenkins aparment. Jenkins hurries away with it again and throws it from a ferryboat. A few days later, while at the seaside, Jenkins and his wife are bathing, when the fateful suit case floats in upon them from the sea, and it is burned on a beach fire.

Arriving home, Jenkins finds a bundle dropped by a woman. This contains a large fan of peacock feathers, and he throws it from the window into a back lot. Next day a reward is offered for it by its owner, and Jenkins hurries to the lot to retrieve it. Some boys have found it, and, after a struggle, he recsues it from them, rushes to the lady's house and secures the reward. At the end we find him surrounded by his family purchasing a peacock, for he has decided that peacock feathers instead of being a jinx are an omen of great fortune.

OTTO THE ARTIST (May 15).—The cast: Otto the artist (Davy Don); Count Espagnola (George Egan); Helena Dollarmark (Patsy De Forest); Eben Dollarmark (Bernard Siegel). Adapted and directed by Edwin McKim.

Otto is a struggling artist in love with Helena, daughter of Eben Dollarmark, a wealthy customer. Otto has a rival in love, the bogus Count Espagnola, who is running into debt at the Hotel Royal. Espagnola is looked upon with favor by Dollarmark. Otto is determined to win Helena's heart by winning fame. But no one buys his picture. Rent day arrives and Otto, having no money, is put out.

Though Helena loves Otto, Dollarmark orders him out of the house during a special social evening when all society and Espagnola are there. That very evening the Count needing money to settle his debts at the hotel, cuts a priceless painting from its frame in the Dollarmark Galleries, rolls it up and places it in the tail pocket of his evening dress coat. Otto the artist is suspected. He seeks employment and gets a job as a commercial illustrator. The illustration he is asked to make consists of two perspiring cold bottles of beer on a tray accompanied by a succulent "four story" club sandwish. Otto's model is real and so is his appetite. Otto finishes the beer and sandwich before he finishes the illustration. He is fired.

Again Otto seeks work, but this time he is not so successful. Nothing else at hand he takes a job as house painter during a strike. Dreaming of Helena, Otto sits sadly on a scaffold painting the Hotel Royal in the "neighborhood" of the tenth story. The strikers soon see him from the street, and Otto sees the strikers. Yells of "scab" bring the situation home to him in a moment and he jumps through the window into a corridor. The strikers rush to the various entrances to watch for Otto's exit. Otto rushes down the corridor, trying every door in the hope of finding refuge. Every room is occupied. Otto surprises several guests in various stages of dress and undress. Speeding to the eleventh floor he finds a vacant room, rushes in, locks the door and jumps into bed as the hysterical guests, hotel attaches, strikers and policemen mix it up in the halls. After the confusion subsides Otto slips out of bed, peers out the window and observes the strikers still waiting for him.

Realizing that his only means of escape lies in disguise, he hastily dons a full dress suit that hangs in a closet. He finds a high hat and overcoat to fit him but no shoes. He is compelled to wear his paint stained shoes with his recently borrowed attire. An observant cop, unable to see the connection between Otto's shoes and his clothes, takes him into custody. At the police headquarters he is searched and the stolen painting is revealed in the tail pocket of his borrowed evening dress coat. Otto explains the situation and the police believe him. They telephone Dollarmark that a stolen painting has been recovered; he is asked to identify it. The Count, never suspecting, arrives on the scene. Otto wins the girl, and the Count is arrested.

THE BEGGAR KING (Two parts—May 16).—The cast: Paul Wilson (Robert Gray); Brooks (Jay Morely); City Editor (Louis Fitz Roy); John Haller (M. de la Parelle); Meta (Eleanor Blevins). Written and directed by Captain Wilbert Melville.

John Haller, a banker, is head of the powerful organization of beggars in his city. His daughter, Meta, knows nothing of the double life her father is leading. She is loved by Paul Wilson, a young society man, but will not marry him until he has succeeded in a useful occupation. Paul secures work on the Evening Herald and is told that the position will be a steady one if he can unearth the system back of the begging graft. Paul starts to work and his articles begin to worry Haller and Brooks, the manager of the beggars. One night Paul sees a beggar enter a limousine. He hangs on to the back and is surprised when it drives up to Haller's house. Paul has the city editor of his paper make the announcement that the name of the mysterious beggar king will be revealed in the Sunday edition. This announcement causes alarm to Haller, and joy to Meta.

Haller is visited by an old inventor, who asks him for funds to secure a patent for a typewriting device he has perfected. This device makes it possible for writings on one typewriter to be transmitted automatically to another machine any distance away. Haller has machines installed in his library and the office at beggar headquarters. Paul is forced to report that he has not yet succeeded in finding the beggar king. That night he again keeps watch at beggar headquarters, and sees the limousine waiting. He conceals himself in the car. A few moments later, the beggar enters the machine, and the chauffeur drives on before Paul is discovered. The beggar is removing his make-up, and Paul sees the man is really Meta's father. He jumps out of the moving car, and Haller goes home greatly agitated.

The next morning he determines to save his daughter's disgrace at any cost. He sends Brooks a message to have three gunmen wait in his garden. He writes a note to Paul telling him that he will learn important inforamtion for his article by calling that night.

Night comes. Haller tells Meta he is called away and for her to keep Paul there until he returns. In the garden he gives instructions to shoot Paul if he leaves before eleven o'clock. Paul calls at the house. Meta cajoles him into remaining, thinking that his article has already been turned in. At the newspaper office the editor grows frantic. They try to communicate with Paul by telephone, but Haller has removed the bells. So they send a boy with a message that the forms will be locked in thirty minutes. When Meta learns that Paul has not done his work yet, she tells him to write his article on her father's typewriter, and keeps the messenger waiting. Paul has a struggle between love and duty, and finally writes a note to the editor, resigning his position, as he has not discovered the name of the beggar king. The message is transmitted at beggar headquarters, and Haller sees what a mistake he has made. He rushes out to save Paul. Meta is indignant when she realizes that Paul has failed. She orders him out of the house, saying that she never wishes to see him again. The gunmen are waiting. As Paul leaves the house, they take careful aim. But just as they fire, Haller rushes up shouting a warning to Paul, and he receives the shot. Haller, fatally wounded, confesses to Meta the whole truth. She sees how she has misjudged Paul and he comforts her, telling her that the secret of her father's life will never be known.

JACKSTRAWS (Three Parts—May 18).—The cast: Lilian Harrington (Lucy Payton); Mrs. John Harrington (Adelaide Bronti); Billy Travers (George Routh); Stuart Winthrop (Cecil Van Auker); Donald Kerwin (Alan Forrest); Marjorie Kerwin (Evelyn Page). Written by Josephine McLaughlin. Directed by Melvin Mayo.

Against her aunt's wishes, Lilian Harrington makes a runaway match with Billy Travers. Her aunt disowns her, giving her all her own money, consisting of $2,000. She tells Lilian that Billy is a worthless fortune-hunter and not to return home when he has spent all her money. Billy has taken $2,000 from the company which employed him in order to get Lilian, counting on her money to put it back before he is found out. He is obliged to tell his wife of his shortage, and she gives him all her money to make up his debt. Billy intends to replace it, but gambles it away. He arrives home drunk and demands his wife to give him more money. Lilian refuses to do this and he is sentenced to jail for a year.

Through the efforts of Stuart Winthrop, Assistant District Attorney and the help of her divorce. Lillian's greatest friend, Marjorie Kerwin, has always had her heart set on having Lilian marry her brother, Donald, and when the girl is freed she sets out to bring the two together.

Billy is released from jail and joins a band of counterfeiters whom Winthrop is after. Mrs. Harrington meets with a fatal accident a few weeks later in front of the Sunset Inn. a questionable roadhouse, and is carried inside, telling the frightened Lilian to send for Stuart Winthrop. Billy, arriving at the Inn around midnight, cashes a counterfeit $100 bill and sees Winthrop enter the Inn hurriedly. Billy watches Winthrop go to the room and sees Lilian as the door is opened. Mrs. Harrington dies, making Lilian her heir. Donald Kerwin stops at the Sunset Inn in the morning for gasoline. There to his surpise he sees his friend Stuart Winthrop get in a machine and start off with a girl. Donald and Lillian meet and the inevitable happens, Lilian finally consenting to marry him. Winthrop, conducting Lillian's affairs of business, is thrown more or less into contract with the girl. Donald is jealous.

Billy is caught passing a counterfeit bill and the den is raided. Billy escapes, however, after shooting a detective. After weeks of hiding. Billy reads of the marriage to take place the next day between Donald Kerwin and his former wife, Lilian Harrington. Hatred makes him forget his caution. He goes to the home of Kerwin, determined to tell him of the afair at the Inn as he saw it, and he is seen by a detective who follows him. Donald is at a bachelor farewell supper and there takes more champagne than usual. He returns home to find Billy waiting for him. The detective gets word to Winthrop by the driver of Donald's car that he has Billy.

Billy tells him of what he considers Lilian's "escapade" at the Sunset Inn with Winthrop. Donald knocks him down and is about to beat him up when across his mind flashes the memory of seeing Winthrop leave the Inn with a girl whose face he did not see. Blinded by fumes of wine and with all his jealousy aroused, Donald pulls out a revolver and taking Billy he goes to Lilian's home. Winthrop and detectives follow him, the lawyer coming in at the critical moment of Donald's questioning.

Billy, knowing Donald's condition, counts on his shooting Winthrop in a jealous rage, but though the boy draws the revolver he cannot commit the actual crime. A sudden realization of the wrong he was about to commit sweeps over him as he faces Winthrop. He drops the gun, and Billy, knowing his game is up, makes a last effort to get the attorney himself. He is prevented by detectives watching from outside and is taken away. An understanding is quickly arrived at, and it all ends happily.

THE WINNING NUMBER (May 20).—The cast: Jack Bowen (Francis Joyner); Tom Blair (Walsh Ray); Dick Flint (George R. Raymond); Harry Brown (Eddie Hoffner); Montague Jones (John Shermer); Charley Stone (Kempton Greene); Mrs. Druce (Florence Williams); Hester Chase (June Daye); Mr. Chase (George Clarke); Mrs. Chase (Eleanor Blanchard); Tilly Druce (Adelaide Hayes). Written and directed by Clay M. Greene.

Hester Chase, a young woman, is made sole heiress of her uncle's fortune, on condition that she marries before arriving at the age of twenty-one. This creates consternation in the Chase family, since she has never yet seen the man whom she would care to marry, except the young lawyer Jack Bowen, but he is already engaged to Tilly Druce, a young woman who seems to feel that her engagement to one young man should not interfere with her flirtations with another. Prominent among the others is one, Charley Stone, whose attentions are most persistent.

The announcement in the newspapers of the strange provisions of Uncle Chase's will brings Hester many offers, all of which she turns down, thereby plunging her parents into despair, since her twenty-first birthday is only six weeks distant. One day Hester and Jack Bowen chance to meet at a photograph gallery and they exchange photographs. Tilly becomes jealous at seeing the photograph, for in spite of her flirtation with Charley Stone, she intends to marry Jack on account of his social position. Hester's parents at their wits ends conceive the plan of facing her with her several suitors and compel her to make a choice.

Accordingly her father repairs to his club, where he gathers the suitors and marches them to the Chase home loaded with gifts of flowers. Hester, however, is adamant, and when one of the young men suggests that the suitors shall shake the dice to determine who is to be the successful one, she indignantly dismisses them all. But the gambling suggestion makes an impression upon Hester and at a Bazaar in aid of the White Cross Fund, she agrees to raffle herself among the desirable young patrons, reserving to herself the right to whom she shall sell the $1,000 chances.

During the bazaar Charley Stone induces Tilly to elope with him, she returns Jack's engagement ring, and Jack hurries to the raffle booth only to find that the last chance has been sold. The winning number 2313 is held by Montague Jones, the most undesirable of all of Hester's suitors, and it is agreed that the marriage between them shall be announced on the morrow, in pursuance of the raffle agreement. But hurrying to the club the next day Jack meets Jones, finds him impecunious, offers him $5,000 for his declination to carry out the results of his victory, and soon Hester is in the arms of the one man she has ever met whom she would marry from choice.

THE WATER CURE (May 11)—The cast: Babe Hardy, Billy Ruge, Elsie MacLeod, Florence McLoughlin, Edna Reynolds, Bert Tracy.

As a result of business worries, Plump and Runt determine to take a holiday and get the doctor to prescribe a week at the seashore. Away from their wives, they have a good time with two girls whose beaux have temporarily departed. Their wives follow them and, to escape, they are forced to enter the women's bathhouse, where they put on ladies' bathing suits and caps. After harrowing adventures they are finally run down, and rather than face their outraged partners they swim out to sea, leaving their wives pleading for them to return.

THE PRETENDERS (May 12).—The cast: Bob Burns, Walter Stull, Ethel Burton, Robin Williamson, Helen Gilmore, Frank Hanson, Edna Reynolds.

A foreign count, representing his government, advertises for a new instrument of war. Prof. Mixum has just invented a flying torpedo and determines to win the award. He is robbed of his invention by two crooks, Pokes and Jabbs, who visit the count and try to get the money. But they cannot make the contrivance work. The professor comes on their trail and denounces them. They are chased off and he sets the flying torpedo after them. They climb a telegraph pole to escape, but the torpedo cuts the pole in two and they come down with a bump. Convinced that the torpedo is just what he wants, the count pays the award to the professor.

THIRTY DAYS (May 18).—The cast: Babe Hardy, Billy Ruge. Elsie MacLeod, Florence McLoughlin, Bert Tracy.

Plump and Runt get into a poker game at the club and are arrested. The Judge gives them thirty days. Before going to jail they phone their anxious wives that an important business trip will keep them away from home for a month. In the jail they meet a hobo who attaches himself to them. Released, they find that the knight of the road cannot be shaken off, so they are forced to introduce him to their wives as a friend, a famous detective in disguise. He makes life a burden for them until the wives, taking matters into their own hands, drive off the hobo with carving knives.

A FAIR EXCHANGE (May 19).—The cast: Bob Burns, Walter Stull, Ethel Burton, Frank Hanson, George Marks, Robin Williamson.

Squire Higgs is ordered on a vacation by his doctor. He asks Squire Perkins to substitute for him. Perkins is off on a fishing trip, and Jabbs, the gardener, whom he has left in charge, opens the telegram. Jabbs decides to act and, putting on a suit of the squire's, sets out for the village. On the way he passes a lake and goes in swimming. An escaped convict, named Pokes, steals his clothes and runs away. Jabbs is forced to don the convict's clothes. Pokes discovers the telegram in the squire's clothes and decides to act as substitute squire. A young policeman elopes with a girl and comes to be married. Pokes takes a fancy to the girl and abducts her. Jabbs finds the policeman's spare uniform and puts it on. Marching toward the squire's house he comes on Pokes with the girl, overpowers him and forces him to put on the prison clothes again. Pokes escapes and climbs unobserved into an automobile, which drives in at the prison gates, making him a prisoner once more.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

BROKEN FETTERS (Three Parts—May 12).—The cast: Margaret Landis, Madeline Pardee, Richard Johnson, Charles Dudley, Mollie MacConnell.

John Morrison, golfing on the Fairmount links, drives his ball into the long grass under the wall of the Ursuline convent. Searching for it, he hears some one crying, and climbs up to investigate. Thus he meets Martha Randolph, who is weeping because she must leave the convent where she has been educated.

Martha's mother, a social aspirant, announces her daughter's engagement to Arthur Forrest. Morrison accidentally passes the Randolph home and again meets Martha. Forrest comes upon them and makes a scene, as a result of which Martha, who does not love him, breaks the engagement. Forrest has promised to marry Bella Cabanno, an actress. Resolving to prevent Martha from marrying Morrison, he induces her to call at Bella's apartment, under Morrison's.

Bella represents herself as Mrs. Morrison. As a result of the plot, Martha, deeming Morrison faithless, weds Forrest.

In a short time she is disillusioned. Again, by chance, she meets Morrison as a result of an automobile collision. He takes her to his apartment near by and revives her. She notes the difference in the place and questions him. When she realizes that she has been tricked into marrying Forrest, she resolves to leave him. Forrest finds Bella's attentions undesirable and casts her off. Martha has a scene with her husband and in a moment of anger, to protect herself, stabs at him with a paper knife, inflicting a slight wound. Convinced that she has killed him, she goes to Morrison for help. Bella comes on the scene, and, after a quarrel with Forrest, stabs him with the knife. Martha, returning with Morrison, finds him dead. Morrison calls the police. Bella, stumbling through the grounds with the knife in her hand, falls and is fatally wounded. She is found by two nuns who have come to see Martha, and in an ante-mortem statement clears Martha of Forrest's death. Morrison and Martha are married.

A CHILD OF FORTUNE (Three Parts—May 19).—The cast: Frank Mayo, Lillian West, Jimsy Mayo, Charles Dudley, Henry Stanley, Edward Peters.

Janet Ormsby's automobile scares the horse of Dr. David Carson, a young practitioner. That evening she insists on riding her sweetheart's horse, and is thrown. Carson, returning home, stops the runaway and helps Janet to her feet. For a lark she pretends to be hurt, and he takes her home. Coming to see the patient a few days later, he finds her entertaining friends from the city. She takes him and her sweetheart for an automobile ride to the seashore, and, tossing her ring into the sea, dares them to recover it. The young man plunges in.

Carson turns his back on Janet and walks off, but soon returns on hearing the cries of the boy, who is drowning. He rescues the lad, and resuscitates him. Next day Janet goes to his home to plead with him, but he has gone to the city to take up his work among the poor. Janet, now a woman awakened, determines to profit by his example and takes up charity work in the city. She rescues a girl named Nora from the clutches of a gangster, who later invades the settlement house and forces Nora to go with him. Janet again rescues Nora and tries to make her take hold on life.

Nora pleads that, without money and friends, even Janet could do no better. Janet resolves to demonstrate the contrary, and goes to live with Nora. The girl again backslides and falls into the clutches of the gangster, who forces her to tell him where Janet is. The gangster surprises Janet in her room and attacks her. Nora, escaping from her guard, meets Dr. Carson and tells him her fears. He arrives just in time to save Janet and gives the gangster a battle. He is being forced backward through a window when Nora snatches up a knife and kills the gangster. Fleeing, the girl falls backward down a stairway and is mortally injured. Janet and Carson are married.

EDISON.

THE LITTLEST MAGDALENE (Three parts—May 16).—The cast: Mary O'Ryan, an orphan (Leonie Flugrath); Mother Pierce, a neighbor (Jessie Stevens); Jacob Lake, a rent collector (Fred Jones); Catherine Conrad (Ethel Tully); Boris Enfield (Pat O'Malley); Mrs. Conrad (Leonora von Ottinger); Proctor Smallwood (Bob Walker). Author, Watkins Eppes Wright. Director, Burton George.

Down on the East Side of New York Mary O'Ryan lived in a little room in a big tenement house and supported herself by fabricating artificial flowers that were pretty and charming but that were no more beautiful nor more attractive than Mary O'Ryan herself. A Bible was one of her possessions that she held dear and, surrounded by those who had sinned and suffered and herself the object of temptation, the story she read most frequently was that of Mary Magdalene. Sometimes she would read the story to Mother Pierce, who was her neighbor, and who watched over her. All of the care and the watching of Mother Pierce, however, could not keep Mary from being seen by Jacob Lake, a rent collector and an unscrupulous man, and he became enamored of the girl and resolved to make efforts to add her to the list of victims that the East Side had given him.

While on the East Side Mary O'Ryan was fashioning her flowers, preparations were being made in the home of the Conrads on Riverside Drive for the wedding of Catherine Conrad, the daughter of a wealthy widow, and Boris Enfield, an artist. Enfield thought that he loved Catherine, but the latter did not even pretend that she cared for the artist, and she made it plain that she was marrying him only in deference to her mother's wishes. Just a few weeks before the date set for the marriage of Catherine and Boris, Fate reached down into the East Side and picked up a strand that was the life of Mary O'Ryan. The girl, in search of relief from the monotony of her lonely room, allows the slick Jacob Lake to take her out one evening. They go to a cafe and he drugs her and the next morning she wakes up in a room in a cheap hotel, dazed and deserted. She feels her disgrace so keenly that she leaves her tenement room without telling Mother Pierce where she is going and fortunately finds work in a florist's shop.

One day she has to take some flowers to the studio of Enfield who, in preparation for the painting of a picture that he wishes to make a masterpiece, is searching for a girl who can impersonate Mary Magdalene. In Mary he finds the type for which he has been seeking in vain, and she consents to pose for him. In time he comes to love Mary, despite his engagement to Catherine, and when the latter suddenly marries the man she really loves, Enfield rejoices because he is free to marry his model. Although she covets the happiness that would come to her if she should marry Enfield, she does not believe that such happiness should be the lot of Mary Magdalene and she frankly tells him of her past and of her sin. This confession, however, does not lead the artist to abandon his love for Mary. If it lessens his love at all it is only because a part of it is turned to pity. Then, one day while they are working in the studio, there is a knock on the door.

"I guess it is the rent collector," says Enfield. "He usually comes around about this time."

And it was the rent collector, but not the one who usually came. Enfield did not know him, but Mary did.

And when she saw Lake, the man who had wronged her, she lost control of her emotions so that the truth was brought to Enfield. The latter was about to revenge the sufferings of Mary, when Lake indicated that he wished to be heard.

Enfield let him speak and he told how he had dropped some drug in a glass of soda that Mary was drinking. He then had taken the girl to a hotel room, but when he got her there she was in an unconscious condition. This alarmed Lake and, fearing that he had given Mary an overdose of drug and killed her, he fled as soon as he had placed her in the room.

So Mary, after all, was not a Magdalene, and the happiness that had come to her in the love of Enfield she could accept without remorse.

ROBBING THE FISHES (May 17).—The cast: Bob Burr, the butler (Guido Colucci); Helen Fish (Jean Dumar); Tryit On, the maid (Jessie Stevens); Mrs. Fish (Mabel Dwight); Mr. Fish (Julian Reed); Mrs. Fish-Kake (Lou Corey); Mr. Fish-Kake, her husband (William Fabler); Sherlock Woof (Raymond McKee). Author, Earle Edwards. Director, Will Louis.

The Fishes are not inhabitants of the briny deep, but of a cosy little home in a suburban town. Maybe Pa Fish is somewhat of a shark, but what can you expect when he is taken from a veritable gold Fish by his daughter, who is about to be married, and by his wife, who is arranging the program for the nuptials. So Pa Fish, as well as being snappy and always ready to bite, was wary and suspicious and when he happened to read a newspaper story, telling how a butler robbed a house of a lot of wedding presents, decides to secure a detective to guard the gifts that have arrived for his daughter.

So he goes out and hires the first detective he stumbles over and brings him home and makes him a member of the family. The detective takes a dislike to the butler and evidently suspects the latter of having designs on the wedding presents. On the other hand, the butler despises the detective and considers him as an intruder. From the time that the detective comes into the house until the momentous events that transpire as the result of his presence, the butler and the officer glare at each other like two roosters who are about to enter into mortal combat. At night the Fishes are disturbed by some unpleasant dreams and they all go down stairs only to find the detective on guard and doing his duty.

In the morning when they arise, however, they go downstairs and find that both the detective and butler have gone and that the presents have disappeared with them. While they are making a frantic search of the house they hear a rumble coming from a closet and they open the door and find the butler calmly sleeping on the floor with his arm around a suitcase that contains the missing presents. When he is awakened he explains that he was suspicious of the detective and took this method of safeguarding the gifts. The Fishes are profuse in their thanks and overwhelm the butler with their gratitude, whereupon he retires once more to the closet and drags forth the detective who he had captured and who he had bound securely. This convinces the Fishes that the proper place to hire a detective is not at a detective bureau but at an employment agency.

ESSANAY.

A RETURN TO YOUTH—AND TROUBLE (May 9).—In the "Stories of the Films" department in our last week's issue, where a synopsis of this subject was published, it was mentioned that this picture would be released April 29. This is an error; the release date is May 9.

THE DOUBLE CROSS (Two parts—May 16).—The cast: Molly Burke (Elizabeth Burbridge); Snake Peters (Patrick Calhoun); Sammy Dowd (Thurlow Brewer); Leona Laird (Alice Mac Chesney).

Molly Burke, a big-hearted Irish girl, chose the profession so common to the masculine members of her nationality. She was in the pay of the police department and had engineered many sensational arrests. Strolling in the park, she frequently meets two young lovers and becomes interested in them. About this time the city was being flooded with spurious money and Molly was assigned to locate the counterfeiters. Snake Peters was doing the flooding and he soon enlisted Sammy Dowd, the boy Molly saw in the park. Sammy was out of work and needed the money, even if it was counterfeit. Snake met Leona Laird and tried to take her away from Sammy, telling her the boy was a crook. The girl, troubled, is sought out by Molly. The latter learns of Snake and contrives to meet him. Snake likes her immediately and when she tells him she is a pickpocket he informs her of his counterfeiting plant and asks her to help. Molly consents and, learning the location of the place, has it raided. She is arrested, too, and it is not until the office of the captain of the detectives is reached that Snake learns the girl has outwitted him. Molly saves Sammy, however, and on his promise to never to try again fixes things up for him with Leona.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF SAN FRANCISCO (May 17).—This split-reel release, sharing the thousand feet with western scenic, is among the best work ever accomplished by this sketch artist. Vernon Howe Bailey was the first artist to get newspaper sketches out of San Francisco after the fire and his drawings added considerably to the fame he had won prior to this time. The fire found him in that city, a place he loved to visit, and therefore he gained quite a notorious "scoop" at the time. Since then he has been a frequent visitor and in this set of motion drawings he has pictured the golden city with all the affection he feels for it. His "photographic eye" has caught the architectural beauties and his pen has transferred them to the screen.

A ROSE OF ITALY (Three parts—May 20).—The cast: Lucia Lamberti (Ann Kirk); Luigi Sforza (Edmund F. Cobb); Pietro (Patrick Calhoun); Bolano (Richardson Cotton); Ashton Bright (Hugh Thompson).

Ashton Bright, renowned artist, encounters Lucia Lamberti shortly after she has reached New York from Italy. "What a type," he thinks and approaches her to ask her to pose for him. The girl in the bright colors of her race and carrying her personal belongings, is bewildered. Luigi Sforza, her sweetheart, who had met her, translates that the artist desires her to pose. Soon the picture is complete and Bright holds a reception at which the original of "The Immigrant" and the painting are shown. Bolano, an Italian banker, is delighted with her and arranges for her to get a part in a show. Naturally a dancer, she soon becomes a great favorite in the musical production. She rejects Luigi's proposal of marriage scornfully. The little immigrant has grasped success in the new land even before she had mastered its language. Bolano invites her to dine in his apartment, and, innocently, she accepts. But Pietro has been there before. He is sworn by the Vendetta to kill Bolano. A time bomb is placed in the clock and set for midnight. Hardly an instant before it explodes the girl, finally scenting Bolano's purpose, escapes through a window. Bolano is a victim. With all thoughts of stage success and fame frightened out of her, the immigrant girl flees to the home of her Italian boy lover, now an attorney. "I am here, Luigi. We will be married," she says simply.

NESTOR.

HE'S A DEVIL (May 15).—The cast: The Boy (Eddie Lyons); His Girl (Betty Compson); Her Chum (Ethel Lyons); Eddie's Pal (Lee Moran); "Second Story" Ike (Joe Janecke); Cassady (Ed. Burns). Written and produced by A. E. Christie.

Eddie and his girl have a falling out because the former is late one night for a theater engagement. She severs their friendship. She regrets her hasty action the next day when her chum calls her up and talks about preparations for a big masquerade ball the following night, and asks her if she has selected her costume for the occasion. She tells her chum about sending Eddie away, and that she does not see any chance to go. The chum is going with Eddie's pal ,and tells her to cheer up as she will get Lee to fix it up with Eddie so he will take Betty to the ball.

That night Eddie and Lee attend a little "gentleman's" party, and when the session breaks up in the early hours they are both financially wrecked. They return to the hotel and the clerk tells them they better get some sleep as that night there will be big doings at the masquerade ball. Eddie retires to his room and glances over a copy of the book "Faust," which some one had left there. Just as Lee is retiring he gets a telephone message from his girl reminding him of the ball that night. She also begs him to use his influence with Eddie to get him to make up with Betty. Lee promises to do this, and calls on Eddie with the announcement that he can square things with his girl by taking her to the ball that night. Eddie agrees.

Eddie has a dream, in which the devil confides to him that for a consideration he will be given $25 to spend each day. If he should spend more than this sum the devil threatens to "get" him. Eddie wakes up hearing a noise at the door and opens it. "Second Story" Ike, a notorious crook, is staying in the hotel. He had managed to get away with a sack of money from the clerk of the hotel and, being closely pursued, drops it at Eddie's door and makes his escape. Eddie opens the door, finds the money and begins to think his dream was really true.

That night the girls arrive and Eddie is having a pleasant time on the money furnished by the devil. "Second Story" Ike has disguised himself as the devil. Cassady, the house detective, is searching for the crook, and has also disguised as a devil. When Eddie and his party finish supper the bill amounts to twenty-six dollars, and Eddie is in distress, remembering what the devil had told him if he exceeded twenty-five dollars a day. Eddie returns to his room on an excuse and is intercepted at the door by Cassady, who is disguised as a devil. Eddie thinks the devil has come to demand the penalty and begs for leniency, stating that he has only exceeded his allowance one dollar. Cassady does not get the drift of his remarks and is going to run him in.

Eddie knocks him down and enters the room, to be confronted by another devil, who is "Second Story" Ike in disguise. Ike has returned to get the money he had left and he and Eddie engage in a scrap. Cassady enters and the fight is general. Lee and the girls, hearing the commotion enter the scene and Ike is finally captured. The detective opens the satchel and finds the money and as there is a five hundred dollar reward out for the notorious crook, Cassady presents Eddie with ten dollars advance on the reward, and the party leave to finish their celebration.

THE WOOING OF AUNT JEMIMA (May 19).—The cast: Betty (Betty Compson); Uncle Jasper (Ed. Burns); Neal (Neal Burns); Aunt Jemima (Stella Adams); Captain Obadiah (Harry Rattenberry). Scenario by Al. E. Christie. Produced by Horace Davey.

Aunt Jemima and her nephew, Neal, are in the garden reading when they notice a newspaper article saying that she has inherited a large fortune. Auntie promptly faints and Neal goes into the house for a pitcher of water just as Betty, his sweetheart, calls him on the phone. Neal returns to the garden and revives his aunt.

Uncle Jasper also sees the article and shows it to Betty, who is delighted. Captain Obadiah, an old sea captain, also notes the article and the two men decide to win the hand of the rich aunt. Both buy flowers and meeting on the way, go to her house together. Each is jealous of the other and Aunt Jemima tries to keep peace between them. finally telling them that she is too young to marry. Both men are angry and leave.

Neal meets Uncle Jasper at the gate and tells him of his own engagement to Betty, but the uncle says there will be no wedding for them, as Aunt Jemima will not consent to marry him. Neal starts plotting. Knowing that Uncle Jasper is near sighted, Neal dresses in one of his aunt's dresses and hats and goes into the garden, where he tells Betty of his plans. Uncle Jasper comes in and mistakes Neal for Aunt Jemima and starts making love to her.

Neal pleads with uncle to allow the young folk to marry. Neal sees the captain coming and tries to break away from uncle. He finally succeeds in doing so and later joins Betty at the curb, where a man has left his bicycle. This Neal mounts and rides away after knocking down the captain and other bystanders. About this time Aunt Jemima, who has been shopping, comes on and questions the man who owned the wheel. An officer comes on and arrests Stella. On the way they discover the captain, but he refuses to say a good word for her, and she has to go on with the cop. They finally meet Uncle Jasper, who takes her in his arms and the two officers leave. Meanwhile Neal has returned home, changed his clothes and has hunted up Betty in the garden. They have a hearty laugh over the situation. As they look off they see uncle and auntie in the swing, which breaks. Nothing daunted, the two old folks kiss and embrace.

POWERS.

THEIR SOCIAL SMASH (May 20).—The cast: Father (Dan Russell); Mother (Mrs. Plater); Their Daughter (Marcia Moore); Bobby, her fiance (Bob Vernon); The Maid (Miss Nathen). Written and produced by Harry Wulze.

Ma and Pa live unhappily in a turmoil of domestic trouble, Ma being jealous of the very ground on which Pa treads, Ma objects strenuously to a music teacher's innocent holding of Pa's hands, and the teacher is discharged. Later Pa goes to sprinkle the lawn and is again made to appear a roue by an accident which wets the maid's shoes. The maid follows the music teacher as a result of Ma's jealous wrath and Pa now flares up in righteous indignation. The arrival of young Ray Rox causes the family to assume an attitude of angelic calm, however, as he is the chap they have picked for Marcia's future husband. Marcia has her own ideas of that, however, and after decisively snubbing the young millionaire, she sneaks away to the beach with her sweetheart Bobby. Ray, however, informs Ma that if the engagement is not immediately announced he will have no more to do with them, so Ma gets busy at once.

Pa in the meantime has gone to the beach for a dip in the briny and, coming upon the maid, attempts to square himself in her eyes. He is seen seated beside the maid in his bathing suit by Bobby and Marcia and the young folks take a snapshot of the apparently spooning couple. Bob now realizes he has a weapon of weight and on the night of the engagement announcement the young man sneaks into the home and after quietly showing the photo to Pa, threatens to show it to Ma if his own engagement to Marcia is not immediately announced. Pa at once makes much over Bob, his son-in-law to be, while the two young lovers secretly enjoy the trick they have played, and bring about a happy reconciliation between Ma and Pa.

L-KO.

GABY'S GASOLINE GLIDE (Two Parts—May 17).—The cast: Bill (Bill Armstrong); Phil (Phil Dunham); Gaby (Gertie Selby).

Phil and Bill love Gaby. Phil had the best of the bargain for he was the proud possessor of a real car while Bill only had a two-seated motorcycle. Bill called to take Gaby out and Phil came along and stole the girl away because he had a real car. But cars have their troubles and Phil stalled and Bill took a shot at the tires. He had no trouble in persuading Gaby to steal away with him, but he disregarded all speed laws and raced over the ill kept street and spilled Gaby into an excavation.

Phil saw this and recovered the lost Gaby. Bill was too interested in the scenery to miss her for some time, but when he did he raced back looking for the missing Gaby. Phil had won her heart and hand owing to the fact that he had a real car. This angered Bill and he immediately purchased himself a large touring car and after some difficulty he learned to drive it. When he learned to drive well enough he went on a hunt for Gaby and found her, but, alas! too late, for she was just coming out of the minister's home with her husband.

This was too much for Bill. He immediately grew desperate and wanted to die at once. He invited the newlyweds to take a ride in his new car. Hardly had they got seated before he turned and told them it would be their last day on this earth. It was some wild ride and aroused the whole country. Cops in automobiles, cops on motorcycles and cops afoot were chasing Bill on his wild ride, and perhaps it would have been going yet had not Bill disregarded all auto ethics and headed for the pier and into the briny deep. This was Bill's finish for the car was a land car only and they all went to a watery grave.

JOKER.

A RAFFLE FOR A HUSBAND (May 20).—The cast: Dick Benson (Milburn Moranti); Tillie, the maid (Gale Henry); Bill, the iceman (William Franey); Ethel Manners (Lillian Peacock); Jack (Charles Conklin). Scenario by Gale Henry. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Dick Benson discovers that his finances are at a low ebb. In order to pay his persistent creditors it is necessary for him to raise money quickly. In the midst of his worries Jack, his friend, comes in and learns of his distress. They endeavor to think up some way of raising the money. Tillie is the maid and general pest of the boarding house. She is suffering from a case of love with the iceman, who goes by the name of Bill. Jack tells his friend that there is only one chance to raise the money quickly, and that is to have a raffle, Dick to be the prize. They will have one thousand chances at $25 a chance, and the lucky girl will have Dick for a husband. Dick agrees with this scheme and the two arrange to put it in operation. Jack attends to the business arrangements, has the tickets printed and inserts notices in the papers. It proves an immediate success and all the girls hurry to get their tickets.

Among the inhabitants of the boarding house is Ethel Manners. She is accustomed to take a walk every morning, and one day as she enters the apartment she drops her gloves near the door. Dick discovers the gloves, and, knocking upon the door, meets Ethel. She thanks him for his kindness in finding the gloves, and Dick is much struck with her appearance. He determines to see more of the girl, and as the days pass they become friendly.

The tickets meanwhile are being rapidly sold. In the course of time Dick and the girl come to an understanding. Dick is on the eve of proposing when he suddenly thinks of the impending raffle and abruptly stops his love-making. He tries to tell Ethel of the raffle, but she cannot understand. Finally, when he shows her notice of the raffle she flies into a rage and refuses to have anything further to do with him. He returns home and proceeds to bawl his friend Jack out for suggesting such a crazy scheme. They have hot words, and Jack, believing his friend's mind unbalanced by the trouble, leaves in a peeve and decides to have nothing else to do with the raffle.

Tillie and Bill have progressed in their love affair and are waiting for an opportune moment to get married. Dick sees a bunch of tickets lying on his table, and in a moment of inspiration decides to give them to Ethel, hoping that among them she will get the winning number. Unnoticed by him, one of the tickets drops in his waste basket and it is found later by Tillie when she cleans the room. She does not know what it is, but keeps it.

Ethel thinks it is a good scheme and she and Dick make up. The day of the drawing arrives and there is much excitement as to who will be the winner. Finally an extra edition of the paper announces the drawing completed and states that the winner is No. 417. Ethel runs through her tickets, believing she has the number, but she is disappointed.

Tillie comes to clean up the room and sees the tickets and she realizes they are like the one she found. A bit later she sees the notice, and upon comparing her ticket finds it is the winning number. She slips out of the room and upon meeting Bill is very sad. She tells Bill that she has the winning ticket and will be forced to marry Dick. Bill decides to settle the matter in his own way. Tillie persuades him to let affairs go and he kisses her, believing it is their last farewell.

Dick is reading the paper, hopefully praying that Ethel will be the winner. He is interrupted by the arrival of Tillie, who claims the honor. Dick flies into a rage and poor Tillie flees in fear of her life. Dick hurries to Ethel and pleads with her to save him from an awful fate. The only chance for him will be in elopement, and he begs the girl to elope with him that night. She promises and they arrange to get married that night.

Tillie seeks protection with Bill and pleads with him to "elope" with her, as the guy that she was to marry is crazy. Bill is pleased with the idea and they arrange for their elopement.

Late that night at the apartment house there are two mysterious elopements, Bill has a hard time getting Tillie and her many sacks and bundles down the ladder, and Dick has an equally hard time with Ethel, her trunk, hats and bird cage. Both couples finally safely reach the ground, and, on starting off, they bump into each other. At first Dick and Tillie think that each is pursuing the other, but explanations finally follow and each couple wishes the other a happy honeymoon.

LAEMMLE.

HEARTACHES (Two Parts—May 19).—The cast: Stonewall Jackson Hunt (Emory Johnson); Judge Wm. Randolph (Alfred Allen). Written by Grant Carpenter. Produced by L. B. Carleton.

Stonewall Jackson Hunt, the crack sprinter of Harvard, received a letter from his grandfather, Judge William Randolph of Virginia, telling him that he can send Jack no more money, as the plantation has been mortgaged ever since the war, and only the leniency of the holder, the New York Trust Company, has saved him from utter ruin. On his way to the inter-collegiate games, Jack Hunt sees Virginia Payne and is interested in her.

Virginia is living alone in Cambridge with her aged grandmother, Virginia Warrington Payne. Virginia makes her grandmother comfortable in her wheel chair, gives her an old silk bag that her grandmother always keeps by her, and leaves an old gown of Mrs. Payne's girlhood on a chair where she can see it. Virginia then joins a couple of her chums. At the games Virginia sees Jack with a handicap, defeat Yale men and cheers him wildly.

In the absence of Virginia her grandmother sits dreaming of William Randolph, her old sweetheart. She sees a vision of him as he was when she parted from him in the early 60's; she goes to sleep and never wakes. At exactly the same hour, Judge Randolph, sitting by his fireside, sees a vision of Virginia Warrington, as a girl, standing before him with outstretched hands.

When Virginia Payne returns from the games she finds her grandmother dead, and her hands are grasping a sealed package addressed to her, but not to be opened until the day she is engaged. Also a letter sealed and addressed to Judge Randolph. The letter is mailed and received by the Judge. It tells him that Virginia is alone in the world and asks him for old times' sake to take her and protect her. He immediately wires her to come.

Jack loses all the money he has in a poker game. For two or three days he haunts the home of Virginia, sees crepe on the door, and is relieved to learn that it is not she who is dead. He and Virginia leave on the same day for Virginia, he trying to "beat" his way on the blind baggage. He is thrown off, but Virginia recognizes him and offers to pay his fare. He refuses until he learns that she is going to his grandfather's.

They surprise the Judge, who finds Virginia the counterpart of Virginia Warrington as he remembers her. He discovers that Jack has been gambling and tells him that if he wants to live like a gentleman he will have to work like a nigger. Jack accepts the challenge and goes to work on the plantation. The Judge discovers him making love to Virginia and warns him that there is to be no trifling with her affections.

Jack assures him that he is not trifling with her. The young lovers quarrel over a small matter and when questioned by the Judge as to the cause say it is nothing. The Judge tells Virginia that "nothing is the beginning—nothing is the end—but many heartaches lie between." He then tells her the story of his quarrel with her grandmother, over nothing, and their parting, never to meet again.

The story melts Virginia, and she begs him to speak to Jack. He does so and orders Jack to tell Virginia that he is sorry. Jack has been taught that no gentleman ever lies, and refuses. The Judge then tells him that no gentleman ever lies to a gentleman; but a man who won't lie to a good woman to make her happy is a cur. Jack tells the Judge he is sorry, and the Judge replies: "You're a liar, sir, but you're a gentleman." Jack promises that he will make peace with Virginia. She comes to Jack in the old gown that her grandmother wore the day she quarreled with William Randolph, and Jack takes her in his arms.

Virginia opens the sealed packet that her grandmother left for her and finds that it is the mortgage from William Randolph to the New York Trust Company, but it has been assigned to Virginia Warrington Payne. She realizes that her grandmother has lived for years in comparative poverty in order to save the Judge's home for him. She takes it to the Judge and for an instant as she appears before him in the old-fashioned attire, he thinks it is Virginia Warrington come back to him. Then he realizes the truth—that Virginia Warrington always loved him.

BISON.

HULDA THE SILENT (Two Parts—May 20).—The cast: Hulda Anderson (Lois Wilson); Olaf Erickson (Harry Carter); John Johnson (Bertram Grassby); Thelma Johnson (Maud George); Jackson (Frank Smith). Scenario by F. McGrew Willis. Produced by Otis Turner.

In a seaside Swedish village live Hulda Anderson and her invalid sister. Hulda and Captain Olaf Erickson have been sweethearts for some time. The doctor informs the invalid that there is a chance of her recovery provided they can get a certain costly wine, and Hulda decides to sacrifice even her dearest possessions to secure this for her sister.

Several years before Johnson, one of the townsmen, emigrated to America. Through hard work he has became a successful farmer. He writes back to his home town for farm hands and several men prepared to go, among them being Olaf. He calls on Hulda to bid her good-bye and finds her gathering up her trinkets which she is determined to sacrifice. He is presented with one of them by the girl to remember her by, and he in return presents her with a miniature of his vessel, the "Norseman," which had been lost. Olaf tells the girl that as soon as he has made enough money ahead he will send for her to join him in America.

Johnson has a daughter, Thelma, who is going with a windmill salesman named Jackson. Her father is very much opposed to the association of the two. Jackson has cast a charm over the girl, however, and some time later she steals away from home and the two spend the night in a nearby tavern, unknown to her father. Olaf and his countrymen arrive. In order to break the attachment between the salesman and his daughter, Johnson looks over the men and decides that Olaf would be a good one in whom to interest his daughter. She admires Olaf when he arrives.

Hulda's sister has died, and she has secured work as cook with one of the families in the town. Jackson laughs at Thelma's plea that he marry her and later she writes him a note threatening that should her father find out what is between them that Jackson would likely be killed. He tears up the note, and in turn writes her that she had better marry some of the country boys in order to protect herself.

After months of toil Olaf saves up sufficient money and one night he writes Hulda a letter enclosing the money for her passage to America. Thelma comes in the room and begins to caress Olaf. Knowing the lateness of the hour, he is surprised and tries to avoid her, hiding the letter and money behind him. She virtually throws herself upon him, and unable to resist her near charms, he caresses her in turn. Her father who is returning from the stable opens the door and finds Thelma being apparently embraced by Olaf. He demands an explanation. She in turn whispers to him. Her father tells him that he could kill him for what he has done. Olaf, not really understanding the reference of Thelma's father, still refuses to say a word in explanation. Johnson tells him that he must marry the girl. Thelma has secured the letter and the money and returning to her room, she sends them to Hulda. The wedding day is set for the day upon which Hulda will arrive from Sweden.

Hulda receives the money and sets out for America, expecting to meet and marry Olaf. Olaf, not knowing that Thelma had sent the letter is not expecting her, and accordingly she arrives at the station and finds no one to meet her. The wedding party goes to the church. The station is closed and Hulda, having no place to go, wanders about until she sees the church, and goes inside to rest. Hulda falls asleep and wakens during the wedding ceremony. She sees Olaf and Thelma being married, and when he recognizes her she refuses to pay any attention to him. Thelma is accused by Olaf of having known of Hulda being there and tells him that the only reason she married him was to furnish a name for her child. Olaf then begins to understand the trick that has been played upon him.

Five years pass. Thelma's child is a healthy youngster, and while the parents are visiting a summer resort he is playing outside and is suddenly attacked and bitten by a mad dog. His screams bring Hulda to his rescue. Hulda has taken the job of cook at the hotel and has become known as "Hulda the Silent." She is fixing the fire with a poker and runs to the child's rescue. With the red hot poker she burns the infected wound on the child, and when the mother and father, accompanied by a physician, arrive, the doctor tells them that her prompt action has saved the child's life. Thelma and Olaf recognize Hulda. Olaf starts to thank her, but she abruptly checks him and orders the two from the kitchen.

GOLD SEAL.

DARCY OF THE NORTHWEST MOUNTED (Three Parts—May 16).—The cast: Darcy (Herbert Rawlinson); Annie Paul (Agnes Vernon); John Paul (O. H. Burbridge); Mrs. Paul (Miss Wilmarth); Jacques (Barney Furey); Batienne (Jim Mason). Scenario by Walter Woods. Produced by William Worthington.

John Paul and his daughter, Annie, run a trading post in the Canadian Northwest. Darcy a sergeant of the mounted police, is particularly interested in Annie, and she in him. Annie's mother deserted her and her father when she was a baby, and long was considered dead. It is a staggering surprise to Paul when she suddenly appears and threatens to take her daughter unless Paul can secure sufficient money to gratify her desires. Paul promises to do what he can in the matter and begs her not to see Annie. He promises to bring her what money he can secure that night.

Jacques and Batienne, two cattle rustlers, who pose as trappers, have decided to hold up the messenger for the Indian reservation. Jacques is in love with Annie. Paul tries to borrow money, but fails, so, he seeks out his wife that night and tells her of his failure and begs her to go away. For the sake of her daughter she agrees. The holdup of the messenger proves successful with the exception that the messenger was killed in the struggle. Jacques had stolen Paul's pistol for the raid, and this, together with the fact that Paul was absent from home at the time of the holdup occurred, and because he refused to tell where he was or whom he was with, forces Darcy reluctantly to arrest him.

Jacques, seeing a chance for a double revenge, urges Annie to release her father by taking a short cut with him through the woods, overtaking Darcy and his prisoner. Annie, on the verge of madness at the arrest of her father, agrees. Arming herself with a rifle she rides out with Jacques. She conceals herself beside the road and when her father and Darcy appear, she shoots the latter and then rides away with Jacques. Darcy is only stunned by the bullet and with the aid of Paul quickly picks up the trail of the would-be assassin and follows it.

Jacques preys on Annie's fears by telling her that she is a murderess and must flee the country. He offers to show her the way to the railroad station. Annie's mother, her mind bent on what she has lost and her unhappy condition, loses her way in the woods and stumbles on the back end of Jacques' cabin. Finding the door open, she enters the kitchen. She finds food and drink and soon falls into a drunken sleep.

Sometime later Jacques and Annie enter the front end of the cabin, he telling her it is necessary to rest. Once inside, his intentions toward the girl are made plain. His struggle with her is interrupted by the unknown woman, who dashes from the rear and attacks him. They fight through the door into the kitchen. In the struggle she is killed. Jacques, fearful of the consequence of his crime, bars the door leading to the inner room and leaves Annie a prisoner. He mounts his horse and rides away. Paul and Darcy find her. They also find the body of her mother, unknown to her. Darcy and Paul and his daughter go back to their home and take up the trail to find Jacques. Jacques is on the point of collapse when apprehended by Darcy. He is eager to confess and exonerate Paul of all blame in the holdup. Darcy takes Jacques back and secures Batienne. Darcy and Annie at last find themselves free to marry.

REX.

A WIFE AT BAY (Two Parts—May 18).—The cast: Frank Lane (Ben Wilson); Helen Lane, his wife (Dorothy Phillips); James Griswold (Charles Ogle); William Chantley (William Welsh); Mrs. Delaney (Lenore Van Ottinger); "Red" Connely (Fred Herzog). Written by J. Grubb Alexander. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Frank Lane, a retired lawyer, is entrusted with documents of great importance by Mortimer Devereau, a wealthy financier and Lane's client. James Griswold, the head of the opposition to Devereau and a powerful and unscrupulous figure in "the street," hears of the existence of the documents by listening to a crossed-wire telephone connection. The knowledge of their contents will assure him of victory in his fight. So he plans to secure possession of them, knowing full well that Lane is above bribery.

Helen Lane, the wife of Attorney Lane, is associating with a fast set, and, by too frequent visits to a fashionable gambling resort, she becomes deeply indebted to William Chantley, the proprietor, who desires to get her in his power. Meanwhile, she fears to tell her husband of the promissory notes she has given to Chantley. Pursuant to his plans, Griswold sends "Red" Connoly, one of his henchmen, to secure the documents in Lane's possession. Connoly fails to find them in Lane's office or in his apartment, although he searches both places thoroughly, and, incidentally binds and drugs the butler in Lane's apartment.

Upon Lane's arrival at home, he discharges the butler, thinking that he has been drinking. Griswold is exceedingly angry at Connoly's failure to obtain the documents, when he happens to see an advertisement for a butler at the Lane residence. Thereupon he fixes up the requisite references and sends Connoly to secure the position. Later, Chantley calls on Helen Lane and demands payment of the promissory notes. She is terror-stricken and Chantley takes advantage of this by making love to her and suggesting that there might be a way open to her by which payment would not be required. She orders him from the apartment.

Chantley leaves her in a great rage, telling her he will return in short order for the $5,000 due him and that he will expect payment thereof unless she changes her mind, and looks upon him with favor. Otherwise, he will have his revenge by telling her husband. Connoly, who, in the meantime, has been installed as butler, overhears the conversation. Chantley returns to his gambling house and telephones the result of his interview with Helen to Griswold. Griswold puts five $1,000 bills in an envelope and calls on Mrs. Lane, telling her that she can make her husband rich if she can persuade him to give up certain papers he has in his possession. Griswold gives her the sealed envelope containing the money and leaves.

Helen opens the envelope and five $1,000 bills fall on the table. Bearing in mind the threat Chantley has made to tell her husband about her gambling debt, she takes the money and goes out to redeem the promissory note. On her return home, she goes to the library where Lane is looking over the very documents that Griswold desires to obtain. He is very indignant when she makes a request that he allow her to send these documents to Griswold. Helen then breaks down and tells him the whole story of Chantley's threat and of Griswold's subsequent offer.

Thereupon Lane telephones to the police station for a plain clothes man and also asks the sergeant at the desk to send a squad of police to raid Chantley's gambling house. Connoly overhears the telephone message and tries to make his escape, but is nabbed in time by the plain clothes man who has arrived meanwhile. Presently Griswold is announced. The plain clothes man takes Connoly in his charge and compels him to remain in hiding with him behind a curtain. Griswold is greatly surprised to encounter Lane instead of his wife.

Lane further astonishes him by telling him that he knows all about his offer and, pretending to comply with it, says that his wife's honor is worth $100,000 and that the amount must be paid in cash to him personally. Griswold starts to write out the check in exchange for the documents when Lane signals the plain clothes man and has him arrested. Subsequently there is a scene in which the police make a raid on Chantley's gambling house and after that we see Lane and his wife at their home fully reconciled, Helen having decided in future to forego the excitement of gambling and also to relinquish the society of her fast companions.

RED FEATHER.

A YOUTH OF FORTUNE (Five Parts—May 15).—The cast: Cormack O'Donovan (Harry Carter); J. B. O'Donovan (J. Hope); Gwendolyn O'Donovan (Maude George); Willie (Carter De Haven); Mary (Flora Parker); Detective (H. Holland); Detective (B. Grassby); Peters (Harry Depp); Gardener (Hart Hoxie). Scenario by Ford Beebe. Produced by Otis Turner.

Willie O'Donovan, grandson of Cormack O'Donovan, a retired millionaire contractor, is regarded by his parents as more of a nuisance than an asset. Mr. O'Donovan, Willie's father, is actively engaged in business, while his wife is an enthusiastic aspirant for social recognition. The grandfather, coming to the O'Donovans' home for dinner, enters to find that he has interrupted a domestic row. The grandfather, disliking to have Willie brought up in such an atmosphere, persuades the parents to let him send the boy away to a boarding school. Willie arrives on the school grounds and is made miserable by Peters, one of the other boys. Peters is in love with Mary, a pretty country girl.

Willie receives word from Baden Baden, where grandfather had gone for his health, announcing his death. The will he has left with his valet bequeaths his entire fortune to Willie, but naming the person with whom he is living on his eighteenth birthday as the custodian of the fortune until Willie has reached his majority. Willie's parents are overjoyed when they hear of the news. O'Donovan has been losing money rapidly in his business and finds Willie's fortune a necessity. Since the grandfather's departure for Europe they have entered suit for divorce which complicates matters. Each of them decides to beat the other to the possession of the boy before he reaches his eighteenth year. Each of them writes to him to come to them. Willie refuses to have anything to do with them, so each hires a detective to get him.

Clews, the father's detective, captures him, but Willie succeeds in giving the detective the impression that he is not Willie. That night Clews breaks into the dormitory, and, following directions given him by Willie, gets another boy whom he takes back to the city to the waiting father. Willie's father is enraged at the detective's mistake and orders him back to get the boy. Returning to the school grounds he and Ketchum, the rival detectives, are pitted against each other. But Willie is too clever for them, and evades the detectives each time they plan to get him.

School ends and Willie goes to live at Mary's home in the country. But the villains still pursue him. While he and Mary are fishing, Clews manages to capture him and take him back to his waiting auto. Ketchum, however, in the meantime, has learned that Clews is ahead of him. He hurries to the village constable and enlists his aid, insisting that a kidnapping is about to be pulled off. And so, when Clews arrives at the machine he is met by the posse and is arrested. In the confusion, however, Ketchum gets Willie on board a train and starts with him for New York. Ten miles out of town Willie escapes. En route, he runs into a gang of hoboes who take his money and clothes. Willie is then forced to hide his nakedness in a sack.

O'Donovan gets Clews out of jail and they start for town when they see Willie returning in his sack. They give chase, but Willie beats them to the gardener's cottage, where he gets a suit of clothes and starts for the church where he is to meet Mary. They trail him there and capture him again. Willie, who is wearing the gardener's clothes, begs for permission to return to Mary's for his own clothes. They hurry there and are met at the house by Mrs. O'Donovan, Ketchum, Mary and her mother.

When Mary's mother refuses to let either party take the boy without a warrant, they rush off to get said warrants from the town justice of the peace. While they are gone Willie escapes through the window and they return to find him gone. The next day Willie is eighteen, and since he is living with neither of them, the money is to go to charity. They go to the attorney's office to hear the settlement of the will. One minute before the appointed hour, in walks Mary and demands the money. The parents are indignant until she informs them that Willie is living with her. Mother is about to faint when in walks Willie and announces that they are married and on their way to Europe on a honeymoon. The parents make up and decide to forget the divorce.

THE DUMB GIRL OF PORTICI (7 Parts—April).—Cast: Fenella (Anna Pavlowa); Masaniello (Rupert Julian); Duke d'Arcos (Wadsworth Harris); Alphonso (Douglas Gerrard); Conde (John Holt); Isabella (Miss Betty Schade); Elvira (Miss Edna Maison); Perrone (Hart Hoxie); Pietro (William Wolbert); Rilla (Miss Laura Oakley); Father Francisco (N. de Brouillet). Scenario and screen adaptation by Lois Weber. Directed by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley.

In the beginning of the Seventeenth Century, the Spanish Viceroys who had been sent to rule Italy, grew rich from the heavy taxes imposed on the poverty-stricken people. From the Kingdom of Naples alone, Spain extorted an annual revenue of fifteen millions of dollars. A tax was placed on fish, flour, poultry, wine, milk, cheese and salt, making bare existence a bitter problem. Fenella, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," as history describes her, was an unusually romantic character at this period. That she came of an unusual family is proven by the fact that her brother and guardian, Masaniello, although, only a poor fisherman, was able to sway the people that he reigned as king while the revolution was at its height.

Unlike their neighbors, are the widow Rilla and her worthless brother, Pietro, who is in love with Fenella. A new tax is levied on fruit by the Duke d'Arcos, Viceroy of Naples. The people become embittered by this added burden and Masaniello is appealed to for advice. With the help of his friend, Don Francesco, he gives the people wise counsel. Conde, the Duke's younger son, reports their attitude, but the Duke laughs at Conde's fears. The elder brother, Alphonso, realizes the seriousness of the situation. Disguising as fishermen, he and Conde go to the Market Place to investigate.

Here Alphonso first meets Fenella. The dumb girl, needing flour and not possessing sufficient money to pay for it and also meet the heavy flour tax, smuggles a bag of meal into the city by hiding it under her shawl. At the gate, a hole is accidently torn in the bag. From this escapes a tiny stream of meal unnoticed by Fenella. The tax collector discovers the little trail of flour and soon the dumb girl is under arrest, threatened with fine or imprisonment.

Masaniello and Pietro hurry to her assistance, but they have no money with which to pay the fine. Alphonso has watched the arrest of the girl and pays the fine, still keeping his disguise. Masaniello informs Alphonso that, if Fenella had been imprisoned, the government would have paid dearly. Alphonso cannot understand and Masaniello calls his people about him. Eagerly they proclaim him their leader and Masaniello then explains to the young stranger the unjustness of the Viceroy's laws and taxes.

Fascinated by Fenella, Alphonso becomes a frequent visitor to the fishing village, neglecting Lady Elvira, his betrothed wife. Alphonso returns to the city, leaving the dumb girl weeping silently. Later, when Masaniello finds her clinging desperately to Alphonso's scarf the story is plain to him.

Alphonso has been missed from the palace and Conde sets out in search of him. Having heard of the youth's infatuation for Fenella, the courtier goes at once to Masaniello's hut, where he learns what has happened. Knowing that Masaniello is leader of the people, Conde reports the affair to the duke, prophesying an uprising. The duke laughs at his fears, but is curious to see the girl who has turned his son's head. With Conde's help, the duke plans a trap for Fenella and she is thrown into prison. The Viceroy visits her there. When the dumb girl does not speak in answer to his questions, he thinks it is stubborness and has her flogged.

Masaniello finds his sister has gone and sacrifices everything in his search of her. When he gets behind in the rent, collectors take his furniture as payment. Rilla, the widowed sister of Pietro, in trying to stop them, is arrested and taken to jail. The shock kills Rilla's aged mother and Pietro makes a solemn vow to avenge her death.

In spite of this oppression, the people assume a happier mood on the day of the wedding of Lady Elvira and Alphonso and throng into the Market Square in gala attire. Even the guards of the prison celebrate the wedding, enabling Fenella to make her escape. Returning home, Fenella meets the wedding party returning from the church and appeals to Lady Elvira for protection. Lady Elvira, seeing Alphonso's scarf in possession of the fishergirl, questions her and learns the truth. She orders that Fenella be conducted safely home, but Perrone, captain of the guard, intercepts and has the girl taken back to prison.

The Viceroy foolishly celebrates the day by increasing the already onerous tax. The added tax is all the people need to incite them to madness. The duke, hearing of the disturbance, sends his soldiers led by Alphonso and Conde to quell the uprising and a fight ensues. The robbers, murderers and the scum of the city leave their hiding place to join the rioters. The first step toward freedom is the blowing up of the Custom House. Then the prison doors are opened and the prisoners, including Rilla and Fenella, are released. The mob, having burned everything in its path, march to the Viceroy's Palace. Fenella, discovering their intention, reaches there in advance and warns Alphonso. The duke takes advantage of her presence and showing her from the balcony of the palace, threatens her life if Masaniello does not quell the disturbance. Massaniello is forced to choose between his sister and the people and chooses the people, demanding their rights. When the mob breaks into the palace, Masaniello rescues Fenella and takes her home.

The people proclaim Masaniello their leader and the dictator of all public affairs. Pietro plots with a bandit to get Masaniello out of the way. They give him a slow poison and as the drug gradually takes effect in his system Masaniello is more and more influenced by Pietro and gradually loses all control over the people. Under these conditions, it is a simple matter for a small party of the Duke's forces, under the leadership of Alphonso and Conde, to gather quietly in the secret passage-ways. At a given signal they attack the rioters, driving the wine-mad mob from the palace.

Under the shock of the unexpected and disastrous attack, Masaniello regains his sanity. Recognizing in Alphonso his sister's betrayer, Masaniello makes a wild lunge at him, but Fenella has been watching them and it is into her heart that the blade plunges. Wild with grief her brother kills himself. And the broken-hearted Alphonso can only gather into his arms the dying body of the Dumb Girl of Portici.

DETECKTERS (May 15).—The cast: Oscar (Claude Cooper); Conrad (Frank E. McNish); Adelina (Gladys Leslie).

Oscar and Conrad were willing to stay in business. The only reason that they retired was that a husky sheriff appeared at their office, threw them out in the street, simply because the courts decided that they had gone into bankruptcy.

The star of the Frivolity theater, adorable Adelina, billed as "The Queen of Mirth and Melody," disappeared, and a reward was offered for her return. Oscar and Conrad did not know that the whole thing was a plan of the press agent, and they went earnestly to work to find Adelina. According to the description, when last seen she wore a large black hat and striped silk stockings, and the two ex-business men hunted all over the town for a girl with striped silk stockings. They found several, but got into more or less trouble while doing so. Then they saw a pair of striped silk stockings sticking out of a snowdrift, and rescued them, believing again it was Adelina. Much to their grief, it was simply another part of the ad, where a note explained that "these limbs do not belong to adorable Adelina of the Frivolity theater, but cheer up, you may yet find her."

Finally Conrad was smuggled into the theater in a trunk, which was placed in Adelina's dressing room. He expected to be able to discover something there, but owing to the fact that he carried an aggressive watch, he got into fresh difficulties. Adelina came into the dressing room, saw the strang new trunk, heard the ticking. imagined it was a bomb, yelled for assistance, and one of the stagehands threw the trunk out into the street. Adelina preceded, being in haste to get away from the infernal machine. She was promptly nabbed by Oscar and forced to admit her identity. Then the two men demanded the reward for discovering adorable Adelina, and the press agent gladly paid it. It was two tickets for the evening performance, and Oscar and Conrad were thoroughly convinced that they had wasted their time, and would have to give up the detective business for something else.

STEVEN'S SWEET SISTERS (May 20).—The cast: Steven (Jay C. Yorks); Spinster (Frances Keyes); Steven's Sisters, (Doris Grey, Gladys Leslie and Isolde Illian).

relative had died, leaving $100,000 under most peculiar conditions. If Stephen was married, he got all the money, otherwise it was to be divided among those of his three sisters who wedded before he did. Stephen realized that if the girls knew what was going on, they would hasten their marriages, and do him out of his estate. So by a trick he lured them into a room upstairs, after carefully placing bars on the window, and locked them in, telling them he was going to get married, and after that he would let them out. Stephen had never been a ladies' man, and there was no particular girl in sight, but he was willing to take almost any kind of a chance for $100,000. He called on several damsels failed to meet several, and finally in despair, picked up a maiden lady of uncertain years, and led her off to the marriage license bureau.

In the meantime the girls communicated to one of their suitors, who happened to be passing the house. He told another, who was the marriage license clerk, and the latter put an obstacle in the brother's path by giving him a revolver license instead of a matrimonial permit. Then the three suitors routed out the Justice of the Peace, and rushed around to the house to get married. They couldn't get inside to set the girls free, but they put a ladder up to the window, signed the marriage licenses, which the clerical suitor thoughtfully brought along, and were wedded—bridegrooms outside and brides in the house.

In the meantime the brother had been hustling about, and unable to get a license in his home town, decided to cross the border to the next state. This probability had been foreseen, for another one of the suitors owned the only garage in town, and he instructed his man in charge to supply an auto if requested, but to keep the brother and his intended bride moving around in a circle, and make it impossible for them to be weeded anywhere. This was done, and when brother finally reached his own home, after a circular trip of the neighborhood, he was in time to receive three stalwart brothers-in-law. He saw he had been outwitted, and his anger turned to the woman he expected to marry. She could see no reason why the wedding should not be performed just the same, but he did. He helped her back into the auto and told the chauffeur to move on.

THANHOUSER.

THE ANSWER (Two Parts—May 16).—The cast: Wealthy Lawyer (Daniel Leighton); His Sister (Carey Hastings); Her Son (George Marlo); Fake Medium (Robert Whittier); His Twin Daughters (Marion and Madeline Fairbanks).

When the village lawyer saw his heart's desire become the wife of another and later learned that she had laid down her problem after a few years of wedded life, he moved upon his way, lonely, remembering and resigned. He never married, but he loved his sister's son, and in the youth he saw himself reliving.

For a hobby, the lawyer studied spiritualism, and, though often imposed upon, he nevertheless felt in his loyal heart that some day, by some means, he would be compensated for his loss and his years of waiting, by a message.

His compensation came. At a seance the lawyer beheld a little girl medium who was so like the woman of his only love that he was startled. Events threw the child into his care—but only to die, it seemed, for the little girl was too frail to stand the rigors of her former life and she nearly succumbed. The doctor said his little patient must be roused from the lethargy that possessed her or she would pass away.

Already the lawyer and his sister loved the waif, but love alone cannot halt the fleeting spirit, and they watched the child sink more and more deeply into the coma that usually ends in the Great Merciful Arms.

Then to the sister came the thought of her brother's faith in the spirit world "Pray," she said, "pray to the spirit of the woman you loved to come and help her daughter!" "Rather" answered he, "pray to the Divine Spirit to aid one of His children!" They prayed. Their answer came—for as they prayed the sick child's twin was strangely led to her sister, and with loving arms dragged her back from the Threshold.

In the happy relief that followed, the lawyer and his sister turned to each other and gently smiled—for not alone had the anxious little sister found her twin—she had found also the beginning of that sweet interest which youth begets in youth; and to the girl some day may come the youth with also a prayer on his lips, pleading also for his answer.

THE JUNGLE OUTCASTS (Two parts—May 13).—The cast: John Wright (William Clifford); Margaret Wright (Margaret Gibson); Louise Wright (Louise Minugh); Waji (Samuel Bigelow).

John Wright, a wealthy Cape Town merchant, has purchased a large sea-going gasoline yacht and has made preparations for an extensive cruise with his family, which consists of his wife, Margaret, and their young daughter, Louise. Cruising along the coast, the supply pipe from the gasoline tanks to the motors springs a leak, an accident which is discovered only when live coals ignite the inflammable fluid. The entire vessel is soon ablaze and the panic-stricken crew appropriate the boats, gaining possession of them after they have killed the captain and disabled the owner.

John manages to get a hatch overboard upon which he intrusts his wife and child, while he manages to get away from the burning vessel upon a light spar. He reaches the frail hatch upon which his family cling, only to find that it will not sustain his added weight. He tries to keep near his loved ones, but wind and tide intervene and the castaways drift apart as night comes on. Morning dawns and the frenzied man searches the sea for sight of his dear ones, only to see the smoke of an approaching steamer on the horizon. He is rescued and the captain institutes a search for the missing wife and daughter, but to no avail.

The occupants of the little raft, unconscious from exposure and exhaustion, are cast upon the coast of South Africa. Here they are found by a semi-civilized tribe of blacks and taken to their village in the interior. The tribe look upon Margaret as an omen of good fortune sent them by their gods and treat her with deference and consideration until an unfortunate incident occurs. Waji, a venerable member of the tribe, is stricken with an unknown illness, and in accordance with a tribal law, he is driven away from the village. The unfortunate old black has been very kind to Margaret and little Louise. The mother intervenes in his behalf and puts her arms about the fellow to protect him from further abuse.

This act is considered by the tribe to mark Margaret as a victim of the same illness, but to their superstitious minds, they cannot offend the gods by driving her out, so they desert the village in a body. Waji's illness is but slight and he soon recovers, and the three outcasts of the jungle live alone in the deserted village. One night, in a somnambulistic state, Margaret calls to her husband to come to her. Through the long months Wright has been haunted with the feeling that his wife and child still live. He hears the cry from the soul of Margaret and next day starts an expedition to search for her.

While the tribe occupied the village it was protected from the lions which infested the surrounding forests by the hunters of the tribe, but since the village has been deserted, the wild beasts have become bolder and old Waji is fearful of the safety of his charges. He finally determines to solicit the tribe to return now that he is well, and sets off on his mission, cautioning Margaret to exercise great care. John and his expedition land upon the coast near where the wreck had occurred, rightly reasoning that had his loved ones been cast up on the shore they might have been succored by the natives. After many false clues they come upon a member of the tribe who rescued Margaret and who identifies the castaways from a photo shown him. The party hastens to the new village where Waji has arrived to make his plea.

Meanwhile Margaret has spent a night of terror, for lions were hovering near her bamboo hut. When morning came the lions grew bolder and more determined. Margaret, with little Louise clasped in her arms, expecting every moment to be her last, hears the sound of firing and the rush of many feet, and then she knows Waji has managed to bring help. When they bring her forth and she sees her beloved, she thinks it but the dream of death, and when she is taken into his arms and feels the pressure of his trembling embrace, she realizes that little Louise and her mother are no longer Jungle Outcasts.

MUTUAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE (American—Episode No. 3—May 22).—When Cleo Burke discovers her father is murdered she gives a scream which is heard by Gerald Morton, who happens to be passing the house. He rushes in and lifts the unconscious Cleo onto a couch. He leans for an instant over Burke's body. The papers on the inventor's desk have been mussed up, indicating that someone had tried to find the secret of the submarine. The books, which Dr. Burke had told Cleo "are worth a fortune," are undisturbed. Morton hurries for a doctor as Hope and Barnacle appear. While Hope is trying to comfort Cleo, Barnacle investigates and finds in one hand of the dead man a button tightly clutched. He sees that a button is missing off the lieutenant's coat. His friendship prompts him to pocket the button.

When Morton returns with the doctor he says he can easily trace the murderer, as there is a button clutched in the dead man's hand. Consternation reigns when an examination fails to disclose the button. Morton is unable to explain and he looks suspiciously at both Hook and Hope. Naturally Hope must withhold the first payment on the invention which he was authorized to make for the government and Cleo, apprised of the fact, learns she is about penniless.

She recalls that the doctor often told her certain books in the library contained a fortune, so she determines to sell them. The books are sent to an auctioner in a nearby city. But just as they are sold Cleo learns from a note left in the old family Bible that the books contain the secret of the submarine. The foreign spies also learn this, and all make haste to recover the books. Cleo, Hope and Hook start for the auction house but miss the train. They determine to make the race in an auto, for the spies have already got a start of them. Spring freshets have carried out a bridge. Hope, driving the car down a long grade at a high speed, faces death if he stops the car and faces death if he doesn't.

His only alternative is to leap the broken bridge by trusting to more speed and this he gives the auto. It is a terrible moment for the trio, but the leap is negotiated and they land safely on the other side. The foreign spies arrive at the auction house ahead of Hope and Cleo. The auctioneer refuses to surrender the original list of purchasers, but permits copies to be made. Satsuma, knowing Hope and Cleo are en route, sets fire to the auction house. Cleo and Hope drive up to find the building in flames.

VOGUE.

GERMATIC LOVE (May 9).—The cast: Leary (Arthur Tavares); Weary (Henry Kernan); chums (Madge Kirby and Alice Neice). Directed by Rube Miller. Scenario by Thomas Delmar.

Two old professors, experimenting to find a pill that, when taken, will make any one of the opposite sex fall in love with one who has taken the pill, one day find the right mixtures. Not caring to take any of the pills themselves, they force a couple of tramps who have wandered in the laboratory in search of a meal to take them. Then they are turned loose.

The laboratory happens to be at a girls' college, so the tramps are hardly out of the laboratory before the mixture proves that it is a success. Not only the college girls fall in love with them, but the principal of the school and the cook, who had a short time previous to this refused to give them anything to eat and who threw them out of the kitchen. The story winds up by the principal and the cook chasing the tramps into the laboratory, and one of the tramps knocking over a bottle of explosives and blowing up the place.

A MIXUP AT RUDOLPH'S (May 14).—The cast: Rudolph, the tailor (Jack Gaines); the husband (Arthur Moon); the wife (Rena Rogers); the tailor's helper (Paddy McQuire). Directed by Jack Dillon. Scenario by R. A. Dillon.

Moon, a lazy business man. His wife sends the maid to call him and she enters the room just as the wind, blowing in the bedroom windows, blows the covers from the bed, exposing him in his underwear. The wife, hearing the maid's startled scream, enters the room, and swears the husband had an ulterior motive in appearing before the maid in his pajamas.

To square himself the husband promises the wife a new suit and leaves for his place of business, where he meets Rudolph, who has called to collect the bill. Searching for his wallet he discovers it is lost, and explaining this fact, he is enraged that Rudolph questions his credibility.

Returning home for his wallet, he finds the maid entertaining a cop, who has had his badge and gun stolen, and who is there in search of it. Incidentally he flirts with the maid, who hides him in a clock, which falls on top of the husband, and a fight ensues.

Hurrying to Rudolph's place after he has disposed of the policeman, the husband finds his wife in Rudolph's private office, and the door locked. Peering through the keyhole he sees the tailor's arms around his wife and he starts to shoot up the place.

The cop enters and recognizes the gun in hubby's hand as the one which was stolen from him. Things happen rapidly and after many ludicrous situations, hubby learns his jealousy is unfounded, and the cop finds that Rudolph's assistant is the thief who robbed him.

MUSTANG.

THE GULF BETWEEN (Two Parts—May 12).—The cast: Jim (Perry Banks); Ed (King Clark); Tess (Nita Davis); Malone, her father (Charles Newton); Pete (Lawrence Peyton).

Jim, an old trapper, is seated by the fireplace of his mountain cabin. A man, who has been stopping with him, has gone for a supply of provisions, and is not expected to return until late that night. As he sits musing, Jim hears a woman's shriek. He goes out to investigate. He sees a woman is struggling with a man. The man trips over a log and falls, and the woman flees from him. She runs into Jim's arms and faints. He carries her to his cabin, and after she has revived, she tels him her story.

She has been born and brought up in a distant range of mountains. Her mother had died when she was but a child, and her father, a rough old mountaineer, has taken to counter-

Seated in a swing that she built in a tree top she met him. Their friendship increased, until one day she heard her father and Pete discussing the stranger, agreeing that he must be a secret service man, and concluding that he must be put out of the way. She determined to save his life, to drive him from the mountains, and with this in view fired from amubsh several shots over and through his tent. But Ed managed to catch her in the act of shooting. Then she confessed her purpose.

A little later, while walking together, her father and Pete spotted Ed and Pete sent a shot at him. But the bullet missed, and dropping into the underbrush, Ed returned their fire and wounded her father in the arm. At their cabin she was told that Ed shot her father from ambush. Furious, she seized a rifle and went in pursuit. She finally found him seated under a tree and was about to fire when something stopped her. Day by day she has been watching a bird's nest in the tree of her swing. Now the eggs are hatched, and one of the young birds falls from the nest and into Ed's lap below. This was what stopped her just as she was about to shoot, for she feared that if she fired at Ed as he was fondling the bird that the fledgling might be killed also. But she came up to him, covered him with her gun, and forced him to accompany her back to the cabin. But Pete and her father had fled, and there was a note left for her stating that Ed fired in self defense only.

They were married and went to the city to live. There they were happy, until one day Pete, who had come to the city, chanced across their home. And while Ed was away he called upon her. In a scheme to get her back to the mountains he told her that her father was dying and wished to see her at once. This news broke her up completely, so much so that she was unaware of the fact that Pete had taken the liberty to put him arms around her. At this point Ed returned, and she found herseld in Pete's embrace. Without a word Ed left, and when she endeavored to get to the door to call him back and explain, Pete forcibly prevented her.

Believing Pete's story, she accompanied him back to the mountains, only to learn that she has been fooled, her father having been captured and sentenced to ten years for counterfeiting. She fled from him but he caught her at night. They struggled and when he fell, she fled, into Jim's arms.

Meantime, out in the woods, Pete has been endeavoring to find the girl. Finally he spots the cabin, and coming to it sees her inside with Jim. Determined now to have her at any cost, he is about to shoot through the window, when the man who has been stopping with Jim and who had gone for provisions, returned and prevented him. Jim and the girl rush outside as they hear the fighting. But Pete is overpowered, and as the girl looks to her rescuer, she recognizes her husband.

THE TOUCH ON THE KEY (Two Parts—May 8).—The cast: Jane Randall (Vivian Rich); Jimmy Lorman (Alfred Vosburg); Phil Norton (George Periolat); Hal Thomas (King Clark); Marsden Thomas (Joseph Beaudry).

Jane Randall, reporter on the Herald, learns telegraphy through her fiance, Jimmy Larmon, the telegraph operator. Shortly after this she is assigned to a financial story. Marsden Thomas, multimillionaire and the head of the Thomas Syndicate, has been requested by the Bankers' Association to release the cash funds of the syndicate through a certain chain of banks in order to avert a threatened money stringency. Thomas and his associates have arrived at a decision but have refused to make their decision public until a given time. Jane is to learn what this decision is to be.

Phil Norton, of the Times, is also assigned to the story. He fortunately places young Hal Thomas, the capitalist's son, under obligations to him. Both Norton and Jane leaves for Clifton, the village nearby. Thomas' country estate. Jane is unable to gain admittance, but Norton, through Hal, plays a deep game and forces him to learn his father's decision and report it to him, under threat of publishing the facts relative to a drunken brawl in which Hal was concerned. Jane overhears the arrangements being made and is present when Hal signals Norton the result of his endeavors.

Meanwhile, Norton has decided to tell his paper that he has been unable to get the story and by delaying the news, play the stock market on the strength of his advance information. Immediately upon receiving word from Hal he and Jane both hasten to the village telegraph station to wire in their reports. The station is closed; Jane is unable to gain entrance but Norton forces his way in. Jane is surprised to hear him wire his paper that he has failed and then wire a friend of his in the city which way to play the market. As soon as he leaves she breaks in and sends through a call to the Herald. She has just reached Jimmy when Norton returns, holds her away from the key and finishes the message, saying he is Jane and has been unable to get to Thomas. He keeps Jane away for a sufficient length of time to allow the Herald's last edition to go to press.

Jimmy, however, realizes—through the touch on the key—that it is not Jane sending and suspects something is wrong. He convinces the editor to hold the edition up. As a result when Jane at last gets him on the wire again she is able to get her story in time to catch the paper. Norton loses out both ways; his paper has been scooped and the story in the Herald prevents him from using his knowledge to successfully play the stock market.

THE PROFLIGATE (Three Parts—May 11).—The cast: Richard Potter (Edward Coxen); Gerald Winters (George Fields); Irene Roberts (Winnifred Greenwood); Dan Lee (Charles Newton); Polly Lee (Jimsey Maye); David Winters, (Dick La Reno; Mrs. Roberts (Louise Lester); Sam Murdock (George Webb); Tom Mason (James McGee).

Richard Potter and Irene Roberts are affianced secretly. Richard is a young and rising lawyer, with a future, but Mrs. Roberts, an aristocratic mother, has ambitions to marry her daughter to a man of wealth and social standing. Gerald Winters, the son of David Winters, a wealthy banker, is expelled from college and taken into the bank. Mrs. Roberts and David Winters plan to bring about the marriage of Gerald and Irene. Irene is commanded to break all relations with Richard and receive the attentions of Gerald. She does so reluctantly.

Gerald is thoroughly bad at heart and has vicious tendencies that he cannot overcome. He meets Polly Lee, the ignorant but vain, pretty daughter of Dan Lee, a dissolute character, and ruins her. Polly will not betray him to her father. Gerald steals from the bank to obtain money to give Polly to induce her to leave the city. Gerald loses heavy to Murdock, the gambler, and is unable to meet his gambling debts and resorts to theft to recoup his losses.

Richard Potter is elected prosecuting attorney, and Irene is secretly pleased at his rise—still loving Richard. Dan Lee learns the identity of the man who is responsible for the downfall of his daughter and nurses a hatred.

Murdock and Gerald meet one night at a low saloon and are alone in a drinking stall. Murdock demands money and threatens Gerald with exposure, saying he will apply to his father. A quarrel ensues, as both have been drinking. They grapple and Gerald draws a revolver. Dan Lee has followed Gerald to the place. He reaches through a window, grabs the gun away from Gerald and fires, killing Murdock and makes his escape. The hangers on in the saloon hear the shot, rush in, find Murdock dead and Gerald's revolver on the floor.

Gerald is charged with the murder of the gambler, the evidence being overwhelmingly against him. Richard, as the prosecuting attorney, conducts the case and Gerald is found guilty and sentenced to electrocution. The night of the appointed execution all concerned are tense. David Winters is firm in the assertion that his son is innocent. Irene, pitying the bereaved father, visits the office of Richard. The time of the execution is set for one minute after midnight. Irene implores Richard to make one last effort to save Gerald from the electric chair, but he tells her nothing can be done, unless new evidence has been discovered tending to establish the innocence of Gerald. Irene is in despair. At the penitentiary all preparations are being made to carry out the mandate of the law. The governor refuses David Winter's plea to save his son.

As the very moment of the execution approaches Dan Lee staggers into the office of Richard. Irene is unconscious in the adjoining room. Lee is in a dying condition and confesses to the murder. Richard has a short but decisive battle with himself. If he destroys the confession, Gerald will be executed and he will be free to marry Irene; he decides; he will save Gerald. He must act quickly. He tries to get the governor on the telephone. The secretary to the executive tells him the governor has gone out. Richard thinks quickly. He has defended a lawsuit against a patent electrical appliance at the power house and is quite familiar with the intricacies of the switchboard. He runs to the power house that supplies the electrical current at the penitentiary, turns off the power and it is impossible for the execution to proceed at the appointed moment. Then he rushes back to his office and finally gets the governor on the telephone. The governor communicates with the penitentiary and Gerald is saved just as he is being led to the electric chair. Irene, realizing the great sacrifice of Richard, goes to him and says nothing can come between them now.

BEAUTY.

ALL FOR NUTTIN' (May 7).—The cast: Hesa Sticker (Orral Gumphrey); Titus Nutting (Hugh Bennett); Allbut Nutting (Bowman Johnson); Mrs. Titus Nutting (Mollie Shafer); Lucy Nutting (Queenie Rosson); Willie Getter (Hardy Gibson); Truly Hissen (Lucille Ward); Tilly Getsone (Joe Taylor).

Mr. Titus Nutting, an elderly gentleman of independent means, has just perfected an instrument for the boring of square holes, and it is pronounced a tremendous success. To add to his joy he presently learns that his brother Allbut, who has been a missionary in China for many years, is now on his way home and that he will shortly visit him. The wife and daughter of the inventor are preparing for this home-coming and are laying out a clerical suit which has been sent ahead by the missionary. Lucy, the daughter, is engaged to marry a young man who is an ardent supporter of prize ring, and who revels in the name of Willie Getter.

A prize fight is about to be pulled off under the auspices of the local athletic club and the Sport induces his prospective father-in-law to attend the function. The promoters have been warned that prize fighting is illegal and that if they persist in breaking the law that they will be arrested and their club put out of business. The warning is unheeded and the place is raided by the police. In the general rough house which follows one Hesa Sticker, traveling representative of "The Fittem Casket Company," who was in attendance at the fight, is thrown into close touch with Titus and the Sport and with them he makes a hurried dash for liberty. Once clear of the club Titus and the Sport soon reach home. They are closely followed by Sticker who in turn is pursued by a persistent cop and is finally overtaken close to the house of Titus. Sticker puts up a valiant fight and succeeds in breaking from the officer. He scales the adjacent wall as the myrmidon of the law arises grasping the tail of the coat of the flying Sticker. Sticker makes his way into the home of Titus and there he disguises himself in the sanctified suit of the missionary. Titus offers but a feeble resistance to this perversion of his brother's suit owing to the fact that he fears that if he antagonizes Sticker, that he, Sticker, will tell Mrs. Titus that her husband was at the prize fight.

In the clerical suit Sticker meets and bamboozles the officer, finally persuading him that he has made a mistake and inducing him to leave the premises. The absence of the cop is a matter of a great satisfaction to Titus and the Sport, both of whom rather enjoy the situation until the arrival of a maiden sister-in-law of Titus puts upon him the task of introducing the undertaker as the missionary. Truly, who has long admired from afar off the noble missionary, to the heathen Chinee, and who neither she nor her brother-in-law Titus have seen for many years, throws herself into the arms of the now embarrassed Sticker, who, however, makes the best of the situation and returns with full measure the tender embrace of the ancient damsel. This happening tickles the risible faculties of the Sport, but is far from a joke to Titus; the trouble of the latter is added to, when his wife arrives and becoming, as she thinks, aware of the identity of Sticker, throws herself into his arms and proceeds to overwhelm with tender embraces. The Sport has great difficulty in controlling his laughter as he watches the green eyed monster at work with his respected friend, but presently the joke is on the Sport, for his sweetheart arriving beats all competitors and takes the pseudo missionary to her young and palpitating heart.

Murder is prevented by the arrival of the real missionary who is accompanied by the suspicious and angry policeman. Sticker sees that the game is up and remaining loyal to his companions, he throws himself upon the mercy of the ladies and attempts an explanation which, however acceptable to them, is not so to the irate officer, and while the missionary is taken to the respective bosoms of his fond relatives, Sticker is removed to the cold confines of the county coop.

SKELLY'S SKELETON (May 10).—The cast: Skelly (John Sheehan); Betty (Carol Halloway); J. Peerpont Mon, Betty's father (John Steppling); Skelly's Skeleton (Dick Rosson); Soothsayer (John Gouch).

Skelly is a clever Irish lad whom Fortune has cast in an office along with two of his pals, both good fellows, who would go the limit for him—and in this story they do.

Betty is the pretty daughter of the hard-hearted father who insists that she marry one of many millionaire-fops whose most strenuous exercise is the international game of croquet. Betty does not see them and pines for the red-blooded Skelly whom she loves. She dispatches a note to him and he breaks in on the proceedings but is stopped from doing much damage by the father, who informs him with no little ceremony that Betty must marry one of the millions and link two great fortunes. Skelly is told to leave the grounds, but before doing so he informs Betty's dad that he will win his daughter, and also his admiration.

Skelly returns to his office and plans father's undoing. He gets a great idea and 'phones Betty to give a "ghost party." She carries out his instructions and a happy gathering of "fops" and pretty girls enjoy themselves in the semi-darkness of a well decorated living room. As the party sits in a circle, listening to a recital an enormous skeleton head falls from the chandelier and between its teeth is a note instructing the party to come to the vastness of the forest where the sacred magician will chose from their midst the true lover of Betty. Thinking it is merely an effect, they start out, father well out in front. By torch light they stroll through the darkness and soon come to the source of the flickering light.

Here in front of a fire stands the magician who bids them sit in a semi-circle. The magician makes many mysterious noises and then tells them that the "Skeleton of Fate" will select the lucky one. The party thinks it a good effect until a skeleton does appear in the blackness. Cold sweat creeps out on their brows, especially on father's brow, when the apparition starts an insane dance. Slowly he comes forward on the party who can stand the strain no longer and break for the woods. Father goes into a dead faint and is alone save Betty, Skelly, the skeleton and the magician. They pick him up and carry him home.

Here he revives sufficiently to thank Skelly for his bravery. Then his eyes travel to the portieres from behind which peers the skeleton's head. Father almost dies of fright but Skelly pacifies him and calling in the skeleton and the magician introduces them as his friends and co-workers. Father rages but gradually comes to the realization that Skelly has cleverly outwitted him. His frown breaks into a smile and he blesses the happy lovers.

NO TITLE! (May 14)—The cast: Kiro Chiroped, the Elite (Orral Humphrey); Bill, his neighbor (Jack Farrell); Mr. Wadpole (Rea Berger); Waddie, his daughter (Lucille Ward); Peter (John Gough).

Kiro Chiroped, an eccentric corn doctor, finds business on the blink and discovers that two dollars is all that separates him from poverty. His neighbor, Bill, a crook, is posing as Lord Bumpus and receives an offer of a million dollars from Wadpole, the rich pork packer, to marry his porky daughter, Waddie. The chandelier falls on Bill, disabling him, and Kiro, finding a letter in which Bill has stated his intentions of marrying Waddie for the million, decides he will pose as the lord. He binds Bill and starts off to connect with the Wadpoles. Waddie can't see a title because her affections are set on Peter, the butcher boy. Kiro runs over Peter on the way and buries him for dead. Kiro and Wadpole get over their mutual disappointment and Kiro is getting on with Waddie when Peter's face appears at the window and Kiro, thinking it is his ghost, flees with Waddie.

He takes her to a restaurant where she eats ravenously, to his discomfort, but he is relieved when the check amounts to only $1.95, remembering the $2.00. When he looks for it, however, it is gone. He resorts to putting a cockroach in the salad and calling it to the waiter's attention, leaving indignantly. Peter and Bill arrive as Kiro and Waddie return, and Kiro has a hard time trying to explain. In retaliation of Bill's charge that he is a faker, Kiro produces the letter exposing Bill. The old man angrily kicks them both out and bestows Waddie upon the poor but honest Peter.

difference in character of the two women and has envied his friend. Cooper, Sherman's private secretary, despises Alice.

Cyril Carr, the usual type of weak-minded reprobate, is disgusted with his wife's domestic enjoyment and seeks pleasure in the company of his friend's wife Alice. All this is noticed by Cooper, who is afraid to tell of his employer's wife's unfaithfulness and his friend's hypocrisy. Sherman, having left several important documents in his wall safe at home, sends Cooper for them while he remains at the office, arranging his business preparatory to leaving. Cooper, having arrived at the house for the papers, hears voices from Alice's boudoir and recognizes them. Cooper calls up Sherman at the office and tells him to come home immediately, informing him that his wife is entertaining another man.

Arriving home, Sherman meets Cooper in the hallway and is so enraged at Cooper's accusation that, unable to control his emotions, he forces the secretary to his knees, commanding him to divulge the man's name. Cooper tells him to go upstairs as the man is in her room. Sherman discovers his wife calm and alone. Cooper, eager to hear the tirade, noiselessly mounts the stairs, and entering through the door to Alice's bedroom, listens from behind the portieres between the boudoir and the bedroom. Sherman denounces his wife and she denies everything. Cautiously looking around the room, Sherman sees a smoking cigar butt on the table, and turning quickly, sees the portieres moving. Extracting a revolver from the table drawer, he fires, and rushing forward to the man who has fallen face downward, turns him over, and discovers he has shot his secretary, Cooper.

Cooper, when convalescent, tells Sherman that he knows the man and tells Sherman why his wife despised him (Cooper). He tells him that when Sherman had first given him an opportunity and employed him in his office, his brother, a good-for-nothing reprobate, was continually coming to him for money. How one day he investigated and found his brother was supplying a certain woman with clothes and luxuries an ordinary man cannot afford; how they caught him one day and sent him "over the road"; how when Sherman promoted him to private secretaryship and invited him to his home after his (Sherman's) marriage he discovered that the woman who had caused his brother's downfall was now Sherman's wife, Alice.

He continued by telling him that the man who claimed to be his best friend was the man who was secretly meeting his wife, and that that man was Cyril Carr. Sherman immediately started to pool all of Carr's interests on the "street." A matter of a few days and Carr was staring ruin in the face. He knew Sherman was fighting him, but did not suspect it was being wilfully perpetrated. Calling Sherman on the 'phone he begged assistance, but Sherman informed him it was an individual fight and that the best man must win.

Penniless, Carr turned to the woman he thought caused his downfall. He wrote her a passionate note of appeal to go with him, but she knew the value of the ruined man. She called upon her husband, and after much pleading he granted her an audience. He told her he knew everything of her past life and told her she could no longer consider his roof her home.

Muriel's first knowledge of her husband's ruin was through the newspapers and there she learned that their best friend, her child's Godfather, was the cause of it. Calling upon Sherman, she sought an explanation. He could not tell her the truth, so told her it was a hard financial battle and that one of them was bound to lose. Her husband had lost.

Little Tom, in the meantime, had written a note to Sherman telling him that the pony and cart given to him for his birthday had been taken away. Then came the last chapter in Cyril Carr's life. Rushing to his room after she had heard the shot, Muriel found him dead; beside him was a penned note to Sherman, admitting his guilt. Taking the note before the coroner would find it and learn the family secret, Muriel once again called upon Sherman. She gave him the note in which Carr had confessed. Sherman told her it was true. Told her of her husband's hypocrisy and his wife's perfidy.

Some time later, Sherman opening a legal envelope, found an annulment of marriage, and then he thought of Muriel and little Tom. As the steamer was leaving its moorings, many people were departing, trying to forget the past. Three in particular were aboard and happy. Lowell Sherman, Muriel, and little Tom.

THE ISLE OF LOVE (Gaumont—5 Parts—May 15).—The cast: Helen Arthur (Gertrude McCoy); Rex Bristol (Earl O. Schenck); John Leonard (Robert Clugston); Nettie Lea (Iva Shepard); Theatrical Manager (Charles W. Travis); Captain of the Schooner (W. J. Butler). Written by Paul M. Bryan. Directed by Edwin Middleton.

Helen Arthur, petted, spoiled and successful prima donna of the light opera stage, goes to a fishing village to gain color and atmosphere for a new operatic role. She boards at the cottage of a fisher maiden, Nettie Lea. Nettie is in love with a young sea captain, Rex Bristol. Rex falls in love with the prima donna, and rescues her from drowning. Rex's infatuation increasing, Nettie becomes jealous. Helen has come to the village incognita, and when Nettie learns that she is an actress, she turns her out of her cottage.

Securing lodging at a nearby hotel, Helen, out of revenge, plans to complete her conquest of Rex. One day while out sailing with him, Helen sings the popular ballad, "The Isle of Love." Her conquest is complete. Rex seizes her in his arms and kisses her. Helen is indignant, then taunts Rex by saying she has been playing with him, acting, all the time. She returns to New York, leaving him a victim of despair.

After a successful season in New York, Helen is preparing to start West on a tour. Among her admirers coming to her last performance in New York is John Leonard, a wealthy clubman and yachtman. Rex is now captain of the yacht owned by Leonard, and goes with him to the theater. He is persuaded to bid Helen goodby. Hurt at Helen's cruelty when they meet, he leaves her in highest indignation. The following day, as a farewell entertainment to the star, Leonard makes up a cruising party in Helen's honor. Because of an automobile accident, other members of the party fail to reach the boat. Leonard determines to run away with Helen, and orders Rex to take the yacht to sea. When Helen screams, Rex rescues her, but still cannot be convinced of the girl's innocence in her relations with Leonard. Rex is discharged, and is unable to get another ship.

Following a nervous breakdown, Helen abandons her theatrical trip and a month or two later boards an ocean liner for a vacation in the Orient. On this same ship Rex is serving as wireless operator. When the vessel is burned, Rex rescues Helen. They reach an uninhabited island, and here again the flirt in Helen asserts herself. Rex, goaded on by her witchery, takes possession of the girl. He uses the authority vested in him as a sea captain, and performs his own marriage ceremony.

Helen rebels against her husband's authority, and thinks she hates him. A child is born to them. When a schooner, stopping for water at the island, offers to take her and her child back to civilization. Helen tells the captain that there is no one else on the island, and she and her baby leave for civilization. Rex is left alone, not knowing what became of his wife and child. Helen goes back to the stage. However, she comes to realize gradually that there is no sweetness in triumph now. The need of a father for her child also drags on her heart. Finally she makes a big resolve—and returns to "The Isle of Love," where her husband welcomes both wife and child.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 11, "The Saving of Dan O'Mara" (Pathe—Two Parts—May 8).—In this episode, Jules Legar, known as The Iron Claw, still holds to his vow to revenge himself upon Enoch Golden by striking at his daughter, Margery. He then secures a position in the Applewaithe Factories where Dan O'Mara, a wood worker, connected with the factories, engages in an unlawful scheme to provide necessities for his sick wife. Under threat of exposing her father, Legar forces O'Mara's daughter to lure Margery to the factories.

It is in the sluice room of the factory that the big thrill of this episode occurs, for here Legar throws Margery into the log-mangling sluiceway and the girl seems certain to meet her death in the horrible machinery. But The Laughing Mask, mysterious foe of Legar and self-styled "Righter of Wrongs," releases the power gate and drags Margery to safety. Legar then sets the police on O'Mara, but The Laughing Mask has removed all evidence of the poor man's guilt. Again the question arises, "Who is The Laughing Mask?" The next episode is entitled "The Haunted Canvass."

WHO'S GUILTY, NO. 1, "Puppets of Fate" (Arrow—Two Parts—May 8).—Dr. George Bullard, an impecunious but talented young surgeon, is offered, through the intervention of his wife, Esther, a very good position as general physician with the Mortentown Gas Company. With this start, and through the continued efforts of Esther, his career becomes one success after another. Under her stimulus, he effects numerous sensational cures. Then Esther goes to Mrs. Sylvia Sands, a wealthy young widow, to propose that Dr. Bullard be given charge of the new Sands Memorial Hospital. This has the effect of causing Dr. Bullard and Mrs. Sands to be much together. Bullard becomes infatuated with her.

Esther falls seriously ill and the surgeon realizes that only a certain operation which his research has devised, can save her life. Moreover, Esther insists that her husband himself act as surgeon. At the last moment, Sylvia Sands comes to him and appeals to his old infatuation. Unnerved, he bungles the operation on his wife. The terrific ordeal has been too much for him and he is seized with a paralytic stroke. It is here that the question "Who's Guilty?" arises.

THE BOOB WEEKLY (Cartoon Comedy—May 8).—The reel, which is a burlesque on current news events, starts with the entrance of R. L. Goldberg, the cartoonist, to his office. He is attired in a frock coat and striped trousers, the dignity of which is belied by his contagious smile and the title which follows: "When you see the cartoonist you will probably think the secret of his genius lies in the peculiar cut of his coat. But it doesn't—it is not his own coat!"

He sits down to draw, but finds he has no ink. This is an awful state of affairs, and he calls the negro porter to his aid. So pathetic does he make his want known that the dusky one is moved to tears—and saves the situation, for he

THE ASCENT TO MT. RAINIER (Picturesque America—May 8).—Those great, set, lazy irregularities of the earth's surface known as mountains are never more magnificent than when draped in their mantles of snow trimmed with sun beams—and this splendid half-reel shows them at their best.

The Rainier National Park of more than 2,000,000 acres is situated in the Rainier National Forest Reserve in Pierce County, Washington. Mt. Rainier is a volcanic pile 14,526 feet high, covered by 32,500 acres of perpetual ice and snow. This film shows the tourist pitching camp in the foothills before attempting the ascent of the towering peak. Then comes the ascent in which Paradise River, Sluiskin Falls, Nisqually Glacier, St Tahoma Glacier and a glimpse of the Tatiosh range are shown. The climbing is very perilous. The picture ends with a view of Mt. Rainier and Mirror Lake, most aptly named, as can be seen from the perfection in which it reflects the beauty of the surrounding landscape.

BEAUTIFUL LAKE CHUZENJI (Picturesque Japan—On the Same Reel As Foregoing).—After viewing this charming film of a filigree country, it comes very certainly to one that Nature must have been "just seventeen" when she made Japan.

Lake Chuzenji, 4,455 feet above the sea level and about 600 feet deep; Hannya Falls, Shirokumo Cascade, and the Cascade of Kegon are the subjects of this fascinating half-reel.

THE BEGGAR OF CAWNPORE (Kay-Bee—Five parts—April 30).—The cast: Dr. Robert Lowndes (H. B. Warner); Betty Archer (Lola May); Captain Guy Douglas (Wyndham Standing); Colonel Archer (H. E. Entwistle); Mulhar Rao (A. F. Hollingsworth); Werner, the Engineer (Wedgwood Nowell).

Dr. Robert Lowndes of the British Army medical corps is assigned to an isolated post in the Indian desert when a plague of cholera sweeps over the territory. Despite his efforts his friend, the only white man in the settlement, is a victim of the disease. This so alarms the natives that they flee and Lowndes is left practically alone, unable to leave until relieved and waiting month after month in vain hope that he will be recalled. At the last only the drugs in his cabinet enable him to keep up.

When finally ordered to Delhi he is a hopeless victim of the drugs. He confesses his weakness to his sweetheart, Betty Archer, and gives his promise when she exacts it that he will never yield again. But Douglas, who also loves Betty, discovers the powerful weapon that is at his disposal and tempts the doctor. Lowndes falls and is renounced by the girl he loves.

Six months later he is living in a hut in Cawnpore, a beggar, seeking only enough money to keep him supplied with the Hindu bhang, a good substitute for cocaine. Betty has married Douglas and learns of her mistake in the discovery that a dancing girl monopolizes his attentions. Eager to leave the scenes of her suffering, she goes to Cawnpore to visit her aunt. She arrives as the first rumblings of the Sepoy Rebellion of 1857 are heard. Lowndes sees her, learns of her unhappiness and then begins a terrific struggle to free himfree himself from his habit. He succeeds, almost too late. The Sepoys have captured the town and men, women and children are in grave danger. Douglas, sent to command the defenders, has turned traitor and in the garb of a Sepoy has been shot by the English.

Betty's rescue by Lowndes, his complete return to his former self and their subsequent marriage are pictured in the remainder of the story.

THE CHILDREN IN THE HOUSE (Fine Arts—Five Parts—April 30).—The cast: Cora (Norma Talmadge); Alice (Alice Rae); Jane Courtenay (Jewel Carmen); Charles Brown (William Hinckley); Fred Brown (W. E. Lawrence); Jasper Vincent (George Pearce); Arthur Vincent (Eugene Pallette); Al Fellowes (Walter Long); Gaffey (Alva D. Blake), and George Stone, Violet Radcliffe, Carmen de Rue, Francis Carpenter and Ninon Fovieri.

Cora and Alice are in love with brothers, Charles and Fred Brown. Alice and Fred marry and have three children, but Cora is influenced to place money and position ahead of love and weds Arthur Vincent, whose father is president of the bank where Charles Brown is employed. Two children are born to the Vincents, but they seldom see their father, who spends most of his time and money with a cabaret dancer, Jane Courtenay. One night when he is away Cora takes the boy and girl to her sister's for supper. Charles lives with his brother's family and is very popular with the youngsters. After supper they follow him from the dining room and urge him to tell them a fairy story.

He tells them of Sweetheart, a fairy in the Enchanted Forest of Dreams, and of his love for her. The Queen of all the fairies, True Love, made her heart tender toward him and they were very happy until Selfish sent two dwarfs, Lies and Jealousy, to win her away from him. When he saw this he fell down dead, but the fairies brought him back to live and replaced his heart with a cold stone. Cora hears enough of the story to recognize its application so that when she goes home and finds her husband still absent, she 'phones to Charles and asks him to come to her. He begs her to elope with him and she agrees, but a thunder storm frightens the children and they come tumbling into the room in their night clothes. The elopement is declared off.

Vincent, in grave need of money to satisfy Jane, has lent his aid to a plot to rob the bank. The real robbers wait in a deserted shanty, where the children go to play. The desperadoes bind them and set fire to the place as Arthur and Jane come in an auto to carry them to safety. In the pursuit Vincent is shot by the police and the others go over a precipice in the machine. Charles, the cashier, who has been suspected, is freed, the children are rescued and a broken romance mended.

THE SNOWBIRD (Rolf Photoplays, Inc.—Five Parts—May 1).—The cast: Lois Wheeler (Mabel Taliaferro); Jean Corteau (Edwin Carewe); Bruce Mitchell (James Cruze); John Wheeler (Warren Cook); Pierre (Arthur Evers); Michael Flynn (Walter Hitchcock); Zoe (Kitty Stevens); Magistrate Le Blanc (John Melody). Written by Mary Rider. Directed by Edwin Carewe.

John Wheeler, a traction magnate, becomes heavily involved and is obliged to sell a large timber tract he owns in the Hudson Bay district. He owns the property jointly with Henri Corteau, and the deed is filed in the office of Magistrate Le Blanc, at Chalet. Bruce Mitchell, a wealthy young man about town, who is infatuated with Lois Wheeler, the madcap daughter of Wheeler, readily agrees to take over the property.

In the northland the elder Corteau has died suddenly, and the Magistrate's office, together with the Wheeler-Corteau deed, is destroyed by fire. The Magistrate receives word of the transfer between Wheeler and Mitchell and he sends for Jean Corteau, the son and heir of the late Henri Corteau, and asks him for the deed his father held, telling him he wishes to make a copy of it. When he adds that it is the only copy in existence, Jean walks out, saying he intends to keep the land himself.

Meantime Mitchell has pressed his suit for the hand of Lois, and she takes a violent dislike to him. She resents it because he tries to make plain that her father is under obligations to him. Soon afterward Mitchell goes to Wheeler and wants to know why the deed has not arrived. Wheeler hopelessly shows him a letter from the Magistrate, telling of Jean's action. Mitchell threatens to jail Wheeler, accusing him of obtaining money under false pretenses. Lois overhears the threat and also Mitchell's offer to let the matter drop if Lois will marry him. Lois agrees to this proposal providing her father's innocence cannot be proved.

Lois goes to the northland and seeks out Jean. He will not see her, saying he will not have any dealings with women. The next day she sets out, dressed in boy's clothes, on a dog sled for Jean's home in the forest. Pierre, a guide, accompanies her. They arrive in sight of Jean's cabin at nightfall, when Pierre attempts to force his attentions upon Lois. She flees and seeks refuge in Jean's cabin, stumbling in his door in a faint. Later, she tells Jean she has become lost from a lumber camp, and asks if she may remain a while with him. He tells her he has always wanted a boy companion and helper, and that since she came like a "wounded snowbird" to his cabin, she may stay.

Although Jean is brutal and primitive in many ways Lois soon finds he has a gentle nature. The next day Jean discovers Lois is a girl, when her fair falls out from under her cap. She confesses her identity and he is angry. But he consents to her remaining, and he fetches some of his mother's clothes for her. Her one desire to get the deed is realized when she is dressing and finds the document hidden away behind a small mirror on the wall. That night she urges Jean to drink heavily, hoping to get away. He becomes fascinated with her and tells her he is going to save her father. He reaches for the deed and finds it gone. Her manner betrays Lois, and she confesses having the paper.

Meanwhile Mitchell and Wheeler have come north in search of Lois. Pierre tells Mitchell she is living with Jean. In a jealous rage he goes to seek out Lois. He has Wheeler arrested and then sets out for Jean's cabin. Arrived there he sarcastically accuses Lois of a common liaison with Jean. Jean demands that Mitchell apologize. He refuses and they fight. Both are seriously wounded. Mitchell staggers out of the cabin in the snow. Lois, left with the unconscious Jean, decides to steal the deed and leave. On the edge of a cliff Lois sees Mitchell fall to his death. Then a vision of Jean left alone in his helpless condition comes to her. She turns back and joins Jean. She nurses him back to strength and they go to the aid of Wheeler, intending to marry and live in New York. But after they are wed they hearken to the call of the north, and go back to the life where their love was born.

A MILLION A MINUTE (Quality Pictures Corp.—Five Parts—May 8).—The cast: Stephen Quaintance and A. Nedman (Francis X. Bushman); Timothy O'Farrell (Robert Cummings); Seager (William Bailey); Fanchette (Helen Dunbar); Duke de Reves (John Davidson); Jules, his valet (Charles Prince); Mrs. Smith (Mrs. Walker); Stephen Quaintance, Sr. (Carl Brickert); Mrs. Quaintance, his wife (Mary Moore); Miles Quaintance (Jerome Wilson); Dagmar Lorraine (Beverly Bayne). Directed by John W. Noble.

Philip and Miles Quaintance quarrel over the love of Ellen Sheridan, and Miles is rejected, while Philip is successful in his suit. Philip dies soon after a son is born, and Miles proposes to the widow. When she refuses him, he uses every means to make her unhappy. She leaves the Southland where they live, taking her infant son, whom she has named Stephen. When Stephen has grown to manhood, his mother dies, first telling him the story of Miles' persecution. He is so embittered against his uncle, that he avoids meeting him, and he leaves for South Africa.

Miles Quaintance amasses a fortune, and in his declining years he hopes he may meet Stephen to make restitution for the wrongs he had done his parents. Miles has a ward, Dagmar Lorraine, whom he sends to Paris to study singing. There she meets Etienne, the Duke de Reves, who has an unsavory reputation. He makes violent love to Dagmar and obtains her consent to marry him. After the ceremony a woman enters the church, carrying a baby, which she says is a son of the Duke. Horrified, Dagmar flees from the church, and returns to America.

In a whimsical mood, and partly to atone for the wrongs he had done in his past, Miles makes a will leaving his fortune of ten million dollars to Dagmar and Stephen, providing they marry. The wedding must take place before midnight of the following 31st of May. Miles does not know of Dagmar's wedding and dies before she arrives in America. Stephen is notified of the contents of the strange will, at a trading station in Africa. He decides he will not take any assistance from his uncle, and with Timothy O'Farrell, a companion, he plans a way out of it. They find the body of a white man floating in the river, and Stephen puts all his papers and trinkets in the pockets of the dead man.

Mark Seager, a gun runner, finds the body and conceives the idea of impersonating the dead man, marrying Dagmar and claiming the legacy. He sets off for America immediately. Stephen and O'Farrell also leave for America. They are in a restaurant, where they see a man abusing a young girl and using threatening language. It is the valet of the Duke, who has met Dagmar and is trying to blackmail her for his silence. Stephen drives the valet out of the place, and is charmed by the appearanec and manner of the girl. She leaves before he can question her.

While driving her automobile home that night Dagmar has trouble with the engine. When she stops to fix it Seager, who does not know the girl, observes her predicament and attempts to take advantage of it. She frightens him away with a revolver. Next day Stephen sees an automobile offered for sale, and noticing that it corresponds with the one driven by the girl he met the day before, he answers the advertisement. Dagmar sells the car to him as she is low in funds. That night the valet and the Duke come to her home, and she flees, taking passage the next morning on a steamship bound for Paris, where she has left some money in a bank.

Seager learns that she has gone, and he follows. Likewise do the Duke and Stephen and O'Farrell. Stephen, taking the name of A. Newman. Seagar finds Dagmar in Paris and tells her he has come to marry her. One look at him and she leaves. The Duke finds her and persuades her to come to him, saying he will lead a better life, and introduce her to his own society. On the night of the reception she is kidnapped by Seager, who takes her to a deserted house where he has arranged for a rascally advocate to come and marry them. The Duke follows to the house and is killed in a fight with Seager. Stephen and O'Farrell have followed the Duke's valet and arrive there just as Seager is forcing Dagmar into a marriage. It is just ten minutes of midnight, the time assigned for the ten million dollar wedding. Seager is driven from the place and Stephen and Dagmar tell each other of their love. Both agree not to touch a penny of Miles' fortune, and after the clock strikes twelve they are married.

THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA (Episode No. 3 Two Parts—May 8). An initation is in progress in the crypt of the Black Lodge, while a solitary member sits in the center of the Council Chamber. Suddenly he exchanges signals with someone below, and a mysterious hand appears through the floor holding an envelope addressed to the Master. It is duly delivered and the Master smiles scornfully as he reads the message. "Your plan did not work and he is beginning to suspect us." (Signed) Varney. At this point, the initate, a young Hindu, is lead forth and put through the final rites, after which he is allowed to go.

At the time that these events are transpiring in the Black Order, Dr. Alden is calling at the Maynard home, and is explaining to Myra, her mother and Varney, how science has proved the existence of spirits, astral bodies and other strange mediums of the unknown world. Deep in the discussion he is interrupted by the telephone. It is the Hindu who has just gained access to the Black Lodge, calling Dr. Alden to tell him of his success. Varney answers the phone and before handing the instrument to Alden registers that he has heard the voice before, but cannot place it. He casually asks Alden who it was. Alden replies "a friend." Varney looks at him suspiciously and hastily leaves. He tells the Black Master that there is a traitor in the Order.

Myra Maynard is anxious to try the mysterious experiments which Alden has been describing so they prepare to go to Alden's laboratory. Alden however requests that he be allowed to explore the secret chamber before they depart. Myra finally consents and he descends the narrow stairway with a lighted candle. He finds the spring of a secret door in the dust covered altar which discloses an ancient parchment proving that John Maynard was a member of the Black Order.

Suddenly he sees a footprint on the dusty floor; another and yet another appears and then disappears. He stands back in fear as a mysterious hand and arm appears and slowly snuffs out the candle. Suddenly an apparition in white appears before him. It is the spirit of Myra's father which bids Alden warn Myra against the Black Order which seeks her destruction. He starts up the narrow stairway only to find that butler, thinking that he had left the house, had closed the panel. He is later released by Myra and Mrs. Maynard.

Alden shows Mrs. Maynard and her daughter into his workshop and explains to them the scientific instrument. He demonstrates to Mrs. Maynard how the human aura can be made visible. He then takes Myra into the next room and seats her before a hypnotizing machine. "I am going to release your astral body in hopes that it will go in seach of the persons who are persecuting you" he explains.

Slowly the machine with its myriad lights begins to revolve at high speed. Then a strange thing happens for a fully formed, thought transparent duplicate of Myra, arises to her full height and glides across the room disappearing in the vortex of the machine. The astral body of the girl has been released, while the material form still sits before the machine.

The Black Order is again in session. The leader of ceremonies is reading solemnly from an old parchment while the members sit around in a half circle. Suddenly a pale yet increasingly heavy smoke arises from the incense burner in the center of the floor. The form of Myra is slowly taking shape in the smoke. With considerable effort Varney bursts through the curtains and informs the Master of her presence With devilish glee the Master replies "It is her astral body, quick, chant so as to break the astral thread; she will never awake.

Quickly Varney returns and commands the other members. They nod and start to chant in unison bending back and forth at the end of the chant and making a gesture as if to break the invisible thread. The body of Myra sways perceptibly as if reacting before the power of the combined wills. In the laboratory Alden looks at his watch and says she has been in the trance long enough. He tells Myra to waken but she makes no response. He repeats the command more emphatically. Still no result. A third time he repeats it with all the power at his command.

In the Black Lodge the figure of Myra is writhing in the vapor while in the scientific laboratory Alden in anxiety is feeling her pulse and listening to her heart. Again and again he tries with all the pleading power of his heart to bring her out, but without avail. Finally he drops on his knees in desperation and begins to pray fervently. Prayer succeeds when science fails and soon Myra begins to show signs of returning consciousness. In the Black Lodge the vision is fading out in spite of their frantic chants and soon disappears.

Alden begins to question the girl. She replies, "All I can remember is incense, men, in black and this," and she registers the "Thumbs Up" sign. In sudden fury Alden replies "It is that accursed Black Lodge, and I am going there myself and put an end to this." Mrs. Maynard and Myra depart and as they enter their home Myra utters a cry of horror. In the stone balustrade of the porch she sees a fading vision of the Grand Master in the hateful "Thumbs Up" attitude.

HER MATERNAL RIGHT (Paragon—5 Parts —May 8).—The cast: Nana Seabury (Kitty Gordon); Mary Winslow (Zena Keefe); Emory Townsend (George Ralph); Amos Matson (Frank Evans). Directed by John Ince.

Emory Townsend discovers, at the death of his father, that his father's interests were not so large as they were thought to be. Emory learns that he will have to go to work to support himself. Through the influence of his uncle, he secures a place in the Catskill National Bank. For ten years he devotes his time to business and convinces his family that his wild-cat days are over. At the age of thirty-four, Emory meets Nina Seabury, a musical comedy actress from the West, who is at the time the idol of the New York stage. She meets Townsend upon her first visit to the bank, and he is infatuated with her. She flatters him with his importance and when she finally accepts a dinner engagement with him, his cup of joy is full, but the strain of entertaining this woman of lavish desires soon tells on his purse strings. However, he continues to throw away money upon her.

Christmas is approaching and her desires for an expensive diamond present provokes Jack into using the bank's funds. His thefts continue until it becomes a mental torture to him. He then endeavors to prevail upon Nina to leave America for South America, pointing where the business extraditions laws will prevent his being prosecuted, but Nina refuses. She later meets Matson, a millionaire widower. Matson informs

RADIUM GOLD FIBRE

When you spend money for a screen it is wise, first of all, to find out what kind of service the screen is supposed to give you. It is well, too, to ascertain what the manufacturers of the screen can give you in the way of a guarantee, but it is even more important to consider the reasons which the manufacturers themselves have for guaranteeing results.

RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS

Promise you better pictures with a minimum expenditure for electrical current. They give a tone to the representations which appear before your audiences. They preserve the fine shadings of color which are present when the pictures are taken, but are invariably lost when any screen other than the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE is used in the projection.

The five-year guarantee which goes with each RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN is based upon results which we know our product to have given during the many years which they have been in use in leading theatres throughout the country. Nina that Emory is but a poorly paid clerk and chides her for allowing him to pay her debts. That same night she gathers together the photographs of Emory and burns them. Thus her affection for him ends.

Discovering that Nina is cold towards him, he begins doctoring his books and decides to change his ways. During the course of the next few days, Emory meets John Winslow, who invites him home where he meets Mary, and it is love at first sight. After a short courtship, they are married. Were it not for his shortage at the bank, liable to discovery any moment, he would be the happiest man in the world. Upon reading that Nina has become the wife of Matson, he decides the one way to retrieve—to go to her and endeavor to secure some of the money he gave her and spent on her. He ponders alone over this plan until he discovers that Mary is looking forward to an interesting event.

Crushing his spirit of pride, he goes to Nina's apartment. Mary follows him there and arrives just as Emory is demanding the amount of money he is short at the bank. Nina, still heartless, refuses to aid him. Mary interrupts and threatens to call the whole house and tell that she caught her husband there unless she does consent to return the money Emory gave her. For the first time in her life, cowed and whimpering, Nina writes a check for $11,400, which Emory and Mary take and leave. Arriving at their home, Emory asks for forgiveness, but Mary says, "I have nothing to forgive, I have heard all."

ELUSIVE ISABEL (Five Parts—May 15).—The cast: Isabel Thorne (Florence Lawrence); Luigi, her brother (Sydney Bracey); Hamilton Grimm (Harry Millarde); Prince D'Abruzzi (Wallace Clarke); Chief Campbell (William Welsh); Count Rosini (Paul Panzer); Senor Rodriguez (Jack Newton); Senorita Rodriguez (Sonia Marcel). Scenario by Raymond L. Schrock. Directed by Jacques Futrelle.

This photoplay is based on the theory that Latin nations might combine their interests and rule the universe. Representatives assemble in Washington to formulate and sign a compact which, if negotiated on American soil, would violate the neutrality of this country.

There comes from Europe to assist in perfecting the arrangements a clever diplomatic spy. Her presence here attracts governmental attention and through following this elusive young woman the plotters are finally apprehended, and their purpose thwarted. To this end the most skillful operative in the United States Secret Service is entrusted with the work of finding out why "Elusive Isabel" is here and to foil the plotters in their intrigue.

To make matters more interesting the Secret Service agent is in love with Isabel and while he follows her through various sensational episodes, he is greatly disturbed in realizing that the woman he loves is engaged in such unfriendly actions toward this government.

The purpose of the Secret Service to prevent the compact being signed on American soil provides the excitement. Isabel's partially demented brother—crazed by inventive research—concerns himself in the plan and uses his mechanical and electrical experiments in forwarding the propaganda.

GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN (Vitagraph—Eight parts—April 24).—The cast: Philip Weyman (William Duncan); Josephine Adare (Nell Shipman); Arnold Lang (George Holt); John Adare (William Brainbridge); Miriam, his wife (Nell Clark Keller); Jean Croisset (Edgar Keller); Thoreau (George Kunkel). Scenario written by James Oliver Curwood. Produced by Rollin S. Sturgeon.

Far away, in the timberlands of the North, where the purity of woman is placed above all else, lived Josephine Adare, a kind, honest soul, whose face plainly bore an expression of deep sorrow and anxiety. Up to this—God's Own Country—came a man, Philip Weyman, to spend a year in that region.

The man meets the woman and falls in love with her. He begs her to confide in him her great sorrow, which he sees she is constantly thinking of, but she tells him that she can not do so. Seeing that he is persistent, and really anxious to help her, she asks him if he would be willing to follow her wherever she goes, doing whatever she asks of him, asking no questions and with the hope of no reward but her undying gratitude. Owing to his great love for her, he consents, knowing that he will be working for a just cause. Through the long, bitter, Northern winter, he travels with her, knowing neither where he is going nor what he is going to do. To aid her plans, they are married, but it is a marriae in name only. She then takes him to the home of her father, John Adare, a rugged woodsman, where she tells him to pose as the father of an infant which she shows him. For a moment, his faith in her wavers, when he sees the child, but his manhood conquers and he determines to stand by his promise.

Then, on one eventful day the infant dies. After the baby's death Philip notices unusual activity about the camp, and suspects that Josephine's enemies are about. Though he knows not who they are, he longs to fight them, but Jean Croisset, Josephine's half-breed protector, who has also been assisting her in her trouble, tells him that he can do nothing but wait for orders from her. He is tempted to cast caution to the winds and search for them himself, but his better judgment prevails and he realizes that he must be satisfied with anxiety and inactivity. Josephine's ferocious wolf-hounds have grown to love Philip as they love their mistress. These terrible beasts, though born for fighting, have big hearts in their savage breasts, and, at a word from one whom they love, would tear an enemy to pieces.

One day, Josephine, who is known throughout the neighborhood for her kindness and love of children, is called to another village to tend a sick child. Jean follows to protect her, and Philip trails him with the dogs. Philip learns that she was kidnapped by Lang, who, Jean tells him, is responsible for all her troubles. Philip rouses all the honest woodsmen in the neighborhood, who love Josephine for her kindness, and they set out to rescue her. They also enlist the aid of a tribe of Indians in their cause.

After traveling for some time, the rescue party traps the villainous gang in its lair, "Devil's Nest." Here Lang and his gang barricade the doors and windows and prepare for the attack. A battle ensues, and Lang's followers, seeing they are being beaten, try to escape, but find themselves hemmed in. In the midst of the battle, Jean is shot, and, knowing he is about to die, calls Philip to his side. He tells him how, a year before, Josephine's mother had fallen into Lang's clutches while her husband was away, and of the birth of the child, which Josephine had claimed as her own to shield her mother's honor. The story told, the faithful half-breed dies, with a parting injunction to Philip to kill Lang and destroy the incriminating papers in his possession.

During a lull in the fighting, Lang tries to escape through a window with Josephine. His action is seen by Philip, who rushes over to protect her. In the struggle which follows, Lang manages to gain the upper hand, and reaches for his knife to end Philip's life. Seeing his danger, Josephine releases the dogs, with a command to kill. As though they knew the sorrows of their mistress, the shaggy beasts leap upon the struggling forms, single out Lang and kill him with their merciless fangs. Philip informs her that he knows all, and that she need no longer fear for her mother's honor, as he has destroyed the papers. She tells him that she has always loved him, and Philip looks forward to a happy future—in God's country—with the woman of his choice.

MR. JACK HIRES A STENOGRAPHER (Vitagraph—May 1).—The cast: Mr. Jack (Frank Daniels); His Wife (Rose E. Tapley); His Stenographer (Betty Howe); His Clerk (J. P. Tucker). Written by Bruno Lessing. Produced by C. J. Williams.

Mr. Jack now dictates his mail through a screen. And if you saw what was on the other side of the screen, you'd give him credit for being a sensible man. In advertising for a "steno," Jack, with an eye for feminine charm, specifies "good looking." After considerable difficulty, he secures a "pippin." She knows nothing about stenography, but with Mr. Jack this is no drawback. They become friends, and he allows her to believe him single. When wifey enters, things look quite gloomy for Jack, but he gets out of the difficulty by telling the astonished girl that she is a "looney" cousin who thinks she is his wife.

Later, Mrs. Jack sees Jack and the girl in an affectionate pose. Once more Jack shows himself equal to the occasion by explaining that the stenographer is "looney" and he is trying to humor her. Mrs. Jack makes sure that the "crazy key pounder" gets the grand bounce. Jack meets the girl once more at lunch, and when wifey appears on the scene Jack beats a hasty exit, disguised as a table, leaving the impression that he is the "looniest" of the trio. The Mrs. then hires an ancient stenographer for Jack, whose only redeeming feature is her ability to write letters well. Jack saves himself much mental agony by using the aforementioned screen.

HIS DUKESHIP, MR. JACK (Vitagraph—May 8).—The cast: Mr. Jack (Frank Daniels); Mrs. Jack (Miss Alice Washburn); Daisy, a young heiress (Miss Adele De Garde); Daisy's Aunt (Miss Ida L. Williams); The Duke (Ed Favor). Written by Bruno Lessing.

As a bundle carrier, Mr. Jack is a first-class "chicken chaser." Wifey takes him to the department store, intending to use him as an express wagon on the return trip, but she is left in the lurch when Daisy, a pretty heiress, saunters by. Following heiresses is second nature with Mr. Jack, and when he overtakes her, he makes a bit by allowing her to think him the Duke de Pazaz. A reception is held at the girl's home, and Jack gets a job as butler. Still thinking him the Duke, Daisy feels very romantic when she sees him disguising himself as a butler just to be near her.

Jack makes himself a general nuisance as butler and gets himself in various kinds of trouble, but the real fireworks start when the original and genuine Duke de Pazaz appears and asks to be announced. Jack uses his new method of announcing, which consists chiefly of throwing the party to be announced into a spare room, stealing his hat, coat and cane, and then locking the door. He gets his brain working once more when the Mrs. appears at the front door, and waits impatiently for admittance. Seeing the baker in the kitchen, Mr. Jack distracts his attention for a moment and steals his tray, which he uses to cover his face as he passes his better half at the door. He then "borrows" the baker's wagon, and beats a hasty retreat, meanwhile enjoying tasty French pastries "on the house."

BRITTON OF THE SEVENTH (Vitagraph—Five Parts—May 8).—The cast: Lieut. Tony Britton, at 30 (Darwin Karr), at 70 (Charles Kent); General Bobby (Bobby Connelly); Barbara Manning (Eleanor Woodruff); General Custer (Ned Finley); Captain Granson (Harry Northrup); Frances Granson (Eulalie Jensen); Rain-in-the-Face (Logan Paul); Otanowah (Marion Henry); Madge Eversly (Rose E. Tapley). Scenario written by Jasper Ewing Brady. Produced by Lionel Belmore.

"Things are different now, Bobby. The Seventh is down in Mexico now after a bandit, but they're prepared. When your granddad was in the Seventh, we had old-fashioned muskets and sabres and poor means of communication. Feel sleepy, Bobby? All right, grandpop will put you to bed." 'Twas Tony Britton who spoke; Britton of the Seventh, now old and gray, speaking to his little grandson who was busy mapping out an important campaign in Mexico, with tin soldiers. He then put the youngster to bed and resigned himself to reminiscences of his life as a soldier.

Once more he sees old "Rain-in-the Face" making love to Otanowah, and she demands that he prove his bravery by laying the scalp of a pale-face at her feet. Rain ambushes and kills two soldiers of the Seventh and next day their scalps are presented to Otanowah. The news of the murder gets to camp.

At this time Britton was in love, or thought he was, with Frances Granson, whose husband was a brute. When Barbara Manning came to the fort, he knew that he never had loved Frances, but he could not summon up the courage to tell her. Now, in his reverie, Britton sees himself set out with Tom Custer at the head of two troops, in search of the red murderer. Once more, he asks Barbara for her hand in marriage, and is told to return after the search. Rain is caught; and the whole tribe is incensed at his capture. The red devil is thrown into jail and forgotten, until one day his cell is found empty; Rain has escaped, leaving a threat to have the heart of old Captain Yates.

Granson leaves the post, to be gone ten days, and his wife, tired of his abuse, determines to desert him. She implores Britton to run away with her. He promises to take her as far as the station, for in those days it was a perilous trip, and after much pleading on her part, says he might possibly continue. On reaching home, he reconsiders his decision and sends a note to her, telling that under no circumstances will he go further. He meets her and they ride away. Thinking she had received his note, Britton makes no mention of it. That night Granson returns unexpectedly to the post, finds the note, and conceals it. He then starts in pursuit. Along the trail Britton hears shots behind him, and turns to see Granson, trying to hold off four Indians. Though he knows Granson for a cur, the honor of the Seventh demands that he help him out, so he lends the aid of his pistol to drive off the redskins. At the station Frances begs Britton to continue with her, claiming that she had not received his note, but she is not believed and Britton returns to the fort after putting her on the train. At the post he finds himself accused of conduct unbecoming an officer; and his accuser is the man whose life he had just saved. He is compelled to resign in disgrace.

Then the redskins go on the war path, and the Seventh is ordered after them. Britton starts out to do scout duty. He carries valuable information to Custer, who allows him to join Eversly's forces. He begs Reno to push forward and save Custer, but it is all to no avail. Then—too late—they do advance; to find that vast field covered with the dead bodies of their comrades who died fighting in that hell hole. The body of Yates is found terribly mutilated—Rain fulfilled his threat. The tears come to Britton's eyes as he recalls that tragic sight.

Then Britton faints from the loss of blood. When he awakes he is given the note which caused all the trouble. It had been found tightly clutched in the lifeless hand of Granson, who died as a man if he had not lived as one. Britton is exonerated, then reinstated with honor. His name cleared, he marries Barbara, who always believed in his innocence. And now, after reviewing the events of years gone by, his fondest wish is that little Bobby shall grow up to be a soldier—a soldier of the Seventh.

KERNEL NUTT, THE JANITOR (May 15).—The cast: Kernel Nut (Frank Daniels); his wife (Alice Washburn). Written by Charles Brown. Directed by C. Jay Williams.

Nutt finds it impossible to concentrate his mind on fixing radiators when a pretty blond stenographer is in the room. He therefore concentrates on the "steno" instead, and is requested, by the point of a masculine boot, to leave the room. Poor Nutt, a lover of peaceful slumber, is forced by friend wife, to seek employment. He gets a job as janitor, makes himself an all-around nuisance and is finally handed the "grand razoo." This pleases him greatly until the vision of the Mrs. waiting for him with a rolling pin, appears before him. He concludes that it would be safer for him to sleep on the premises.

He is awakened from his snoozing by sounds from the superintendent's office and on investigating finds two burglars looting the safe. They are both friends of his, so he plays poker for the "haul" and wins it. They leave him in possession of it when the "bulls" appear on the scene. Nutt then tells a thrilling tale of his battle with the "yeggs" and the grateful superintendent rewards him by offering him his job back. Nutt disdainfully refuses his kind offer and struts majestically from the room. At home wifey is glad to see him, or rather, the young fortune which he had extracted from the roll before returning it to the "supe."

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

WAREHAM THEATER, MANHATTAN, KANSAS.

H. P. Wareham Establishes in This City a Luxurious Picture Palace—Spent $15,000 in Remodeling Structure—Uses Sturtevant Ventilation System—Seats 1,100.

ONE of the most luxurious and the best equipped photoplay houses west of the Mississippi river is the Wareham theater. It is located in Manhattan, Kansas, and is owned and managed by Harry P. Wareham. The management has spent $15,000 in remodeling this pleasure palace. A great deal of the money spent has not been spent where it can be seen, but has been expended in so arranging the house that for arrangment and convenience it can be compared favorably with picture theaters in larger cities. The capacity of the auditorium is 1,100, and each seat is upholstered. An undistorted view of the screen can be had from any angle of the seating plan.

Wareham Theater and Airdome, Manhattan, Kan.

There are no posts in the theater. The balcony, though containing 400 seats, does not rest on pillars. It is supported on steel arches. The decorations are done in elaborate but tasteful manner. They are the work of skilled men. One of the richest features of the decorations is the velvet curtain. This was made specially to the order of Mr. Wareham. It measures 23 by 27 feet and contains 727 square feet of the heaviest specially woven velvet. The operating room has been constructed in such a manner that all fire laws and regulations have been more than complied with. The walls, ceiling and floor of the room are of asbestos and should there be any sort of an accident it would be confined to this room. There is a steel cabinet for the storing of reels which are not in immediate use. Two projection machines are employed.

Interior of Wareham Theater, Manhattan, Kan.

The ventilation system of the Wareham theater is so perfect that there is practically no stale air in the auditorium even when it is packed to its capacity. The system installed is Sturtevant. An air shaft that reaches high above the smokes and vapors of the business district supplies the air that is sucked and blown into the theater. There are two giant fans, electrically driven, which cause the circulation of this air. In the winter this current of air is blown across a series of steam radiators. In summer the air current is driven through a spray of iced water. One of the giant fans is located at the bottom of the air shaft below the floor of the stage. The other is on the roof of the building. The one below sucks the air down the shaft and blows it across the radiators or through the water spray. The one on the roof sucks out the vitiated air, aiding the one in the basement.

DREAMLAND THEATER, GALENA, ILL.

Two years ago the Dreamland theater, Galena, Ill., was opened by H. C. Clauer. It met with popular approval at its dedication, and by the application of efficient business methods and by a careful study of the likes and dislikes of his patrons Mr. Clauer has been able to keep his little photoplay house well before the eyes of the populace. It has a pretty and artistic interior, and its furnishing and projection equipment are modern. There are 216 seats in the auditorium, and a clear perspective of the screen can be had from any one of them.

Dreamland Theater, Galena, Ill.

Two shows a day are given—the first at 7:30, and the other at 9:00. Matinees are given on Saturdays only. The program is made up of Paramount and Metro pictures. Mr. Clauer has learned that his patrons are only too willing to pay a reasonable price for a good entertainment, so he has fixed his prices at 15 cents for adults and 10 cents for children. "Quality and not quantity is what the patrons of the Dreamland look for," says Mr. Clauer. The Dreamland does quite a lot of advertising, and it has its own private billboards situated in prominent places in Galena. The Dreamland is a fireproof theater. The aisles are wide, the projection clear, the attendants courteous, and the ventilation perfect. In short, it is a cozy little place to seek an evening's recreation.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND.,

March 28th 1916

Wagner Electric Mfg. Co.
Saint Louis Mo.

Gentlemen:

We have used for the past three years a Wagner Converter at the Arc Theatre and this is the first letter we have written you about our equipment.

It has been used steadily every day, six days a week, and we have never had one minute's trouble with it. We get a brilliant, steady, white light, easy to control and have good success with American made carbons.

The reason for this letter is this: My father Mr. James P. Grimes, owner of the American Steam Laundry, wishes to purchase a direct current generator, to be driven from his steam engine. I have advised him that if he could get a Wagner outfit, he would make no mistake and would reduce trouble and bother to a minimum; so he has asked me to write you. If you can fit him out I would advise that you write him, addressing your letter to the laundry, and he will give you the number of irons, etc., that they use so you can advise them the size generator they should buy.

You have the right to use this letter at any time you may desire to print or show to other exhibitors who may be in the market for a direct current outfit.

I remain

Very truly yours

S E Grimes

Manager.

but pleased to the extent of recommending the purchase of other products to his friends. Please note this is not simply the OPINION of this customer, it is fact founded on the great teacher EXPERIENCE. Reliability, continuity of service, dependability, freedom from trouble or repairs—call it what you will, it is the most important factor TO YOU in the purchase of projecting apparatus.

To neglect to investigate

is an injustice to yourself and your patrons.

Let us send Bulletin 10923 and a booklet "Standing Room Only"—a collection of letters from more than satisfied customers. You may know some of them. Write today.

OUR FORESIGHT MEANT YOUR PROTECTION!!

Ten days after the outbreak of war we received the largest stock of French-made condensers ever shipped into this country!

That's why we are able to offer you now

THE KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSER

at before-war-time prices. Foreign factories formerly engaged in the manufacture of optical goods for the entire world now devote their sole energies to war merchandise for their own countries, thus making possible the distribution of inferior, cheaply made and costly-in-the-long-run-domestic substitutes.

KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSERS are ground from pure optical glass. They do not discolor—no green, pink or purple effects after a brief use. They are the only satisfactory condensers on the American market today. If you are not using them you are not obtaining maximum results from your projection equipment.

PRICES:

Plano Convex

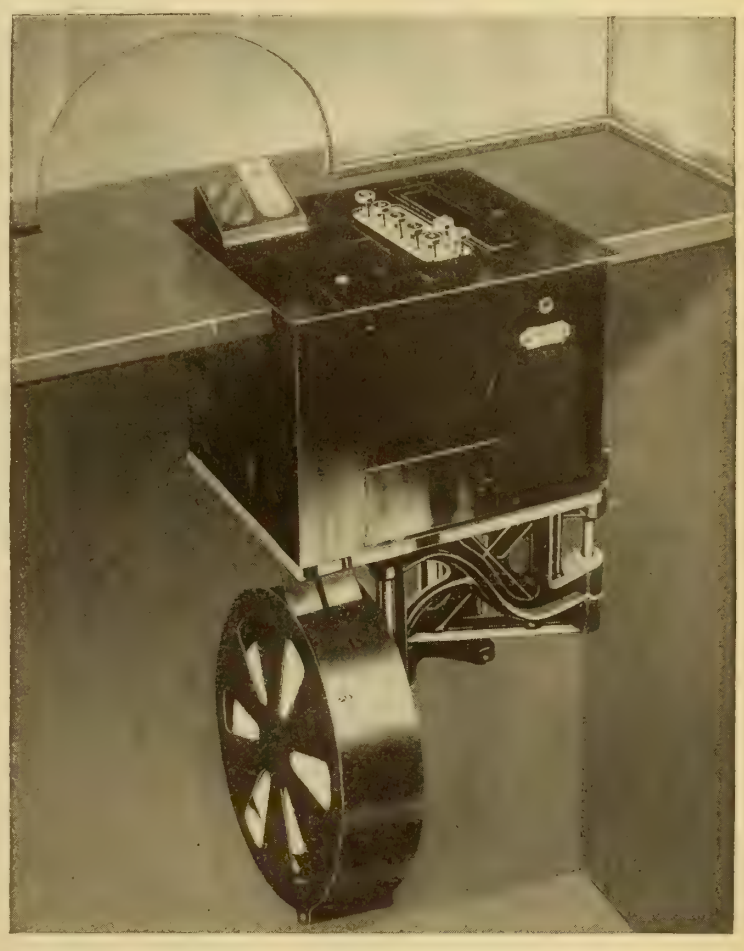
The Two-Color Ticket-Printing and Ticket-Issuing National Cash Register

The new system for Motion Picture Theaters that saves time, registers the money, and prevents loss.



It prints tickets of two different prices.

Each price ticket is printed on a different color paper.

It gives quick service, prevents crowding at ticket window, pleases patrons.

It is cheaper than buying printed tickets.

It is safer—tickets have no value to patron or employee until printed, recorded, and sold.

No need to tie up money in a stock of preprinted tickets.

Tickets are printed both front and back—wording may be changed as often as desired.

We make 14 different styles and sizes of ticket-printing registers—prices from $75 to $230.

Fill out the coupon and our nearest agent will call and show you this new money-saving Ticket-Printing Cash Register.

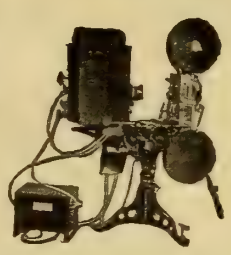
I Am the STANDARD

To Me the exhibitor is indebted for many improvements—the two-thousand-ft. magazines and reels, the larger lamphouse, the motor drive, etc.

To Me the exhibitor is indebted for perfect projection plus greatest ease of operation; for durability, economy, the elimination of a great number of projection annoyances.



"MASTER MODEL" Projector

To Me the operator owes the ready manipulation of STANDARD simplicity, the construction that makes it possible for him to provide the maximum in operation with minimum effort.

To Me the public owes the rock-steady, flickerless, clearly-defined pictures that enables them to really enjoy the photoplay.

WHY BE IMPOSED UPON?

Buy the genuine, which you can obtain for one-half less money than the imitation.

The genuine five-year guaranteed screen — MIRROROID

—Why was it that 25 Mirroroid screens were shipped to the Eastern Counties Film Service, Ipswich, England, this past week, also one Mirroroid, size 19 by 25 feet, to British Guiana, South America in addition to shipments all over the United States?

SEAMLESS! SEAMLESS! 33⅓ Cents Sq. Foot. $3.00 Sq. Yard Shipments in One Hour. Why Suffer Delays?

Three Tints, Silver White, Silver Flesh, Pale Gold. Two Finishes, Rough or Matte. One Price, 33⅓ cents per sq. foot. Ask any of the 9500 Mirroroid users. Let us send you 12x18 samples. Test! Compare! Use the brains God gave you.

MIRROROID SCREENS ARE SOLD, NOT GIVEN AWAY FOR ADVERTISING PURPOSES

Why take the "Say So" of Mirroroid imitators? Investigate before you buy.

TransVerteR

Perfect Light Control

Easy As Turning Gas Up Or Down

When a film demands more or less light, you can always get it as you need it with Transverter equipment.

At the will of the operator, the amperage can readily be regulated to light or dark pictures as easily as turning gas up or down.

At the same time, the voltage lowers or increases automatically in proportion to the changing length of the arc.

The Transverter is the last word in projection equipment. It insures a perfect arc, a steady, bright, white light, and more artistic projection of pictures without waste of current.

If you want better pictures, larger attendances and bigger profits, you need the Transverter.

offers theatre owners something for which there is a real need. Fortunately it is not an extra expense but an added source of profit because it—

Does away with the free kids.

Increases the patronage of children; also the adults who come with children.

Attracts patronage of adults who won't now attend because of discomfort of holding children on their laps.

Attracts patronage from theatres not equipped with Foco chairs.

FOCO Chairs cost new only a few cents more than ordinary chairs. Made in all sizes and finishes. Old chairs can be converted into Foco Chairs at considerably less than the cost of new chairs. Leading chair companies are licensed to make Foco Chairs and can supply you.

Write for booklet showing reel of actual chairs in use.

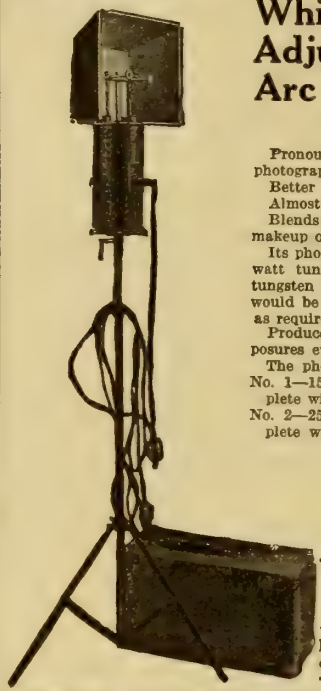
NORTHERN LIGHT

10,000 and 14,000 Candle Power White Flame Self Adjusting Portable Arc for Home or Studio Use



Pronounced by Experts the most wonderful artificial photographic light yet produced.

Better than direct Sunlight.

Almost duplicates June Sunlight plus blue sky.

Blends with daylight and positively dispenses with makeup of any sort.

Its photographic value is 160 times as great as a 750-watt tungsten lamp—consequently 20 times as many tungsten lamps and 6 times as much electric power would be required to obtain the same time of exposure as required by one Northern Light.

Produced fully timed negatives on 16 per second exposures even with close up subjects.

The photographic sensation of the season.

No. 1—15 amp. lamp, 10,000 candle power, complete with collapsible stand and case $48.00

No. 2—25 amp. lamp, 14,000 candle power, complete with collapsible stand and case..... $58.00

The Woman Paid!

The Hebraic Commandment was plain. It was not based on sentiment, but on the immutable law that the wages of sin is death.

The woman was beautiful; she had wealth; the world was at her feet. But she forgot the ancient law; she sinned.

The woman paid; she paid in days of burning agony, in nights of feverish torture. Through suffering she atoned, but the scarlet scar remained to sear her soul as no branding iron ever burned.

Sprang into her life mother-love for a daughter forgotten, a girl pure and undefiled. In the blackness of the night she cried aloud for her own flesh. But there was no answering call, no soft cheek to nestle against her breast. The brand of shame had come between.

Mother-love had made the supreme sacrifice to save her loved one from her own shame. The woman paid; she paid in an agony of blood and tears, with a suffering it is given no man to know.

This is the terrible lesson in "That Sort," Essanay's five-act feature photoplay taken from the drama of Basil McDonald Hastings. It is a picture that will stir every woman to the depths of the heart; that will make men weep.

It features Essanay's great emotional actress, Warda Howard, supported by Duncan McRae, Ernest Maupain and John Lorenz. Directed by Charles J. Brabin and released through the V. L. S. E.

THE SERIAL WONDERFUL THE SERIAL UNIQUE THE SERIAL EXTRAORDINARY

The ADVENTURES of PEG O' THE RING

ALREADY A SMASHING SUCCESS

In Hundreds of Cities

We looked for a quick and ready response from Exhibitors in booking "Peg O' the Ring," because Universal Serials are popular. But we did not expect to be swamped, snowed under by an avalanche of bookings such as have flooded 73 Exchanges by mail, wire, phone and personal calls.

But we might have known at that. No other serial has ever had the many unique features of this—the first and only circus serial ever presented. All the fascinating glitter and glamor of the circus; all the huge advertising possibilities; all the tremendous following of those two popular serial stars

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford

With high salaried performers in genuine circus acts under the big top and on the sawdust arena picturized for the first time; with fifteen weeks—thirty reels—of the most thrilling and absorbing situations of love, of romance, of circus life, of adventure, of dare-devil stunts—with the most lavish production of any serial ever filmed—"Peg O' the Ring" is destined to set a new standard of Serial success—and make more money for Exhibitors than they have ever made before on a serial.

Extra Special—Important Notice

Now—before the supply is exhausted—Write for the most elaborate Advertising Campaign Book ever issued for any moving picture. Cover in six colors and gold. Sixteen large pages filled with advertising suggestions, ready prepared advertising campaign; slides, novelties in hundreds, scores of advertising props that will make your advertising for this remarkable Universal Serial the biggest and most successful you have ever done. RED FEATHER PHOTOPLAYS

The UNIVERSAL GREATEST PROGRAM ON EARTH

WEEK after week, a steady stream of letters keeps pouring in from exhibitors all over this country. READ those printed below and remember that people are people the world over.

D. E. Stewart, manager of the Red Mill Theatre, Hamilton, Ont., writes: "As the oldest Universal exhibitor in Canada, I feel that I ought to say a few words concerning the success of a mixed program policy WHICH I HAVE HELD TO UNINTERRUPTEDLY FOR OVER FIVE YEARS. I have taken nothing but Universal program AND HAVE SUCCEEDED WONDERFULLY. In Canada the past two years have been exceptionally trying and ONLY THE FITTEST HOUSES HAVE SURVIVED THE STRAIN. Certainly a program of mixed reels is the thing."

P. J. Nolan of the Rex Theatre, Ottawa, says: "The Rex Theatre in Ottawa HAS BEEN MAKING GOOD PROFITS USING UNIVERSAL SERVICE, WHILE MANY OTHER HOUSES USING FEATURES ALONE HAVE BEEN WORKING AT A DEAD LOSS."

Harry Pomeroy of the Belmont Theatre, Toronto, writes: "We have strong opposition in the residential section of Toronto, where one might suspect that the big features would be the best drawing card. However, with the REGULAR UNIVERSAL PROGRAM, we have been filling the house, playing to capacity WEEK AFTER WEEK."

If there is the least doubt in your mind as to which is the best plan for you to pursue, get busy and ASK YOUR PEOPLE. Take a test vote every night for a week or every afternoon or as often as you like.

Don't rely on your own judgment. ASK YOUR PATRONS! Then write or wire your nearest Universal Exchange for the Universal Program.

Flora Parker DeHaven in "The Madcap." From the story by the celebrated author and artist, George Gibbs. Nineteenth Red Feather Production. Directed by Wm. C. Dowlan. Released June 5. It's a dangerous thing for a young woman as pretty as Flora to throw conventions to the winds, no matter how innocent her intentions may be. You see she was very rich, and she had tried everything wealth and position had to offer—even to driving a racing car and an aeroplane, and she was bored. Didn't know what to do to kill time, and when she met the big silent portrait painter, who was inclined to ignore her, she enjoyed him as a novelty. He set out for a week's walking trip and she went with him. Of course they were discovered and what everyone said was a-plenty, you can be sure of that. It is a situation that will grip your audiences, and establish Flora Parker DeHaven more surely than ever as a star who can get it over whether it is emotions, heart throbs or light and joyful romance and love making. Book this for the treat it will give your patrons and for the prestige it will bring your house.

Herbert Rawlinson in "The Rose Colored Scarf." With dainty Agnes Vernon. Three Reel Gold Seal Romantic Society Drama. Directed by Wm. Worthington. Released June 6. It's a darned lucky thing for Herbert that he kept that piece of rose colored scarf in his pocketbook for two long years, because Agnes surely thought he'd forgotten her, until he flashed the fragment for an alibi. Herbert loved her all right, but as her father's chauffeur he had about as much right or chance to win her as the man in the moon, even though he was born a gentleman. Agnes plotted to make him see things different and luck, love and her woman's wits all being on her side she won hands down, no arms up around her neck. A bully picture that will please every audience, make 'em feel good all over and thank you for three reels of "regular" entertainment.

"Object Matrimony." With Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby. Two Reel Victor Comedy-Drama. Released June 7. Harry's object was matrimony all right, but he was so darned busy making love to Rosemary that he lost his job. Then he became a professional fiance for a marriage broker, showing up at Rosemary's house with a pocketful of phoney engagement rings. Dodging widows with large families and old maids with cats and parrots soon put Harry on the blink so he collected his salary and—well, what would you do if the girl was willing? A lot of fun.

"Alias Jane Jones." With Edna Maison and Edward Hearn. Two Reel Laemmle Detective Drama. Directed by Ray Meyers. Released June 8. This is a double-barreled detective story; at first it masquerades as a crook story and you don't know whether to sympathize with Edna, the lovely confidence woman, or not. But when you find out that she loves Edward you're glad to learn that she is the cleverest of women detectives, and they can get the license whenever they want to.

"The Scorpion's Sting." Three Reel Imp Melodrama. Released June 9. I don't care how highbrow a person is, he (or she) simply craves good, old blood and thunder mellerdrama every so often, and sometimes oftener. And here you've got it. A chance for everyone to be a dyed-in-the-wool gallery god for a while; to see the villain suffer and the hero triumph; crime punished and virtue rewarded and a close-up with the hero and hero-wine in each other's arms. Splendidly acted, lavishly produced and directed with great judgment.

"The Cage Man." With G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson. Two Reel 101-Bison Drama of Revenge. Directed by Jacques Jaccard. Released June 10. One of the most unusual stories of the season. The lucky rival for the hand of a beautiful girl soon neglects her for his club and the poker table. The unsuccessful one is a doctor who chivalrously protects the lonely wife, and successfully controls his passion. In a drunken rage the husband shoots at the doctor, misses him but kills a policeman called by the butler to stop the fight. The husband goes to prison, serves his time and is released—with but one idea burned into his maddened brain—REVENGE. What follows makes the biggest and tensest situations followed by a most unexpected climax you have ever seen, and finishes a remarkable and fascinating picture.

Ben Wilson in "The Sheriff of Pine Mountain." With Dorothy Phillips. Two Reel Rex Drama of the North. Directed by Ben Wilson. Released June 11. Ben is always there when it comes to the red blooded rugged, manly stuff and your audiences will be glad to revel in this picture of the Northern snows on the hot days of June following release date. While this is a story of mistaken identity, it is worked up in a new and novel manner that makes it one of the most original stories of the year.

THE unprecedented leap to popularity of the remarkable screen productions appearing under the BLUEBIRD brand is readily understood when the character of the releases, past and proposed, is considered.

Few photoplay features can measure up to the standard of "John Needham's Double," "The Crippled Hand," "The Gilded Spider," or "Elusive Isabel," to mention a few of the most recent BLUEBIRD releases; while Tyrone Power and Lois Weber in "The Eye of God," a notable Lois Weber production, and Rupert Julian in "Naked Hearts," based on Lord Tennyson's "Maud," established a new standard in the art of the photodrama.

You are advised to watch for the announcements of current BLUEBIRD releases. It is your duty to your patrons to give them an opportunity to judge for themselves of BLUEBIRD quality. It is your privilege to book BLUEBIRD Photoplays and establish for your house an unusual and desirable prestige.

A BIG THEATRE THAT WAS TOO SMALL

The Strand Theatre, New York, is one of the finest and biggest theatres in the United States. When it was opened the wiseacres said, "It's too big—you'll never fill it. Besides, motion pictures won't last long anyway!"

The wiseacres were wrong. They usually are. Motion pictures—particularly the Lasky kind—never were more popular than at the present time.

When the Strand Theatre played Lasky's Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," 144,000 persons paid admission in one week.

Last week on the same screen "Maria Rosa" with the same star and produced by the same company was presented. All previous attendance records were smashed.

That's what the public thought about "Maria Rosa."

This is what the New York Newspapers Thought:

THE TIMES—"Maria Rosa" is as good if not a better picture than "Carmen."

THE AMERICAN—Attracted a record audience, and the scenes were applauded as if the actors themselves were portraying them instead of their likenesses.

THE HERALD—Miss Farrar another fiery film heroine.

THE TRIBUNE—As the love-tossed Maria Rosa Geraldine Farrar is superb.

THE WORLD—Miss Farrar's work apparently pleased the audience more than her "Carmen."

THE SUN—Beautifully achieved. "Maria Rosa" far above the average.

A UNANIMOUS VERDICT!

TOM MIX!!

Tom Mix, bless his ole pictur, is the only honest-to-goodness cowboy in th' movies.

Yep! He's the only eighteen carat rough rider, roper and marksman!

Tom Mix is there with the stuff.

He's the only man in the movies today who has a following among those who know how to ride, and shoot, and rope.

When Tom Mix pictureplays are flashed on the screen the public appreciates that the real dope in the cowboy line is being presented.

Tom Mix, who crams his pictureplays chock full of daring exploits, and who is in an exclusive class when it comes to Western stunts, appears only on the General Film program.

A series of Tom Mix comedies are in course of preparation.

Tom Mix comes across with "Crooked Trails" for release Saturday, June 3rd.

A mother anxiously awaits the return of her son—

She is tricked by an unscrupulous lawyer to believe of his death in a ship-wreck—

He persuades the mother to make her companion, whom he intends to marry, heir to the estate—

In her last moments the son returns—

The lawyer's plans are frustrated when the companion becomes the wife of the son—

Poverty, love and luxury are all combined in this screen drama which is another example of

THE POWER OF THE PRESS

IN practically every large centre, V. L. S. E. pictures are reviewed by the newspapers in the same manner that legitimate stage productions are treated.

The following excerpt from the "Cleveland Plain Dealer" will illustrate the tremendous publicity which editors are putting behind these pictures of their own initiative and solely on the merits of the productions.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer

V. L. S. E. Producing Companies are hitting the high spots. Charlie Chaplin's "Carmen" and "The Ne'er Do Well" are two of the big certain money makers of the year, while exhibitors regard "Dollars and the Woman" as the best five-reel feature seen in many months.

Now Vitagraph rings the bell again with "God's Country and the Woman". This is an eight-reel feature of which we shall have more to say later. The reader can look out for this picture. It is one of the big things of the season. Some of the New York critics hail it as the greatest production of the year. We have seen it and hasten to assure the fans that it is something to look forward to.

If you seek those productions which are accompanied by the power and the prestige of the press, you would do well to book V. L. S. E. offerings regularly.

Gentlemen:

You will be interested to know what I did with "Carmen."

Well, there were three surprises.

First, the high class of patrons attracted, inclusive of Governor Johnson himself.

Second, the smashing of all box office records.

Third, that Sacramento is a good picture town if you give them the goods.

Any picture that will attract like this is cheap at the price.

We lined them up as early as 7:30 and kept them that way for five days.

Facts and Comments

SOME exhibitors have mooted the question whether the ordinary rules of credit applying in other lines of business ought not to be extended to the film field. One man from a city in the Middle West said he had been paying his film bills in advance for a good many years and still was paying them in advance. Lately when he was asked by his bank to give references he hesitated, giving the name of the exchange he was dealing with for, he said, "a man compelled to pay his bills in advance is not looked upon as a good risk by the bank."

Of course there are two sides to this as to every other question. One thing, however, will be admitted by all: The man who pays promptly ought not to be made to suffer for the slow and uncertain accounts. A fair syste of rating the exhibitor might offer a solution. We will be glad to publish suggestions on the point.

IN our last issue we reported no less than three motion picture expositions all being held practically at the same time. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has repeatedly expressed its belief that one grand annual exposition is all the industry needs and the experiences of the recent past have confirmed our belief. This one grand annual exposition ought to command the generous co-operation of all branches of the industry.

NO one more than film men and especially exhibitors approve of the recent decision by the courts as to the punishable character of advertisements. We have both state and Federal laws seeking to make advertisers stick to the truth and making them liable for obvious misrepresentations. The law is of the greatest benefit to the honest advertiser and it ought to help the dishonest or reckless advertising in his efforts to resist temptation. Of course the law plainly applies to false statements about circulation. Newspapers and trade publications are amenable to this law.

WE are credibly informed that churches all over the country are busily collecting signatures on petitions to be presented to Congress in favor of the Smith-Hughes censorship bill. We earnestly hope that the film men will not be found asleep at the switch. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is pointing the way. Read the article in this week's issue and then send for our blanks and use them conscientiously. Delay may be dangerous.

A NEWSPAPER out in Iowa assures its readers that a man "may become drunk on motion pictures." We agree. He may if he sees too many at one sitting. That's one of the reasons we are opposed to more than seven reels at one session and seven reels is our maximum. Personally we prefer five or six and most of the intelligent patronage of motion pictures is with us. An exhibitor who overfeeds his audience with pictures is various kinds of a fool.

ALMOST every one of our readers must be interested in projection. We advise them all to ponder Mr. Richardson's fine lecture on that all-important subject. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD surely has done its share toward doing away with bad projection and all its bad consequences. We cannot help mentioning one common fault. It is a fault which we are sorry to say is found in some of the supposedly best theaters in the country and one which could easily be avoided. We are referring to overspeeding. The President, in his recent speech at the dinner at the Biltmore, mentioned overspeeding as something that made him hesitate to patronize the pictures. Personally we feel like throwing a brick at the screen whenever the overspeeding starts. Perhaps we are throwing the brick in the wrong direction.

THE impressive showing made by the opponents of the Christman-Wheeler censorship measure at Albany is chiefly remarkable for this one thing: But one of the anti-censorship speakers directly represented the film interests. It is gradually becoming apparent to all thinking men that the fight against censorship is a fight against a vicious principle rather than a fight for dollars and cents.

The Light They Shed

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE critic can not be blamed for a sense of fatigue when he is called upon to witness a production whose denouement results from an overheard conversation or an intercepted letter. Producers of that sort of stuff should be compelled to pronounce "Overheard Conversation! Intercepted Letter!" fifty times a day until cured. The monotony of it has come to be so deadly that the very sight of a portiere, the director's steady prop, where a door should be, may be taken as a warning that the entire presentation is to be one of dreary artificiality, far removed from reality of life and sincerity of thought.

Business is business. "We have an actor on our hands, and we must find plays for him." "We have just bought a menagerie, and if we are to have a drama which is to be judged by its fidelity to the best principles of our social life, it must make concessions to the circus." Why should stuff patched together according to this or that purely mechanical formula be put in the same class as the work resulting from sincere creative impulse? The latter may only be a splendid attempt at art, but if it is an attempt to stir fine feeling and resolute thinking, it deserves critical encouragement—the shabby concession may well be relegated to pages of biased publicity.

Nine out of ten machine-made plays, lacking any real feeling or thought to start them going, minus heart and brains at their birth, may wander along through five reels of stock scenes only to end in some disappointing compromise. From start to finish they are about as cheering as a dinner in the home of your slightly-intoxicated friend when his wife does not expect you. They cause you to wish you were anywhere else.

In the matter of response to a demand for better pictures, there are producers of large means and honest aspirations who do not know how to go about it. Some of them do not even take pains to study the question. They plunge along determinedly, making lavish expenditure where it is wholly unnecessary, pruning down where they merely curtail the big essential, true artistry. They are engaged in artistically visualizing stories that either contain an insistence on things as they are, or that afford an escape from reality into the field of romance, yet some of them imagine that they are merely running a business.

That sort of procedure is responsible for the poorly-selected, badly-treated pictures which are demanded in a hurry, created in a hurry, edited in a hurry and sent broadcast as examples of what can be done in the new art. Practically every one of those widely-circulated examples of artistic incompetence casts a shadow wherever it goes, a shadow on the receipts of the exhibitor, a shadow on the hopes of audiences who look for something better, a shadow on the entire industry.

Among other causes of stupid production is vanity of the kind shown at exhibitions of blooded animals, where the man with the most money gets the blue ribbon for a purchased dog or horse and accepts congratulations as if he really had something to do with the making of a winner. He may even believe that he took a chance when he paid out his good money. Another cause is the unfounded belief that a director who has done well with fine material can be handed a bunch of stale scenarios and evolve from them a lot of brilliant and compelling dramas of the screen, prize-winners sired by strays who have been foraging among the dams of plagiarism.

The story whose high point depends on old theatrical tricks like the overheard conversation and the intercepted letter, or one whose artistic merits must be sacrificed to suit something the producer happens to have on hand, a star or a circus, can not be other than mechanical. A dramatist may consider certain interpreters who would do well in the roles he is creating; it may even help to keep certain images in mind, but the highest kind of interest in a play depends upon action and reaction between character and experience, neither of which are drawn from the theatre, but from life as visible to all of us.

Now we may set up a hero who tries to do all the good he can, a villain who thwarts him to the very end and a much-persecuted heroine who erred through her affections. These are only manikins to whom are arbitrarily assigned a settled line of conduct. For the modern audience they have the reminiscent interest of a Punch-and-Judy show—we can recall that they once amused us, but they afford no insight into the workings of the human mind, none into the human heart. People in manikin plays interest us about as much as do those who pass in the street.

Why does the villain do the deed? We are not deeply impressed that he does it until he is made human and we are shown his temptations, his faltering, his impelling hate, his restraining fear, all that goes to demonstrate that he need not be beyond the reach of our sympathies, even in doing wrong. From the moment that light is thrown on the workings of human character that character becomes fascinating. High interest does not depend upon mechanical incident, and there is nothing a real star longs for so much as a role which throws light on the workings of the human mind and heart.

The weakness of present-day production lies in the assignment of false values. The business man who is blundering around in it really does not know where to place his money to advantage. The natural trend of his own ability is toward distribution. To him a market is the first essential. He has been compelled in other lines to either create a market or to conquer one in existence by commercial methods. Office efficiency, factory system, selling force, publicity cleverness, all these appeal to him as first requisites, but what do they really amount to when a play does not win on its own merit? Is good will established on a basis of fine quality or on a lack of it?

Plays of fine quality shed light on human character or on what is affecting the human heart and human mind of today. Even farce may throw searching rays on our foibles and follies, and there is scarcely a production succeeding on stage or screen that is lacking in social significance.

In the midst of a period of publicity-created stars, with salaries soaring like war stocks, producers are beginning to look around in vain for men really capable of writing plays for movie stars, just as on the stage, which the stars have left because no playwright of ability would provide what is exacted. The stupidity of regarding drama as an instrument for a popular actor instead of a vehicle for thought and feeling, which the popular actor may interpret has emptied some of the finest theatres, but it may prevail for a while, even in the midst of our celebrating our recognition of creative genius as exemplified in The Gentleman from Stratford, who told us all plainly that "The play's the thing."

Masterpieces

By W. Stephen Bush.

LET me tell you the story of an exhibitor who has a just grievance against a press agent parading in the disguise of a reviewer. Of course you will know at once he is not on the staff of The Moving Picture World.

The exhibitor in question had his eye on a certain picture, but he was not sure whether he wanted it. He was waiting for a review of the picture. The "review" came. It was a frenzy of laudation. Epithets which would require revision if applied to the best picture ever made were thrown around with reckless abandon. Deducting fifty per cent. it was still a masterpiece. The exhibitor felt his last doubt vanish before the sun of so much certainty and forthwith booked the picture. Then he went ahead and advertised it and his patrons believed him, for he had always tried to tell them the truth. The picture came. It was pure fromage. Men and women went out slowly and sadly while the pictorial abortion was reeled off. Some of them looked reproachfully at my friend, the aforesaid exhibitor.

When the show was over the exhibitor rushed into his office and took a pair of scissors. He clipped the false review from the sheet which had deceived him and wrote out a little review himself. He was fair or at least tried to be, and then he pasted the foolish review on a piece of paper and placed his own review beside it. He put the "deadly parallel" into an envelope and sent it to the publication which had made him such a poor return for his subscription. He received a long and tearful letter of regret, but interesting as it was, it failed to make good the harm done by unconscionable puffing. There are editors who will sell their very soul for a page or two of advertising.

One Exhibitor's Remedy for Padding

By W. Stephen Bush.

SUCCESS in the business of exhibiting motion pictures depends more than ever it did on the personality of the exhibitor. The essence of personality is brains. Pleasant manners, an engaging appearance, courtesy, and other smaller elements of personality are of course important, but the power of thinking is the deciding factor. Here is a young exhibitor in a large city in the interior of this state who has added to the prestige of his theater and to the size of his bankroll by the simple expedient of taking the padded stuff out of five reel features that ought to have been cut before they were sent out.

"It's a tough job," he said to me, "but I find it pays. My audience has more than once complimented me on the good short features I am running. They notice the difference."

I asked him how much he cut out. He answered with the air of one who recollects a lot of hard work well done, that the padded stuff varied in length from 200 to 1,000 feet.

It has always struck me as a curious phenomenon that some exhibitors and buyers of negatives as well often inquire as to the length of a film as the prime consideration.

"If it is less than five reels I can't use it," or on the other, "if it is more than two reels it means nothing to me."

These men are dreadfully dogmatic about it too. They know just exactly what they want and their lips curl in fine scorn when you feebly attempt to talk about quality. These experts on length will tell you: "I don't care how good it is, if it isn't three reels I wouldn't buy it with counterfeit money."

Men who talk like that and who act as they talk will ruin the finest theater if they are allowed to practice their theories long enough. They do not realize that the value of every unit on their program depends entirely on quality and not at all on length.

Help to Fight Federal Censorship

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE fight against Federal Censorship will presently shift to the floor of the House of Representatives at Washington. A majority of the committee on education have agreed to report the Smith-Hughes Bill favorably. There will be a minority report against the bill. It is true that the numerous amendments to the bill make it less of an evil. The crude work of the fanatics who prepared the original bill in 1914 has almost entirely disappeared in the new bill. The bill even in its amended form is still objectionable because it contains the vicious principle of censorship. The Moving Picture World voices the almost unanimous sentiment of the industry in recording its everlasting protest against any legislation which imposes upon the motion picture a legal restraint prior to publication.

We urge every man interested in the freedom of the screen and in the proper development of the motion picture to get busy gathering signatures on petitions of protest against the passage of the Smith-Hughes Bill. What we want are the signatures of men and women who are not in any way connected with the production or exhibition of motion pictures. The Moving Picture World has prepared blank petitions which fill all the requirements. These blanks will be sent to all exhibitors who want to use them. The Moving Picture World and the motion picture exhibitors know that sound public sentiment is overwhelmingly Against Censorship of Motion Pictures. This is not a guess, but a well proven fact. The Moving Picture World took an active part in a direct appeal to the patrons of motion pictures in this state on the question of censorship. We published a careful analysis of the election figures, showing that in every county in which an active campaign had been waged the returns showed an increased majority against the proposed constitution. Another proof was the fight against censorship on the floor of the assembly at Albany. A dozen assemblymen rose in their seats opposing both the Ahern and the Cristman-Wheeler Bills in response to urgent requests from their home constituencies.

Let us, therefore, mobilize public sentiment for the fight on the floor of the House of Representatives. The minority report drafted and signed by the ablest men on the committee indicates that they will speak their minds on the floor. Every petition sent to Congress, every word of request to the members of the House will be an aid and a comfort to these unselfish and thoroughly American champions of freedom of expression. One fact in particular needs to be emphasized. This question of censorship has an importance far beyond film circles. It strikes at the foundations of liberty. It concerns every American who believes in American ideals and in American political institutions. We protest against censorship not only because it seeks to lay unjust hands on a great industry, not only because it means a blow to an art which must be a great factor in popular education, but chiefly because it violates both the letter and the spirit of the best traditions of American liberty.

Not a single sensible argument can be advanced in favor of Federal or any other kind of motion picture censorship.

Club Women to Discuss Pictures

General Federation of Women's Clubs Will Hold Motion Picture Conference During Big Convention in New York Beginning May 23—Picture Makers to Take Active Part.

By Betty Shannon.

FROM May 23 to June 3, thirty thousand of America's leading women will be gathered in New York City. The occasion will be the biennial meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and every state and city and county in the United States will be represented by at least one delegate. The most important phase of this tremendous gathering of intelligent American women to the motion picture industry is the fact that the motion picture is to be recognized for the first time by club women of the nation. At this meeting the motion picture is to given a prominent place on the program and motion picture men are to be allowed to speak for themselves.

It is only during the past year that club women have really bestirred themselves regarding the output of this, the fifth largest industry in the world. Gradually, with the awakening to the real vital power in the community—in their own communities—of the pictures on the screen, they have begun to consider what they have termed "the motion picture problem." At first, most of them were alarmed because they were not pleased with the type of pictures they knew their children and other people's children were seeing in the picture theaters. Their first thoughts were turned to censorship. Then the leading women of the country, the heads of important committees, the officers, began to see the injustice and the futility of censorship, either federal or state.

There will be many women from small communities and smaller cities in the west and south who will come with their hearts and minds set on censorship. But it is the determination of the leading women to educate the club women as a body up to the knowledge that nothing but a demand which pays producers in dollars and cents will give to them the sort of pictures that they want their children to see. It is not the adult film which seems so important to them. They are the home makers and the mothers of the nation, and it is the sort of pictures which they think safe for the children of the nation to see that they are seeking.

This is the first time since the very beginning of the General Federation of Women's Clubs that the General Federation has held its biennial meeting in New York City. It is the most auspicious time and place for the producers and exhibitors of the motion picture industry to really get in touch with these 30,000 women, who will go back to their local communities to tell the millions of people who couldn't come, to publish reports in their local newspapers, to interest their clubs, their schools, their churches, their business men, their congressmen and statesmen in whatever they hear in New York City.

There is to be one big conference devoted entirely to the motion picture. Mrs. Charles Cartwright, of Minneapolis, Minn., is the chairman of the Drama Department of the General Federation. She has arranged for a meeting to be held at the Seventh Regiment armory on Saturday afternoon, May 27, at 4 o'clock, at which not only all the women interested in motion pictures will be present, but motion picture producers and everyone actively engaged in the film industry will be welcome. The leading speaker will be Miss Mary Gray Peck, whose name is already familiar to most of the motion picture producers for her splendid attitude against censorship. She appeared at Albany on Thursday, May 11, speaking against censorship with the motion picture men who went to use their influence against the passage of the Cristman-Wheeler bill. Miss Peck's talk at the motion picture conference will be on "Censorship."

Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, of Boston, will give a talk on "Co-operation Between Club Women, Producer and Exhibitor to Provide Suitable Pictures for Children."

Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the National Board of Review, will discuss "The National Board of Review and the Child Problem."

The side of the motion picture producers—that side which has never been presented by an actual picture producer before directly to club women, and the side about which they know the least—will be presented in a talk by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. This program will be followed by an open discussion from the floor, in which the motion picture men are asked to join.

Three minute speeches will be made during this discussion by Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, editor of "Film Fun"; Miss Helen Duey, editor of the motion picture department of the "Woman's Home Companion"; Miss Mary Newell Eaton, of the Drama League of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Mrs. William Horton Foster, of the Community Service Motion Picture Company, of Boston.

The meeting will be presided over by three women—Mrs. Cartwright, already mentioned as chairman of the drama department, who has arranged the program; Miss Helen Varick Boswell, chairman of the Educational Committee, and Mrs. George Zimmerman, chairman of the Civic Committee. It is their one aim to give the American club women, and through them, since they are the leaders of the communities in which they live, the nation, a fair, clear idea of motion pictures from every standpoint, and to try to bring about between themselves and the producers of motion pictures an understanding about the market and demand which will be mutually beneficial.

The Motion Picture Board of Trade Will Take Active Part.

Through the efforts of Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, the editor of "Film Fun," the Motion Picture Board of Trade will take an active part, supplying the conference with moving picture equipment, operators and whatever pictures the women might want to use. There will, of course, be conferences held on all subjects in which the women are interested. The Conservation Department, Art, Literature, Education, Health, Civic, Household Economics Department and all the others will have special meetings. At any or all of these the Motion Picture Board of Trade will show any pictures available on those subjects.

J. W. Binder, secretary of the Board of Trade, and other members will be in attendance at the armory all the time to dispense information, and an exhibition room will be maintained in which pictures will be shown all the time.

Special exhibitions of children's programs and details of how children's programs may be run at a profit to exhibitors and thus made practical will be demonstrated.

The club women will be given a special performance at the Rialto theater by S. L. Rothapfel on Tuesday morning, May 23. Other plans are yet to be announced.

Nurse Cavell Picture Coming Soon

C. Post Mason Hopes to Duplicate Sensational Canadian Success in This Country.

WITH the tragedy of Edith Cavell, the martyred nurse, still fresh in the minds of the American public, a picture, produced in Australia and giving a sympathetic interpretation of the life of the heroic woman up to the moment of her execution, is being exploited in Canada and the United States by C. Post Mason, who for ten years has been associated with the most important amusement interests in Australia. Mr. Mason was in New York recently arranging for the presentation of the film at a Broadway theater, where it may be shown in conjunction with the "Official Australian Navy Pictures."

The success of "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell," which in this country may be given the additional title of "A Nurse's Sacrifice," has been phenomenal. Handled in Canada by the Famous Players Releasing Company, it is being offered in the best theaters of the larger cities to capacity business. At the Gaiety, in Toronto, during a week when other houses offered the strongest kind of opposition with "The Birth of a Nation" and "Britain Prepared," the sale of seats on the first day totalled six thousand. It is said that in the audiences attracted and the enthusiasm aroused, "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell" has set a new mark for Toronto.

Vera Pearce, called the most beautiful woman in Australia, plays the leading role, supported by Harrington Reynolds and other players of recognized ability, who worked under the direction of Mr. Mason and John Gavin at Spencer's studio in Sydney. Every effort was made to give an accurate, uncolored version of the tragic events in Belgium preceding the execution. The picture is in four reels and probably will be offered to state rights buyers in the United States. The Australian navy pictures, taken with the cooperation of the Australian government, have been officially indorsed. The sinking of the Emden, the fleet in action and scenes showing the hundreds of boys in training for the service are included in these two reels.

Mr. Mason was born in Vermont and was well known as a vaudeville singer before he went to England and later to Australia, where he became identified with the J. D. Williams Amusement Company, Australasian Films and Hugh D. Mackintosh. In addition to directing the touring departments for amusement enterprises, he has managed some of the biggest sporting events witnessed in Australia during the past ten years, among them the bicycle races at Sydney and Melbourne.

Board of Trade Exposition Is a Success

Forty Thousand Paid Admissions Testify to the Approval of the New York Public—Large Number of Exhibits and Stage and Screen Shows Provide Entertainment for Picture Men and Citizens Generally—Plans Already Under Way for Next Year's Exposition

THE first trade show of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., came to a close on Sunday, May 14. In the nine days that the Madison Square Garden was open to the public, 38,960 persons paid their way into the big amusement hall. They had been entertained probably in a larger degree than had the patrons of any previous exposition. We are speaking, of course, of the large public that follows the motion picture. On the trade side, too, there was much to interest visiting exhibitors and exchange men. The exposition was a success, from the social side and also from the financial. That the Board of Trade should be able to put over its show with a balance on the right side of the ledger in spite of the fact that it immediately followed a six-day similar exposition set at naught the predictions of some of the wiseacres. It was not believed by many of the men who are acquainted with expositions that the New York public would be interested in a motion picture show for more than a week. That such impression was proved to be contrary to the facts is in a measure due to the entertainment provided by the management of the exposition. This is demonstrated by the increasing attendance during the week. Friday was the banner day, and the number on that day would undoubtedly have been exceeded on the day following had it not been for the counter-attraction of the history-making preparedness parade.

That during the nine days the Board of Trade gained experience that will be of value to it in future expositions—and that the shows will constitute an annual affair is already assured—there can be no question. Very likely, for one thing, it has been determined that no advantage accrues in opening the exposition hall as early as 11 o'clock in the morning; that the floor space devoted to dancing might have been better used in other ways—for instance, an elaborate stage setting, such as the patrons of motion pictures see in the more pretentious productions, might have created more interest for the larger number. Then, too, the comparative absence of the leading players was a disappointment to many who attended. Only a few of the companies made it a point to secure the attendance of their prominent artists. One of the leaders in this respect was the Vitagraph. Other concerns whose players in numbers were seen in their booths were the Universal, the International and the Mutual.

The motion pictures shown on the big screen at the Fourth avenue end of the arena proved one of the best attractions of the week. All of the companies contributed of their more worthy unreleased subjects. In spite of the handicap of competing powerful unshaded lamps Operator Sol Abrams, from his little tower over the office of the manager in the center of the floor, was able by the use of an amperage ranging from seventy-five to one hundred to put on well-projected pictures. The dimness of the first two days was eliminated by increasing the depth of the shadow box. While pictures were not being shown the "juice" was thrown into the Cooper Hewitts on the stage and pictures were taken for the edification of patrons. Between the two attractions the hundreds of seats in the improvised theater were generally well filled, some of the occupants refusing to leave for counter-attractions in other parts of the hall.

As was pointed out in the Moving Picture World of last week, the Garden, with its many decorations, presented a most pleasing appearance. To the adornment of the ceiling and sides were added the many details of the individual booths. Flowers, the real thing and the well-simulated, the artificial, were in profusion. In artistry the Paramount, the Vitagraph and the Fox were especially notable.

For the successful issue of the initial show of the Board of Trade the credit will in large measure go to Executive Secretary J. W. Binder and Publication Committee Chairman Thomas M. Alexander, aided by Harry A. Cochrane, general manager of the Garden. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, president of the board, was in continual attendance. Other officers of the board were present every evening.

During the week there were many events that stood out. One of these was the spectacular entrance of more than a hundred exhibitors from Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx, who on Tuesday evening entered the hall and paraded around it. They had been marshalled by Samuel H. Trigger and Samuel Spedon, the latter of whom was in command. The little diversion was arranged to prove the good will of the exhibitors toward the Board of Trade. The committee of Chicago exhibitors at present in New York arranging for the coming exposition and convention in Chicago in July of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America remained throughout the length of the show. This delegation was composed of William J. Sweeney, Fred Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer; L. H. Frank and Fred W. Hartmann.

During the week the exposition was honored by the attendance of men of prominence. Among these were Hugo Munsterberg of Harvard University, who has added to his other works one on the motion picture; John Hays Hammond, Daniel Frohman, Vincent Astor, William Randolph Hearst, Rear Admiral Nathaniel R. Usher, Collector Dudley Field Malone and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise.

Among the features of the week were the addresses in the concert hall on Wednesday by F. H. Richardson and J. H. Hallberg, their general subject being projection. Nicholas Power was chairman. There was a goodly attendance of theater managers and operators. On Thursday Paramount showed the Morosco feature, "Pasquale," in which George Beban is starred. At the close of the subject Mr. Beban addressed the large audience and told the pathetic story of "Colombo," the old horse of the San Francisco Italian, from which "Pasquale" had been adapted. The story was told in Mr. Beban's inimitable style, and its telling was heartily applauded. Saturday was Vitagraph day, and the big Brooklyn studio was represented by all its players, who were introduced from the stage in a specially prepared setting.

The closing day was given over to the International Film Service, which presented its players, who had journeyed from up state to be present. Directors Theodore and Leo Wharton of "The Mysteries of Myra" also attended. The initial episodes of the serial were shown on the screen, as were also several of the cartoon comedies drawn by the Hearst artists. There were sketches drawn on the stage by George McManus, of "Bringing Up Father"; George Herriman, of "Krazy Kat"; Tom McNamara, of "Us Boys"; Cliff Sterrett, of "Polly and Her Pals," and Hal Coffman. Announcement was made of the winners of the new talent contest, of the six young women who will be given a chance to appear in International pictures. The big silver cup awarded by the International to the woman receiving the largest number of votes as the most popular motion picture actress went to Irene Castle.

One of the pleasant sidelights of the week was the luncheon given to the members of the trade press by the International. John W. Grey of the publicity department sat at the head of the table, and at his right hand was E. A. McManus, general manager of the International. Every one of the twenty-five diners got away from the two-hour session in good shape, praising the menu and the host who conceived it. J. K. Burger was so successful in creating a new edition of his famous "Yellow Jacket" that the party combined in drinking his health in an "International." It was a real party.

More than one hundred exhibitors, many of them accompanied by their wives, accepted the invitation of the Vitagraph Company to visit the Flatbush studio on May 11. Under the guidance of Samuel Spedon they saw pictures in the making and met a number of the Vitagraph stars, Edith Storey and Lillian Walker among them. A buffet luncheon was served. After a tour of the plant the exhibitors expressed themselves as being much impressed by the completeness of the equipment and the activity in all of the studios.

On the afternoon of Saturday Commodore Blackton was formally presented with an oil painting of himself. The gift was from John M. Lakin, president of the Acme Lithographing Company. Mr. Binder made the presentation speech, which was fittingly responded to by Mr. Blackton.

The show came to a successful conclusion on Sunday evening. From the standpoint of the trade as well as of the public it had been one of the best that New York has seen. What has been accomplished in spite of handicaps augurs much for those to come in the future. The Board of Trade has introduced itself to the citizens of New York as makers of entertainment. It has drawn new attention to the industry, from the financial and from the manufacturing side. It has done much to bring home to the public the great question of legalized censorship, of its inequities, of its evils. One of the fruits of the exposition should be a wider public knowledge of the handicaps under which the motion picture is created today.

When asked on Sunday evening for his impressions of the exposition Secretary Binder said:

"The exposition has been a great success. We will make a little money, but what is even of greater moment, we are closing the exposition without a single dissatisfied exhibitor. That is something that cannot be measured in dollars and cents. Moreover, I feel that the thousands who have thronged the Garden night after night have, because of this exposition, a better understanding of the magnitude of the motion picture art and of the part it is bound to play in the making of America's future. This is what we started out to accomplish, and I feel we have done it.

"On behalf of the Board of Trade and individually, I want to thank everyone who helped to make the exposition possible by their loyal co-operation both prior to the opening and during its continuation. Had it not been for this generous and whole hearted support the exposition would not have been possible.

"To the exhibitors who came from Greater New York, and in fact from all over the country, I personally want to say, I thank you all. There have been no evidences of any division at this exposition. On the other hand, everywhere was that spirit of unity and co-operation which is at once the keynote and the moving power of all great achievements.

"I predict that as the outcome of this season of motion picture carnival in New York there is bound to be in the future not only a better understanding of the motion picture art on the part of the public, but there will be unity where before discord may have existed, and there will be established forever the heartiest co-operation in all branches of the industry.

"Next year there will be but one exposition. It will be carefully planned. A beginning has already been made. A very large number of the Garden exhibitors have already signed tentative contracts for next year's show. It will be the greatest of its kind ever held."

"The magnificent showing made by the trade press at the First National Motion Picture Exposition has done more than anything else to prove the stability and importance of the motion picture art and industry," said Commodore Blackton. "No other industry in the history of the world has ever developed in so short a time informative periodical literature of such value and completeness. This was the unanimous verdict of the public as well as the men financially interested in pictures."

List of Garden Exhibitors.

Among the firms represented at the Board of Trade exposition were the following:

Mutual Film Corporation.

The exhibit of the Mutual Film Corporation, just at the left of the entrance, received much attention from visitors. The Mutual section was divided into two parts, business and social. On the left of the gate was the reception room, on the right were many desks with cards bearing the names of the Mutualites who, in the New York exchange of the company, take care of the exhibitors. In the reception room the chairs were in tapestry and gold. Flowers and palms added to the comfortable atmosphere. Electric lights in profusion added to the decoration of the booth. J. G. Rohlfs and Hopp Hadley were in charge of the booth. Manager Beck of the New York exchange was on the job each evening. Mr. Rohlfs said on Thursday new bookings had aggregated $15,000. Wednesday was Mutual day, and in the evening there were present President John R. Freuler and General Manager John C. Graham. The Thanhouser players were in attendance in the evening. On the stage they put on a scene which was shown to Thursday visitors.

Vitagraph Company.

The quarters of the Vitagraph company were artistically furnished under the supervision of Charles Chapman, scenic art director of the big Flatbush studio. The upholstery, a combination of black, wistaria, green and white for the wicker couches and chairs, was all made at the studio. At the back of the booth a landscape painting extended the entire length. The effect at which the artist aimed and which he attained was that of the veranda of a country home, with mountains in the distance. Trailing vines and Japanese lanterns added to the illusion. A number of handsome wicker lamps and photographs of players contributed to the making of a most attractive booth. Miss Rose Tapley was in charge both afternoon and evening. Aiding her was a corps of the young women players of the company. The throngs that jostled about the booth testified the popularity of the exhibit and those in charge of it.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The Universal had a large display just to the left of the entrance. At the rear of the booth was a great animated illuminated American flag, one of the more striking features of the exposition. There were many framed pictures of popular Universal players. Also on show was the big silver cup presented by the company for the coming twenty-four-hour stock chassis automobile race. Big electric letters called on all beholders to "Demand the Yankee Doodle Program—Universal Motion Pictures." H. H. Van Loan was in charge of the booth, as he was also of the prettily-decorated quarters of Bluebird on the opposite side of the arena.

J. H. Hallberg.

A fountain electrically illuminated played in the center of the large Hallberg exhibit. On display was a large assortment of motion picture apparatus. There were a Power 6B projector, a Baird and a Simplex; a complete miniature stage setting of the Rialto Theater; Kliegl spotlight; a Hallberg Twentieth Century Motor Generator and switchboard; a Rialto screen and a Satin Gold Fiber; Speer carbons, Caille automatic ticket selling machine chopper and change maker; Eck hurricane fans; new Hallberg adjustable economizer; Speedco Arc Controller; chairs from the Peabody School Furniture Company; Feaster Non-Rewind Machine, and the Stereomotorgraph, an automatic advertising device for window display. Mr. Hallberg was in charge, assisted by W. H. Rabell.

Universal Stage Lighting Company.

In the booth of Klieglight company, George C. Dodd demonstrated the devices of the concern which are specially designed to give intense light for motion picture purposes. One of the more striking of these is a table lamp of fifteen amperes, approximating 8,000 candle-power. There was also being shown the new 100-ampere spotlight built by Kliegl Brothers. This is designed to give directors an unusual light for extraordinary purposes. It was this lamp that provided the searching rays that swept the big arena during the week. Other lights were the burglar, for picturemaking purposes, and the studio lighting units, the Klieglight and Liliput.

Vim and Knickerbocker.

At the booth of the Vim comedies and the Knickerbocker Star Features Mark Dintenfass entertained his friends.

Kineticartoon Corporation.

In the booth of the Kineticartoon were many of the famous censorship drawings, which afterward were animated, of Charles Raymond Macauley. There were drawings also of Mr. Macauley's associates, Dan Smith, F. M. Follett and A. B. Heath.

Panchromatic Twin Arcs.

At the headquarters of the Panchromatic Twin Arcs were five types of arc lamps. Also there were a complete Panchroma travel outfit, a Moon screen and a large line of imported cameras. Mr. Allison, of Allison & Hadaway, was in charge.

Acme Lithographing Company.

President John M. Lakin, assisted by Reginald Belcher, entertained visitors at the Acme booth and showed them his daily changed samples of pastel posters and lithographs in from four to twelve colors.

Eastman Kodak Company.

The Big Eastman booth in the balcony was in charge of George Blair, Richard Brady and W. P. Wentz. The wall of the booth was ornamented with many photos of the Eastman manufacturing process.

Menger & Ring.

In the booth of the Menger & Ring Company were many small and large sample frames for theater display, ticket boxes, mirrors for dressing rooms, flower boxes for side decorations and changeable signs.

Pierson Film Cleaning Machine.

M. C. Darby, manager of the company, demonstrated to visitors his big machine, really two in one, for cleaning, softening and redeveloping film.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

The Paramount occupied 1,500 feet of space, the largest single exhibit. It was also one of the most artistic. There were three distinct divisions, divided by a low railing. There was a lounging room in the center, and flanking it was a reception room and a distribution room. The entrance to each was a bower of roses. Along the seventy-five feet at the back were large oil paintings of famous Paramount stars, the leaders of the programs of the Famous Players, Jesse L. Lasky company and Morosco-Pallas. A large illuminated trade mark of the company was a conspicuous feature. The general scheme was a replica of a Viennese pergola, treated after the Italian school. It was designed by Professor Hoffman, and was executed by the Hester Decorating Company. A few feet in front of the paintings and extending the entire length of the booth were garlands of magnolia leaves covered with gold and suspended on short obelisks. The latest thing in Chinese lamps, too, were in evidence. The wicker chairs and couches were all furnished with most comfortable springs. The heads of the company were constant visitors during the week. These included W. W. Hodkinson, the president, and James Steele, of Pittsburgh and Chicago; William E. Smith, of Philadelphia; William L. Sherry, Raymond Pawley and Hiram Abrams, of the board of directors. William F. Bossner was in charge of the booth.

Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce had an elaborate industrial display designed to give an idea of the more prominent of the products of Southern California—fruits, nuts and vintages. A. W. Kinney, head of the industrial bureau of the Chamber, was present ready to tell visitors the advantage of Los Angeles. In active charge of the exhibit was R. R. Holbrook.

Essanay Film Manufacturing Company.

The Essanay Company had a booth in charge of Gardner Wood, the eastern representative of the concern, and B. H. Stern and E. F. Longwell. There was a display of portraits of the company's players. The furniture was in wicker.

Nicholas Power Company.

On display at the booth of the Nicholas Power Company were three Six B machines, two Six A machines and one Six combination, the latter a road outfit. Among the other Power machines in the Garden were the two in the main exhibiting booth in the center of the arena, one in the concert hall, one in the Vitagraph booth and one in J. H. Hallberg's. There was also in operation a large model of the Power intermittent movement. Will C. Smith was in charge of the display. Present frequently during the week were Nicholas Power, Treasurer Edwin Earl and General Manager John F. Skerrett.

William Fox Company.

The Fox booth was artistically arranged. The scheme was blue. The layout was semi-circular in form. Large oil paintings of the manufacturer and his more prominent players were banked in blue drapery. A couch in the prevailing color extended the length of the room. The chairs were in white wicker.

International Film Service.

There was a pronounced military coloring to the display of the International Film Service. A good-sized tent, two regulation three-inch field pieces, a machine gun and a wireless outfit were prominent. On display was the thousand-dollar cup to be awarded the motion picture actress receiving the largest number of votes during the exposition. There were also twenty-five smaller cups to be given the "also rans." John Gray was in charge of the exhibit. Aiding him were James Driscoll, Frank Hoskins and John Green. Among those present during the week were E. A. McManus, general manager; J. K. Burger, manager of exchanges; Joe E. Engel, manager of the New York Exchange, and Leo Brooks.

Novelty Slide Company.

The booth of the Novelty Slide Company was decorated with a fountain and artificial flowers. Two large revolving illuminated cylinders carried 360 samples of the company's products in the slide field. General Manager Joseph Coufal was in charge.

Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Company.

The Westinghouse Company was represented by a large display of goods adapted to motion picture purposes. There was a large motor generator set, ampere and volt meter, panel for generating set, No. 1½ Sirocco blower and a Westinghouse Cooper Hewett mercury arc rectifier. The exhibit was in charge of E. P. Crowell, salesman for the moving picture department, and B. K. Strader.

Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company.

The Automatic had five machines on display, including a single, a double, a triple and a quadruple. The exhibit had much interest for the public as well as for the trade in general. In charge of the booth were L. C. Manning, H. L. Coleman and Mr. Perrin.

Arthur Leslie Publicity Headquarters.

The Leslie booth was responsible for some of the enlivening influences during the earlier days of the show, before the general public had begun to throng to the Garden. Many trick balloons were distributed. On the Sunday evening following the opening thousands of sweet peas were distributed as souvenirs. Many of the unattached players here made their headquarters. Mr. Leslie was aided by Mrs. Leslie and his charming daughter.

Film Fire Prevention Company.

The interesting display of the Film Fire Prevention Company was in charge of the inventor, Anton Szeliga, and E. L. Wood and R. L. Barstow, Jr. Mr. Wood explained the working of this ingenious device, by which, in case the film catches fire, many things automatically and instantly happen. Chief of these is the cutting of the film and the sealing of the two magazines, the closing of the port, the throwing on of the house lights and also of a small lamp placed where it can be seen by the orchestra leader—a signal to get busy. Last, and most important, the light in the projection machine itself is extinguished. All this is done in the fraction of a second, as this writer saw for himself. The device also is said to be fool proof. Mr. Szeliga was for some years associated with Pathe Freres of Austria, as expert electrician. He conceived the idea while in their employ, and it is only recently that the machine was perfected. Patents have been taken out in practically all countries.

Cooper-Hewitt Electric Company.

The Cooper-Hewitt Company had on display one of its elevator winged stands, of the same description as the several stationed on the stage and which, for the making of pictures, were in constant use throughout the exposition. There was also an enlarging lamp, a Cooper-Hewitt outfit for making titles and animated cartoons. Those in charge of the booth were W. C. Hubbard, A. S. Hubbard, W. A. D. Evans and J. P. O'Shea.

Motion Picture Apparatus Company, Inc.

Robert Hastings, agent of the company, had on display a large number of specialties in motion picture apparatus. Among these were cameras, tripods and a printer with many features.

M. J. Wohl & Co.

The Wohl company displayed its Broadside and Duplex lamps and a portable seventeen-pound affair. There were several varieties of diffusers, with spun glass. A top light had a cone-shaped container of spun glass. There were in all six types of lamps. M. J. Wohl and M. Mayer were in charge of the booth.

National Carbon Company.

The National had a large exhibit of carbons, for stereo and motion picture work, for searchlights and flaming arcs. One of its features is the metallic pencil carbon, designed to do away with shadows on the screen. W. C. Kunzmann, formerly an operator and theater manager, who has in recent years specialized in carbons, said his company had spent thousands of dollars in experiments. He said he was convinced from the reports coming in from all over the country that the National had been successful in its efforts to produce a carbon equal to any. A. D. Spear, the New York representative of the National, and A. E. Carrier were the others in charge of the display.

Motion Picture-Scope Company, Chicago.

W. J. Patterson was demonstrating the Portoscope, a portable motion picture projector for churches, lodges, clubs and homes. The weight of the machines is from 28 to 45 pounds. The Portoscope is adapted to standard film and stereopticon.

Collection from National Museum.

In a small case were several models of primitive motion picture machinery. The exhibit was loaned by the National Museum, where it has been for twenty-one years. It represented the development work of C. Francis Jenkins of Washington. Among the exhibits were a printing machine, stereoscopic projector and eye piece, early perforator, projector for 3⅝-inch film unperforated; in a rough box was a camera of the intermittent type of the vintage of 1890. There were also a camera of the continuous type of the period of 1890 and a Phantoscope of the early nineties.

The Screen Club.

The Screen Club had a booth attractively fitted up with period furniture and statuary and proved a welcome resting place for the visiting members of the club.

National Cash Register Company.

The N. C. R. Company exhibited its 1916 ticket printing register. These machines print, count and issue tickets in rapid manner. As illustrating its simplicity one of the littler film actors manipulated the two-color machine with celerity.

Typhoon Fan Company.

The Typhoon Fan Company had on display in different parts of the arena six types of its product. The largest of these was a twelve-foot affair over the main doorway. In charge were Ernest Glantzberg, Douglas Faulkner and James F. Daly. They reported forty-two orders taken during the show, for theaters all the way from Colon, Panama, to Westminster, B. C.

Simplex Photo Products Company.

The Simplex company, specializing in lamps and cameras, displayed portable arc lights, motion picture cameras carrying 50 and 100 feet of film, film printers and reflecting lamps for photographic work. Present during the week were A. H. Hotte, B. J. Nasief and Richard Pollard.

Paragon Films, Inc.

At the booth of the Paragon throughout the week there was conducted a mock court which made much amusement for visitors. Arrests were made of the prominent as well as of the lesser known persons, and invariably a fine was imposed. Some escaped with a levy of 17 cents, while others were forced to contribute as much as $1, all of which was turned over to the Board of Trade fund for fighting censorship legislation. The Paragon also prosecuted its campaign for the securing of signatures against the Cristman-Wheeler bill, now before the Governor. The number of names at the end of the week, which represented the efforts of the Paragon company for several weeks, totaled 88,000. Tim Cronin presided as judge. Irving Hay was the prosecuting attorney, Joe Edmunds portrayed Bad Bill Censor and Eddie Corbett was the finger print expert. Among those forced to say "Good morning, Judge," were Commodore Blackton, Harry Houdini, James J. Corbett, Eddie Foy, John T. Kelly and Blanche Ring.

The Trade Press.

Among the motion picture trade papers represented at the exposition were the Moving Picture World, Motion Picture News, Motography, the Morning Telegraph and Motion Picture Mail, as well as the Motion Picture Story Magazine and the Motion Picture Classic.

LOUIS TRACY TO WRITE FOR PATHE.

Noted picture maker met noted author the other day when J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, entertained in his office Louis Tracy, the English novelist, and persuaded him to lend his talents to screen work. Mr. Berst was one of the pioneers in believing that if a manufacturer was to spend fifteen or twenty thousand dollars in producing a picture the services of trained minds were necessary in the writing of the scripts. Several years ago when fifty dollars was considered a high price for a scenario, Mr. Berst purchased the work of men and women of trained literary ability, and paid sums running into the hundreds. The wisdom of his policy is proven by the fact that today every large producing company is doing it, and large sums are being paid for the motion picture rights to well-known novels and plays. The list of Pathe Gold Rooster Plays bears ample witness to this tendency of the day.

As a result of the meeting of Messrs. Berst and Tracy, the author is to write "The Grip of Evil" for Pathe, a serial story which will be picturized and released probably during the early summer. Among Mr. Tracy's books are "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," "The Silent Barrier," "Karl Grier," "A Son of the Immortals" and "The Great Mogul."

Protest Against Censorship

Splendid Assemblage of Public Spirited Citizens and a Host of Film Men Appear in Executive Mansion and Tell Governor Whitman Why They Are Against the Cristman-Wheeler Bill—Advocates of the Measure Make a Poor Showing.

By W. Stephen Bush.

WHETHER the hearing before the Governor of this State will result in a veto of the Cristman-Wheeler bill time alone will tell. There can be no doubt whatever about the spendid showing made by the film interests. There can be no doubt that a powerful and numerous element in the State is opposed to censorship. It is most significant too that this element is neither directly nor indirectly connected with motion pictures.

There were other evidences of anti-censorship sentiment made manifest at the memorable hearing in the Executive Chamber. The film interests or rather the foes of censorship not only used more than their allotted time, but they had a mass of reserves which were never called into action. On the other hand the friends of the bill were all heard long before their time had expired. The applause which followed the speakers on our side was spontaneous and prolonged. Frequently applause interrupted them. There were but faint ripples to greet the efforts of the men who spoke for the bill. There was force, conviction and dignity in the manner and matter of every man who spoke on our side. No argument commanded more attention and respect than that made by the woman who spoke briefly and so vigorously for the freedom of the screen.

The advocates of censorship expressed in their delivery no less than in their logic all the mental crudity and all the confused notions of morality which inspires the fanaticism of self-commissioned reformers. It was observed by many that the atmosphere of the Executive Chamber was distinctly charged with anti-censorship feeling. There is something in the American mind which sets up the cry of rebellion whenever any ancient instrument of oppression is dragged into the open and exposed to public view. We become transported with righteous anger when we take a close view of the pillory or the thumbscrew. Censorship belongs to the age of the torture chamber.

All Filmdom Was There.

The anti-censorship hosts went up to Albany on a special train. John C. Flinn, of the Lasky forces, had accepted the responsibility of getting the great crowd together and seeing them safely bestowed on the special. It was commendable foresight to have a special train. The scheduled train at 8:45 would have looked like a subway express at the rush hour if the foes of the Cristman-Wheeler bill had been forced to seek accommodation on it. As it was the ten-car special afforded room and comfort to every one. One of the cars bore the name of Myra. E. A. McManus declined to comment on this fact, but it was noticed that he immediately made his headquarters in the car and that he sought to impart an air of mystery to his movements.

Among those present were: John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual; Joseph Brandt of the Universal, Jesse L. Lasky, Arthur S. Friend, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E.; Richard A. Rowland and Joseph Engel of the Metro Pictures Corporation, E. A. McManus of the International, Hugh Hoffman, representing Blue Bird; J. Robert Rubin, National President Fred. J. Harrington, Edwin Thanhouser, Walter Lonergan, Arthur James of the Metro, William M. Seabury, W. A. Johnston, John C. Flinn, J. A. Berst, W. A. Parsons, Martin W. Littleton, Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Lawrence Abbot of the People's Institute, Dr. Cranston Brenton and Dr. Orrin G. Cocks of the National Board of Review. There were plenty of exhibitors too. The up-State delegation was headed by L. A. Buettner and almost all of the Albany and Schenectady men were there. Greater New York was represented by Samuel H. Trigger, Louis Smith, Louis Blumenthal, Louis Manheimer, Benjamin Title, A. Levine and very many others too numerous to mention.

Never was the run to the State Capital made more smoothly and swiftly. The three hours on the train were largely devoted to consultation among the speakers. The result of these consultations appeared in most pleasing form in the course of the hearing, a perfect and complete program had been mapped out, each speaker covered some particular angle of the subject, there was no overlapping and no waste of any kind. The one feature of hearing which impressed the newspaper men present lay in the fact that but two of the speakers were interested in films and that only one or two hurried references were made to the position of an organized body within the industry.

Immediately after the arrival of our delegations camera men got busy and filmed the different groups as they emerged from the depot and afterward as they ascended the steps of the costliest capitol in the world.

At the top of the steps and just as the delegations were about to enter the building proper Governor Whitman appeared and was immediately beseeched by the indefatigable and fearless camera men to "get into the picture." The Governor, who is one of the most affable and approachable men in public life today laughingly consented and did all the camera men asked him to do. He jokingly deprecated the absence of Dr. Parkhurst, saying he had the best right to be in the picture.

The Scenes in the Executive Chamber.

The Executive Chamber is one of the most notable features of the re-building of the capitol in 1884. It is perhaps the most historic spot in the annals of the State and has been the scene of many a grave and dramatic episode. Crowded to its utmost capacity the chamber may hold a scant three hundred people. On the afternoon of Thursday, May 11, it was crowded somewhat beyond its capacity. Neither ingress nor egress were possible after the contending forces had swarmed into the place. Seats were at a high premium and the standing room was utilized to the last inch. In spite of its smallness there is a dignity about this chamber, there is an atmosphere of solemnity, which inspires respect. Portraits of all the great and little Governors of the Empire State look down upon the audience from the distinguished Clinton to the freshly painted Dix.

Governor Whitman, after having gracefully submitted to the cameras, led the informal procession up the interior stairs to the Executive Chamber and after chatting with a group of the delegation disappeared into his private office, adjoining the Executive Chamber. He was attended by his military secretary. The men in charge of the hearing put the finishing touches on their preparations, chairs were found for many unexpected and distinguished visitors and precisely at 2:40 o'clock the Governor entered the chamber. Everybody rose and the Governor bowing quickly sat down and announced the subject of the hearing, reading for this purpose the enacting clause of the Cristman-Wheeler bill. J. Robert Rubin, counsel for the Exhibitors' League, acted as master of ceremonies and introduced all of the speakers on our side. He jockeyed a little bit for the best position in the argument, i. e., the last part. In this, however, he was unsuccessful and the foes of the bill had to present their side first.

Colby's Brilliant Attack.

It was thought very fortunate for the film side to have for its first speaker Bainbridge Colby. Mr. Colby is incisive, forceful, he has a perfect command of language. He possesses the rare gift of humor and as it is humor not untinged with sarcasm it is invaluable in a speaker who sets out to combat folly and to riddle prejudice. There were moments when the forceful and striking utterances of the anti-censorship speakers sounded much like the reverberating echoes from the editorial files of The Moving Picture World. Mr. Colby said that the question of censorship "far transcends the question of regulating the motion picture." "This matter," he continued, "concerns every liberty-loving American for censorship means an attack on our popular form of Government." Mr. Colby demanded to know who were to be "these three or five demi-gods" to be entrusted with the regulation of public morals. No matter how great our expectations they will, in the end, appear as just "two ordinary samples of the two-legged species willing to take a job at $4,000 a year." "Think of using the word 'proper' in connection with a statute of this kind," exclaimed Mr. Colby. "Think of five persons telling us what is proper and what is improper in motion pictures. Censorship is such a strange thing amid our political institutions. It has no relation whatever to our legal system, it is hard to classify under our form of Government. It's nothing new. It is the attempted revival of an old odious abuse, which has proved an absolute failure. The censorship of the stage in England has been condemned and ridiculed by all the great contemporaneous writers of Great Britain, such men as Arthur Pinero, Israel Zangwill and George Bernard Shaw."

Advancing a step or two toward the Governor, Mr. Colby pointed his finger at the Executive of the Empire State, and addressed directly and personally: "You sir," he cried, "are not clothed with arbitrary power; you are a statutory officer, whose powers are checked and regulated and guarded against by proper laws. Because censorship originated with the churches it is not necessarily sound. Censorship and intolerance have nestled under the eaves of the church for centuries. I do not doubt that the church has helped in the upbuilding of good citizenship and that it is one of the finest forces in the community, but the churches have a bad record in the matter of censorship. You know they used to burn each other's bishops because there wasn't sufficient conformity to censorship. If Your Excellency has seen the well-known play, 'The Wizard of Oz,' you will remember that the man of straw and tatters was unable to talk until provided with a crude sort of brain. When he then began to speak, he immediately made a speech in favor of reform (laughter). He has had a lot of imitators since. In England, censorship had its origin in political corruption. The powers of censorship were employed by the father of bribery, Horace Walpole, who resented the exposures of his methods by Fielding. Remember, sir, the strong influences that work for clean pictures within the industry itself. This influence has been great in the past and we have every reason to suppose that it will be greater in the future. Stop this assault upon the noble freedom of the screen. We do not want to go back to the days of the witchburners and to all the crude absurdities of Puritan days in New England."

For what seemed more than a full minute, the Executive Chamber resounded with bursts of applause.

The next speaker was Walter W. Irwin, representing the V-L-S-E, of which he is the general manager. After declaring that the motion picture had the same right to preach national defense or other propaganda as the editor of a newspaper, Mr. Irwin said that it had been stated by many people of the Middle West, that the cordial reception attended President Wilson on his recent trip to St. Louis and other cities, of that section, in support of national defense, was primarily due to the fact that the widely known patriotic film, "The Battle Cry of Peace," had previously been extensively exhibited there. He made the prediction that in censoring such pictures as this, as was done in Pennsylvania, the censors were becoming "the heedless instruments of their own destruction."

"The great American public never goes wrong on a moral issue," said Mr. Irwin. "Particularly does this apply to the Empire State. Governor Hughes was re-elected because of his campaign and support of the Race Track bill, which as he explained, meant the fulfillment of one of the provisions of the State Constitution. No bill ever had so many powerful organizations actively in opposition. The worst elements in the State were aligned against it; but the great mass of the people, as usual, spoke in favor of righteousness.

"This characteristic of the American public is conclusive proof that the motion picture could not have attained the universal support it possesses if it had not been for its strength in moral and educational standards, as well as in dramatic and technical standards. If the question of censorship were submitted to the millions of people in this State, who value pictures as their chief means of entertainment and education, the answer would be almost unanimous. Solely by virtue of the merit of its product, this industry has become the fifth largest in the United States."

Here Mr. Irwin started to ask the Governor whether he had seen the picture. The Governor nodded his head emphatically and followed the rest of Mr. Irwin's argument with considerable attention. Continuing his speech Mr. Irwin said:

"In fact, it has been stated by many people of the Middle West, that the cordial reception tendered President Wilson upon his recent trip to St. Louis and other cities in that section of the country, in support of national defense, was primarily due to the fact that 'The Battle Cry of Peace,' had previously been extensively exhibited. In no State other than Pennsylvania, not even in Ohio, has there been the slightest exception taken to this picture. On the contrary, it has been heartily commended editorially.

"Are we to be denied the same right to preach national defense in a motion picture as is possessed by the editor of a newspaper? Is a vehicle of thought transmission of so potent a character—a vehicle which in the case of 'The Battle Cry of Peace' will go a long way toward making the people of the interior States recognize their duty to the sea-boards and thus vote for a proper appropriation for national defense—to be subjected to the arbitrary whim or will of a few individuals who do not agree with the policy advocated? It is significant to note that the chairman of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors is a Mr. Breitinger, while the secretary of the board is a Dr. Oberholzer. May be, the ancestry of these gentlemen had something to do with their arbitrary determination to destroy the vital parts of this picture.

"In Ohio and Pennsylvania, where censorship is imposed upon the people, the conduct of the censors conclusively demonstrates that censorship consists of intolerance born of ignorance, prejudice, malice, spite and jealousy. For instance, in Ohio, the great picture of 'The Life of Christ'—a picture which has been extensively exhibited in every Christian country—was utterly destroyed of its religious value by the elimination of the crucifixion. One censor viewed the picture and directed this elimination, a woman. Her only reason for so doing was that it was too horrible. Thus the lesson of the martyrdom of the man who died that he might save others was denied the people of Ohio.

"In Pennsylvania the acts of the censors are equally deplorable. The Vitagraph Company of America produced a picture, entitled 'The Battle Cry of Peace.' It was made with patriotic motives. It was the first instance in which the motion picture had been used to further a national propaganda, and carry a great message to the American people. It demonstrates the defenseless condition of our country, and advocates national preparedness, not for war, but to avoid it. By diagrams composed of facts and figures, furnished by the United States Army and Navy, it compares the deplorable military weakness of this country with the strength of other countries. By sub-titles, as well as by pictures, it explains the purpose of the National Security League and tells of the systems of military training existing in Switzerland. It shows the invasion of New York City by a foreign enemy, and proves that the capture of that city and a small surrounding territory would practically mean the subjugation of the country; over 95 per cent. of the munition factories and other armament plants being within a radius of 200 miles of the City of New York."

Mr. Irwin was followed by Abraham J. Meyers, who represented the office of the District-Attorney of New York County. Mr. Meyers characterized the bill as entirely unnecessary. He said that the District-Attorney's office had record of but one prosecution of moving picture men founded on alleged indecent exhibitions. He added that the present laws were ample to deal with the problem of regulation and he called attention to the fact that within the last six months not a single complaint had been filed with the Distric-Attorney. Mr. Meyers was followed by A. Simons, who represented the United Jewish Societies of New York. He made a telling speech against the bill, which he thought wholly unnecessary. He emphasized the fact that the motion picture had accomplished great good in diminishing the number of saloons.

Dr. Parkhurst Resents Slur o.. Motion Picture Men.

Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, the well-known Presbyterian divine, spoke next. He said he had a tremendous faith in the possibilities of the motion picture, both in the realms of science and of morals. His opposition against this bill was due to the fact that in his opinion it constituted an unmerited reflection on all persons engaged in the moving picture industry. It looked to him as if the Legislature meant to imply by the enactment of this law that anyone engaged in the manufacture of motion pictures was a rascal. The bill implied, furthermore, that the producers of motion pictures, were willing to make filth a source a revenue.

"In my opinion," continued Dr. Parkhurst, "this law is an indictment of the whole motion picture industry. I believe that it is entirely unwarranted. I can testify to this from my own observation and from my rather close association with men engaged in this industry. If you do not veto this bill it will scare away from this industry the best men who may now be inclined to invest in it. A man investing fifty thousand or a hundred thousand dollars in a picture does not want to have his investment placed at the mercy of arbitrary officials. I would hesitate to submit any sermon of mine to censorship, not even to members of my own congregation. (Laughter and applause). I ask you sir, to disapprove of this bill because it is altogether antagonistic to the spirit of democracy." Dr. Parkhurst was followed by C. Hall, representing the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Rochester. The Chamber of Commerce, the speaker said, was opposed to the bill because it was superfluous legislation.

A very telling speech was made by Dr. Cranston Brenton of the National Board of Review. Dr. Brenton went very fully into the methods of the National Board and the Governor showed his interest by asking many questions relative to this subject. Dr. Brenton spoke with deep conviction and elicited much applause. Lawrence F. Abbott spoke for the People's Institute and placed his objections to the bill on record. While his arguments were brief they went to the root of the matter.

Littleton Makes Sport of the Bill.

The closing argument against the bill was made by former Congressman Martin W. Littleton. Mr. Littleton paid his compliments to the framer of the bill. While he was subjecting the provisions in the Cristman bill to a pitiless analysis, the author of the bill sat but a few feet away from him. Mr. Littleton caused a titter to go through the audience when he said that he would like to look at the man who drew the bill. The point of Mr. Littleton's attack was directed to what he described as the unfairness and illegality of the bill, which allowed the censors to arbitrarily recall their favorable decision, but which gave them no power to change their disapproval of a film. The Governor showed much interest as Mr. Littleton developed his argument and closely scrutinized the provision to which Mr. Littleton had called his attention. "The citizens of the State of New York," concluded Mr. Littleton, "are not ready to gulp this bill down." There was a very generous round of applause as Mr. Littleton sat down. The time allowed to the opponents of the bill had come to an end, but Mrs. Mary Gray Peck of the Federated Women's Clubs of America, was heard in a very able and convincing argument against the bill. She said that she had but three minutes to give the views of three million women, a remark which brought a smile to the Governor's face.

J. Robert Rubin submitted to the Governor an opinion on the unconstitutionality of the bill. This opinion was written by the former Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, Edgar M. Cullen. The substance of the opinion is as follows:

In my opinion the act recently passed by the two houses of the Legislature, and now submitted to the Governor for approval or disapproval, entitled "An Act to amend the education law, in relation to the regulation of moving picture exhibitions by a board of censors under the supervision and control of the regents of the State of New York," is in conflict with the Constitution, both State and Federal.

The right of the State to regulate the exhibition of moving pictures and to create a board of censors to examine such pictures and to forbid their exhibition, if improper, was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States in the recent case of the Mutual Film Co. vs. Industrial Commission of Ohio (236 U. S. 230), and, therefore, the proposed statute cannot be condemned on the ground that the subject is beyond legislative regulation and control. But, this act not only goes much further than the doctrine laid down by the court in the case cited, but is in direct hostility to the law, as declared in the opinion of the Court. It provides:

"The regents may, in their discretion, by a majority vote, revoke such approval of any such film or reel at any time. Such revocation shall be complete upon personal service of notice of such application upon the proprietor of such film or reel, or upon any agent of such proprietor having charge of the leasing, sale or exhibition of any such film or reel."

Of late years, both the Supreme Court of the United States and the State courts, have gone very far in sustaining the validity of legislation circumscribing the activities and privileges of the citizen. Nevertheless, in the very cases which sustain the legislative power in this direction, the courts have been careful to declare that the power has certain limitations. Thus, in the case I have cited, the court said in reference to conferring upon a board the power to license an exhibition of moving pictures:

"Undoubtedly, the Legislature must declare the policy of the law and fix the legal principles which are to control in given cases; but an administrative body may be invested with the power to ascertain the facts and conditions to which the policy and principles apply."

Tested by this rule, the present statute is bad. It will be noticed that the board of censors is directed to approve such pictures as it may find to be "moral and proper," and to disapprove of those it finds to be "sacriligious, obscene, indecent or immoral or tending to debase or corrupt the morals." This provision complies with the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, and, if the fate of a proposed exhibition of moving pictures ended with the decision of the board of censors, the validity of the statute probably could not be challenged. Nor would the fact that the determination of the board of censors is subject to review by the board of regents, render the statute invalid, if the action of the regents were governed by the same rule and principle as is prescribed for the board of censors. The statute, however, does not so prescribe, but, on the contrary, it prescribes the exact reverse. "The regents may, in their discretion, by majority vote, revoke such approval of any film or reel at any time. This distinction between the rule by which the power of the board of regents and that by which that of the board of censors is to be exercised is thus obvious; in fact, the draftsman of the bill has taken pains to emphasize that distinction. The determination of the censors is to be governed by a rule fixed by the Legislature; that of the board of education by its discretion. I know the disposition of the court—a justifiable disposition—to construe a statement so as to uphold its constitutionality, but, in this case, the draftsman of the act has made it certainly difficult; I think, impossible. It is plainly the intention of the statute to submit the right to exhibit to the uncontrolled will of the board of regents; uncontrolled either by a review in the courts or by any principle by which the power is to be exercised. For this reason the statute is void.

There is another ground on which, in my opinion, the unconstitutionality of the statute is fairly beyond dispute; that is, the arbitrary power vested in the board of regents to at any time revoke the license given by it or by its subordinate, the board of censors. The true interpretation and meaning of the part of the statute which I have earlier quoted at length, is not clear; on the contrary, it is very difficult or almost impossible to determine what is meant by it. But, under any construction that can be reasonably given to it the statute is bad. * * *

There are few subjects on which the judgment of even sensible men differ, more than on what should be the character of public exhibitions of any kind: pictures or others. Some think that all public plays should be prohibited, others draw the line between the opera and the theater, being willing to attend the first and thinking it wrong to attend the second. Some are shocked by the ballet, and some ballets are justly subject to criticism. I am not discussing who of these people are right and who are wrong in their views, nor which view should be adopted. But I assert that it is monstrous that, after the regular authorities have approved a proposed exhibition as proper, they should be allowed thereafter to arbitrarily change the determination and destroy all the money that the citizen has invested in the enterprise. Even if the statute were constitutional in this respect, it never should be approved. The greatest oppression of the citizen is caused by a bad constitutional statute. From a bad unconstitutional statute the citizen may defend himself in the courts.

But the proposed legislation is not only vicious but it is unconstitutional in another respect. The statute provides: "The regents may, in their discretion," revoke the approval of the pictures, "at any time." The regents are thus authorized to revoke the license at any time, and the revocation becomes complete on the service of a notice, as to what is to be the character of the notice, it is difficult to understand. Not only does the statute plainly so prescribe in words but, equally plainly, it was in the contemplation of the draftsman of the law, that a license already granted might be revoked by the board of regents at any time. There is no provision for giving the proprietor of the exhibition, any notice or hearing, and his property may be destroyed without his ever having had an opportunity to be heard in its defense. This is plainly unconstitutional, for no man can be deprived of his property without a hearing. Even in the case of a liquor license, the statute expressly provides for a judicial hearing before the license can be revoked, and the holder's business destroyed. For this lack of provision for notice and hearing, the statute is in conflict with the fundamental law of this state. It has been repeatedly declared by the Court of Appeals, in the tax case, that no tax is valid unless the citizens has a right to be heard. Equally no statute is valid which authorizes the revocation of a man's license to carry on a particular business, without offense on his part and without a hearing as to whether he has committed any offense. A power as monstrous as this, is not to be found on the statute books of this state, nor, I think, on that of any state.

Senator S. W. Cristman, the author of the objectionable bill, acted as the master of ceremonies for the advocates of his measure. The first speaker on his side was the Canon William Sheaf Chase of Brooklyn. The Canon frankly admitted in his opening remarks that the bill might be defective, but he thought that it made little difference. He said the act would not become operative until the first of August, and the Legislature, which is to meet in January, 1917, can easily remedy the defects now contained in the bill. Mr. Chase deplores the use of the word censorship. He drew a fine distinction between Roman censorship and English censorship. "English censorship," he said, "was identical with licensing." He believed that just as the chauffeur and the doctor and the lawyer had to be licensed, the film producer and exhibitor ought to be licensed. Here the Governor interrupted him to ask whether the Canon believed in censorship of the stage. The Canon dodged the question, but claimed that the Parliamentary Committee appointed to consider that question had reported in favor of stage censorship. The Canon said he was a great friend of the motion picture and that he had just installed a machine in his church. He believed that in five years from now the film men will come to him and thank him for his work in bringing about censorship. The Canon was followed by a sharp and austere looking gentleman who said he represented some Methodist churches. His name was Frank L. Brown. Mr. Brown favored the Cristman bill, because in his opinion it would keep the children away from bad pictures. Arthur Hinman, representing the Humane Societies of New York, severely criticised a scene in a recent picture which showed cruelty to a horse. He said the poor animal had been forced over a precipice and had almost been killed. He said further that everyone connected with the staging of this scene had been prosecuted and convicted. A local Catholic priest, Father J. A. Dunney, spoke against pictures in general and against the Chaplin pictures in particula . Mr. Manheimer, the president of the Brooklyn organized exhibitors asked the reverend gentleman whether he knew that under the law of the state no minor under sixteen was permitted to enter a moving picture theater except in the company of a guardian. Father Dunney made no reply.

A. J. Niles, who represented a Sunday Observance Society, admitted the defects in the bill, but thought that its good points should induce the Governor to sign it. Rabbi Morris H. Harris, of New York, contended that there was too much pleasure in modern life and that men go wrong not in pursuit of work, but in pursuit of pleasure. Francis J. Sullivan, a youthful lawyer from Brooklyn, representing the Catholic Holy Name Society, joined the speakers in favor of censorship. He was followed by another man from Brooklyn, Robert Sutherland, who said he represented the Brooklyn Sunday-School Union. Howard Clark Barber, of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, spoke in favor of the bill, but there was nothing new in his arguments.

It was close to six o'clock when the last word at the hearing was spoken. The Governor, good naturedly allowing the newspaper men to press him as to his probable decision, gave no inkling of his intention. The impression seemed to prevail that he might veto the bill, although he made no statement which would absolutely justify such a belief.

S. S. CASSARD TAKES BARRY'S PLACE.

S. S. Cassard has succeeded to the position of publicity man for the Nicholas Power Company, recently occupied by William Barry. Mr. Cassard has had considerable experience in the advertising business and should be a valuable addition to the Power company's staff.

DOC WILLAT WITH TECHNI-COLOR COMPANY.

C. A. Willat, who has been connected with the New York Motion Picture Company for several years, has left that company to join the Techni-color Company of Boston, Mass.

Lois Weber, Talks Shop

Author of Innumerable Photoplays and Director of As Many More May Remain in the East to Make a Big Picture.

A FEW weeks ago Lois Weber closed her desk at the Universal Company's Hollywood studio, banished plots and counterplots from her mind and set forth on a vacation. As she had been breathing the atmosphere of the west and the studio without interruption for four years, she concluded that a change of scene might be invigorating. Phillips Smalley, her husband and producing partner, conceded as much and remained at home to direct the artistic activities of the family, single handed, for an indefinite period. In fact, it is not at all improbable that before returning to Hollywood Mrs. Smalley will make a big picture in the east; something bigger than "Hypocrites" or "Where Are My Children?" or "The Dumb Girl of Portici." But all that is in the future, and just at present her program calls for relaxation and only such journeys from her rooms at the Astor as the whim of the moment inspires. Nonetheless, this is a "shop" talk.

Lois Weber.

Mrs. Smalley is a practical idealist, a woman who through long experience has learned the tricks of her trade. Knowing what is mechanically attainable, she does not write scenarios calling for impossible effects, nor is she content just to turn out workable scripts. Her ideal is to bring the screen into a closer relation with life, not to make long photoplays necessarily, but to make true photoplays. Her personality suggests inexhaustible vitality, a clear, active mind and the determination of a woman accustomed to dealing with men and beating them at their own game.

In accounting for the human touches so frequent in Mrs. Smalley's work—the subtle bits of sympathetic characterization—it is worth noting that she came in close touch with interesting phases of life during her most impressionable years before she became an actress. "I did missionary work in the slums of New York and on Blackwell's Island, especially among poor girls," she explained. "I know them and their problems, and not a few of my stories have been suggested by incidents recalled from those early experiences. It was this way with 'Shoes,' one of my most recent pictures, a story in which the central character, a poor girl, is drawn directly from a life filled with the keenest sort of drama and pathos.

"When people ask me, as they sometimes do, how I have kept on turning out scenarios month after month for the past half dozen years, I reply that I haven't any system. I can sit before a table, resolved to write, and the paper remains blank. Once I was quoted as saying that all I needed was an idea scribbled on a shirt cuff, and for weeks after that my mail was filled with so-called ideas, some of them actually scribbled on shirt cuffs. The only trouble was that the suggestions suggested nothing.

"But when the right kind of an idea does occur to me, the story immediately shapes itself without any conscious effort on my part. I outline the scenes, continuity and all, as fast as my hand can travel and very seldom do we find revision necessary, unless, of course, we decide to lengthen the picture, as in the instance of 'Shoes,' which I first conceived as a two-reel drama but later amplified because the subject matter and the leading player justified the increase."

We asked the name of the leading player and learned that it is Mary MacDonald. Then, not unnaturally, we inquired, "Who's Mary MacDonald?"

"The luckiest find I ever made," replied Mrs. Smalley. "When the film was run in the Universal projection room every man in the room fell in love with her. She's only sixteen and beautiful; but, more than that, she is the most sensitive and intelligent girl I ever directed. Her face is a veritable mirror of emotion. In describing a scene to her I would express in voice and gesture the mood to be conveyed, and with a naturalness that studied art cannot simulate she would become the character. This Mary MacDonald was born to be a screen actress, as you will see."

Presently the conversation shifted into a discussion of the rights of the photoplay author, as compared to those of the writer of books, and Mrs. Smalley optimistically looked forward to the day when they would be more on a par. "For a publisher to cut, distort and change the meaning of the work of an established author is inconceivable, yet manufacturers of photoplays still believe that, having paid the writer of a scenario, their responsibility to the originator of the story ends. Putting aside all artistic pride, there are sound commercial reasons for objecting to seeing one's name attached to a picture carelessly sub-titled and bereft of plausibility because of the elimination of essential scenes. This must not be taken as a personal grievance, rather as a protest against a condition from which nearly all authors and directors are suffering.

"On the other hand, the danger to which producers are constantly subjected was illustrated in the history of 'Where Are My Children?' An extraordinarily nervous little woman called on me one afternoon with a script. Her oddity aroused my interest, and I promised to read her scenario that evening. I liked the idea, we gave the woman a check, and had started the production before discovering that precisely the same plot had been sold to another company. After that I rewrote the story entirely, preserving only one of the original situations."

Loyal as she is to the west, Mrs. Smalley recognizes some advantages enjoyed by eastern producers, among them the comparative ease with which extras capable of appearing at ease in a drawing room may be obtained. The western studios, it seems, are not overrun with people accustomed to the manners of fashionable society, and the handicap is not inconsiderable for directors particular about the correctness of details, as are the Smalleys.

The Author Wins

Action Brought by Richard Barry Against the American Film Company and Others Decided in the Plaintiff's Favor.

WHEN the American Film Manufacturing Company contemplated producing the big feature picture, "The Secret of the Submarine," someone, in the preliminary negotiations for the story, overlooked the author of the same, with the result that that individual became a very troublesome person and commenced a suit to establish and protect his rights. The author in this case was Richard Barry and his action was brought in the Supreme Court of New York County for an injunction to restrain the American and the Mutual Film Corporation from producing the picture. Arguments in the case were heard on Thursday, May 11, by Justice Henry D. Hotchkiss sitting in Special Term. Justice Hotchkiss's decision and opinion were handed down on Monday, May 15. It reads as follows:

Plaintiff claims to have been the author and sole owner of the play and of all collateral "rights." He admits, however, that Smith (Russell & Smith) was at one time authorized to obtain and submit to plaintiff offers for the sale of the play, but he asserts that even this authorization was revoked. Smith's affidavits leave no room for doubt that he had no proprietary interest in the play and that at most his sole function was to act as plaintiff's agents for its sale. In both of the bills of sale Smith gave to defendant American Company he affirmed that he was the author and sole owner of the play and of all "rights." In the second of the two bills he further asserted that he was the "originator" of the "drama." These statements were clearly false, and it is apparent that in effecting the sale he not only suppressed the truth concerning the plaintiff's relations to the play and his rights therein, but that he effected the sale by means of false representations of ownership.

In purchasing the play defendant American Company dealt with Smith in his own right and in no sense as an agent of the plaintiff, and its title rests solely upon the bills of sale from Smith. It is apparent therefore that defendant American Company has no legal title to the play. What, if any, equitable title it may have depends upon Smith's right to act as plaintiff's agent, and, inasmuch as the decision of this question at this time depends in so large a measure upon Smith's credibility, I have no hesitation in finding in plaintiff's favor. The play was written to be produced, and defendant American Company is about to produce it. Whatever profits there may be can easily be ascertained, and the collateral "rights" are of too speculative and uncertain value to alone and under the circumstances justify an injunction. I will grant the motion on condition that a sufficient bond is given to cover any judgment it is probable plaintiff will secure. The amount of this bond can be suggested by affidavits on settlement of the order, in which care will be taken to limit the operation of the injunction to such of the defendants only as are shown to set up some claim in hostility to plaintiff. Settle order on notice.

As the matter stands now the American Film Manufacturing Company will put up the required bond, if it decides to produce the play, the amount of which was to have been determined on Wednesday, May 17.

Members of Chicago Local in Harness

The Various Committees Busy as Bees Preparing for the Big National Exposition and Convention.

THE members of the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America are at present busily engaged on their plans for the Sixth National Convention and Exposition of the M. P. E. L. of America, which is to be held at the Coliseum, this city, July 10 to 18, inclusive.

The following committees have been appointed:

Exposition, Finance and Publicity—Chairman, Louis H. Frank, John H. Frundt, August Zilligen, M. A. Choynski and Fred Schaefer.

Press, Entertainment and Reception—Chairman, G. M. Laing; C. C. Whelan, Sidney Smith, Fred Hartman, Harry Hyman, Julius A. Alcock and Robert R. Levy.

Committee on Printing and Badges—Chairman, H. Lieberthal; M. S. Johnson and Sidney Smith.

Wm. J. Sweeney, who was appointed special representative by the convention committee to attend the recent convention and exposition in Minneapolis, was well pleased with his success. He reported that many of the exhibitors there are much interested in the coming national exposition and convention in Chicago, and that they have promised to send a large contingent, and in the meantime to boost the big event in every way possible.

Mr. Sweeney also reported that he had gained some good ideas in the way of decorating and display advertising at the Minneapolis convention and exposition, which he intends using to good advantage in Chicago.

The special representatives appointed by the Chicago local to represent the Chicago branch of the M. P. E. L. of America at the exposition in Central Palace, given by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State, and the exposition given at the Madison Square Garden by the Motion Picture Board of Trade, were: Wm. J. Sweeney, Fred Schaefer, Louis H. Frank and Fred W. Hartman. These members will prolong their stay in New York to sell space for the coming exposition here, and will also try and make arrangements with producers for the presence at the Chicago exposition of some of the leading moving picture stars.

The members of the press committee of the Chicago local state that the Association of the Chamber of Commerce of Chicago is taking a very active part in working hand in hand with them to make the convention and exposition a great success. Thus far the members of the Chamber of Commerce have taken up the matter of special rates for exhibitors from points all over the country with the different railroads, and they have been assured of liberal reductions in the regular rates.

In addition to the big special features in the way of entertainment, there will be dancing every evening, also practical demonstrations showing how moving pictures are made, with many of the popular moving picture stars in the roles.

G. M. Laing, who has charge of the plans for decorating the Coliseum, states that nothing will be left undone in the way of beautiful light effects and decoration to make the interior of the big edifice worthy of the event.

Other committees are working and meeting daily in room 1413 in the Masonic Temple, where allotments of space for the exposition will be taken care of in the order in which applications are received. It is requested that all applications be made to Wm. J. Sweeney, chairman of the convention committee, or Louis H. Frank, manager of the exposition, at the address given.

EDGAR LEWIS WILL DIRECT "THE BARRIER."

Announcement that the important task of making a superphotoplay production of Rex Beach's novel, "The Barrier," has been entrusted by the Lubin Company to the direction of Edgar Lewis will be welcome news to all patrons and exhibitors of motion pictures.

The goal of the Lubin Company in this important undertaking is a screen presentation of Mr. Beach's popular novel, which will mark a distinctive advance in feature productions and in this direction a long step was taken when the direction was assigned to Edgar Lewis, a recognized past master in screen craft.

Mr. Lewis is enthusiastic over the opportunity to supervise the first production in the Rex Beach series. Now actively engaged in directing "The Light at Dusk," the Lubin Company's forthcoming feature by Anthony P. Kelly, the important work of selecting an ideal cast for "The Barrier" is receiving attention from Mr. Lewis. This item is to be made commensurate in strength to the story, which popular vote has decided to be Mr. Beach's most striking achievement.

Balboa Not Backing Contests

President Horkheimer Says His Company Has No Connection With Campaign for Actresses.

H. M. HORKHEIMER, Balboa's president and general manager, announces that his studio is in no way back of the classified advertisements that have appeared in various parts of the country, inferring that Balboa is promoting a contest whereby aspiring film actresses can get a chance to appear before the camera.

"The 'ads' said that five ladies were wanted to play leading parts," Mr. Horkheimer explained. "No experience was required and no salary would be paid—simply an opportunity provided to break into the film profession.

"It should be unnecessary for me to have to deny that such an offer emanated from Balboa. It has never been our custom to ask players to contribute their services. Our relations with all employes are on a strictly business basis.

"But lest some persons reading the advertisement should get a wrong impression of the Balboa Company, in the absence of knowing it personally, I will state that we are not in the habit of seeking cheap notoriety by encouraging inexperienced people to give us their time. To play leading parts in Balboa productions, only qualified players of experience are used.

"We have grown from modest beginnings and overcome many handicaps, until today Balboa is the largest actually independent picture producing studio in the industry. Hence, I am exceedingly desirous of preserving its good name and reputation. I cannot condemn too strongly the person who inserted the objectionable advertising with the unauthorized use of the Balboa Company's name."

Henry Otto, Now a Metro Director

HENRY OTTO, who is counted one of the most artistic directors in the country, has joined the Metro forces and in the future will direct the Metro wonderplays in which Harold Lockwood and May Allison are starred. Until recently Mr. Otto has been with the Universal. Among some of the notable productions made under his direction with that company is the Bluebird feature, "Undine," one of the most finished and artistic features made last year. Other productions directed by Mr. Otto recently are "Half a Rogue," starring King Baggot, and "Will o' the Wisp," with Jackie Saunders. Mr. Otto made his debut in motion pictures with the Selig company.

Henry Otto.

When Mr. Lockwood left Selig and went to the American company Mr. Otto followed him, as he has to Metro. While with the American Mr. Otto directed Winifred Greenwood and Edwin Coxen for more than a year and a half. Before going into motion pictures Mr. Otto was identified with the speaking stage for nine years.

Mr. Otto expects to do the best work of his career with Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison, as he thoroughly understands these stars and is in hearty sympathy with their every ambition.

BOSTOCK ANIMALS COMING EAST.

The well known Bostock Wild Animal Show, which has been exploited for the past year in connection with Horsley's pictures, at Los Angeles, Cal., is scheduled to come East and to be incorporated among the Luna Park attractions at Coney Island, New York. It is said that the collection will continue in the motion picture business at Luna Park, where they will be used t make pictures for the Mutual program, with the public as spectators of the work of production.

Tips to the Law Makers

J. A. Berst Picks Flaws in Federal Censorship Bill—Gives Dudley M. Hughes Strong Arguments.

IN connection with the Federal censorship bill now before the House Committee on Education at Washington, J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., has written the Hon. Dudley M. Hughes, chairman of the committee, a letter subjecting the bill to a keen analysis. Mr. Berst's reputation as a broad-gauged deep thinking business man is well known, and as he has made a very careful study of the bill his views will have a very decided interest to everyone in the film business. Certain defects in the bill which have heretofore escaped notice are dealt with by him briefly and to the point. The letter follows:

New York, May 4th, 1916.

Hon. D. M. Hughes, Chairman Committee of Education, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir.—I have read with great interest the notice that you sent me containing briefs and statements of the Federal Motion Picture Convention.

There are several matters which I would like to point out, and with your permission I will do so as briefly as possible.

I notice that the bill calls for the apppointment of five commissioners to be located in different cities, and that these commissioners shall have the power to appoint deputy commissioners. I think this is wrong. For instance, if the appointed commissioner of New York be a clergyman, he might select for deputy commisioners all, or nearly all, clergymen, and that would be a very poor representation to censor motion picture films. I believe that the board should be composed of a certain fixed number of censors, and that a picture should not be rejected by the vote of one person only. This is important, as today the majority of the pictures are five-reel features which cost an average of $20,000.00 each.

I believe also that the Board of Appeal should be composed of a fixed number of censors. All this is necessary in order that our industry obtain fair treatment.

The salary of commissioners and deputy commissioners should not exceed $5,000.00 and $3,000.00 respectively.

During the showing of the pictures to the censors, no one except the censors should be admitted in the room. Our experience has proven that in the past motion picture companies who sent a representative with forceful persuasive ways, succeeded nearly all the time in having their films passed, while films of the same character of other companies were condemned. It is absolutely certain that a board can be influenced by persuasive talk, and therefore, in order that the board can act more freely, it should have no relations with representatives of motion picture concerns.

Section 8 of the bill excludes actual bull fights and prize fights. This should be taken out of the bill. There is a real demand for prize fights and bull fights in certain states. Bull fights, for instance, are in good taste and wanted in New Mexico, Texas and Southern California. Prize fight films are in demand and make money in any state they are exhibited. It is easy for the censors to exclude from these films any part that might be offensive.

Section 9 requires the manufacturer to file a statement under oath that parts condemned together with the corresponding negatives have been destroyed. All manufacturers will be very much opposed to destroying negatives, as they have use for these negatives in foreign countries. It is a well-known fact that the taste of Americans is entirely different from that of the Spanish or Slavish countries, and it cannot be the intention of the Federal Board of Censors to pass judgment on films which are to be shown in Europe and South America.

Under Section 10, it is not quite clear if films can be transported through the several states for the purpose of export. I suggest that at the end of this section be added the words "in the United States."

It would be quite necessary that topical films which have to be shown to the public immediately and very often on the same day they happen, be exempted from review by the censors. This would necessitate the modification of Section 11.

Under Section 12, the fees are fixed at $2.00 per reel. The fees are too small and will not cover the expenses of the commissioners. It should be $4.00 instead of $2.00.

In the appendix, I notice that Section 9 provides that no copyright shall be issued for a film not licensed. This would be very injurious. For instance, many producers make films for releasing companies offering them for sale to several companies until they have found a purchaser. It is always up to the purchaser to attend to the censoring as the film has to be reconstructed and retitled to meet his particular requirements. Therefore, it would work a hardship for the producer to have to attend to the censoring, as under this condition he would place himself under the danger of having his production pirated, if he could not have it copyrighted.

Also if an American manufacturer should want to make special films for foreign countries, which films would not be adaptable for the United States, this would prevent him from copyrighting his films.

Under Section 10, a manufacturer could not export his films unless they had been licensed. He could not even have his cameraman in all parts of the country, shipping the film to him, and he could not transport exposed (but not developed) positives or negatives. This would practically put the motion picture news films out of business.

Section 12 would place a prohibitive fee on the whole industry. All manufacturers and exhibitors will be very much against paying a fee for each duplicate copy. This is superfluous, as the commission is not spending any time in looking into duplicate copies.

In the revised Smith-Hughes Bulletin, submitted by Dr. Crafts, I notice several things which are also objectionable.

In Section 5, I call your attention to the provision requiring condemned parts of films to be left in the custody of the commission. This should be eliminated, as these parts can be used for export by manufacturers. They cost money and should not be confiscated when they are submitted to a board for approval or refusal.

Section 7 provides that films can be licensed only on presenting the scenario. This is certainly wrong, as the scenario by no means gives an absolutely true reproduction of the motion picture.

Section 7 also provides for a tag to be attached to each container. This would be very troublesome, as the motion picture films do not remain all the time in the hands of the same individuals, but pass from hand to hand practically every day. It would be a hardship to impose this provision on the exchanges because of this and also the carelessness of exhibitors in not returning the containers, the tag on which corresponded with the motion picture within.

Believe me, very truly yours,

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

J. A. BERST, Vice President and General Manager.

Pathe Club Dinner and Dances

Prominent Players Join Officials and Employees in Festivities at Hotel McAlpin.

THE Pathe Club gave a dinner in the Green Room of the Hotel McAlpin, New York, on the night of Saturday, May 6, which was the second "get together" time which the club has enjoyed since the first of the year. One hundred and twenty-five members and guests were present, and after the dinner there was dancing until the wee sma' hours.

President J. A. Berst of the club, who is taking a great interest in the organization and under whose auspices it was reorganized a short time ago, entertained at his table several prominent guests.

With Messrs. Shallenberger and LeVino of the Arrow Film Corporation, were Mrs. Shallenberger, Alice Joyce, Katharine Gray, Guy Coombs, E. A. Bingham, and the stars of "Who's Guilty?", Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore. In addition to the celebrated players just mentioned Pathe's "peerless, fearless girl," Pearl White, was present at the dinner, as was Grace Darmond now starring for Astra.

Louis J. Gasnier, formerly vice-president of the Pathe Exchange, received an unroarious welcome as he came into the room with a party including Mrs. Gasnier, Leon Bary, who plays the heavy in his new serial, William Baker and Mr. Hart of Jersey City, and Hannah Kohn. Mr. Gasnier's welcome afforded good proof as to his popularity among his former associates.

Among other guests were Mrs. Paul Brunet, Mrs. P. Allen Parsons, Mrs. Geo. A. Powers, Mrs. F. H. Knocke, Mrs. Ramirez-Torres, Mrs. E. J. O'Connor, Miss Millhauser, Mrs. Edward Jose, Mrs. Geo. B. Seitz, Mrs. L. S. Williams, Mrs. A. J. Picard and Muriel Ostriche.

The Mittenthal Brothers, makers of the "Heinie and Louie" comedies, Geo. B. Seitz of the Astra, H. M. Osborne, manager of Pathe's Philadelphia office, Geo. A. Powers, the printer, Edward Jose, the producer of "The Iron Claw," Harold Davis of the Chronicle Press, and L. Gausman, were among the prominent associate members present. Telegrams of regret were read from the Horkheimer Brothers of Balboa, makers of "The Red Circle," Messrs. Whiting and Roach of the "Lonesome Luke Comedies," and W. A. S. Douglas, Pathe director of production, now on the Coast.

The club expects to hold an outing and picnic some time in June. It was organized last fall, its purpose being to promote good fellowship among Patheites in executive and clerical positions, and to aid those members in sickness and misfortune.

CHARLES J. POST WITH TRIANGLE.

Charles Johnson Post, author and artist, left New York last Saturday to organize a Pacific Coast branch of the publicity department of the Triangle Film Corporation. The Triangle aims to make Mr. Post the man on the ground who will standardize the distribution of the news of the coast studios and obtain through his close connection with the eastern offices and knowledge of their desires the kind of special material for which there is constant demand. Systematic organization and effective distribution is the Triangle slogan behind Mr. Post.

For more than twenty years Mr. Post has been active as an artist-journalist. His services at various times have been in demand by the Associated Press, the Times, World, Herald and Journal of New York, the Philadelphia Inquirer, Illustrated American, Century, Harper's, Pearson's, Cosmopolitan, Everybody's and Outing Magazines, and Harper's Weekly. These associations have taken him all over the world. Mr. Post's recent newspaper work has been for the New York Globe. His acquisition by the Triangle is regarded as an excellent move in bringing into the motion picture industry a new figure of the highest type.

LE SAINT TAKES A REST.

Ed. J. Le Saint, the widely known director, has resigned from the Universal company and is taking a rest before even looking into the several offers which already have been made to him. Mr. Le Saint is regarded as one of the most capable producers in the business. Stella Razeto, who in private life is Mrs. Le Saint, left the company at the same time and is at present enjoying the beauties of the new home which recently was completed for them.

June Bluebirds

"Shoes," a Lois Weber Production, and Other Good Subjects, Will Appear During the Month.

AMONG the Bluebird releases for June is "Shoes," a feature to be credited in its production and development entirely to Lois Weber, an immediate assurance of as near an approach to perfection as may reasonably be expected, says General Manager M. H. Hoffman, in announcing the forthcoming program of his organization.

"Shoes," appeared in Collier's Weekly early this year, contributed by Stella Wynne Herron, and based on an expression used in one of the works of Jane Addams, wherein it is related that a shop girl was compelled by relentless fate to submit to the decrees of poverty and literally sell out for a pair of shoes.

"Mary Ida McDonald makes her first appearance on the screen as the star of 'Shoes,' being a 'find' Miss Webster herself discovered. She is a girl of striking beauty with a most expressive face and illuminating eyes, a type exactly fitted to the character she portrays.

"There is more opportunity for exploitation in 'Shoes' than in any Bluebird we have produced, not excepting Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's 'Jeanne Dore,' with which our program opened," continues Mr. Hoffman. 'Every girl who toils long hours behind a counter; every person who labors half-paid for an existence, will be responsive to the tremendous appeal of its homely atmosphere.'

"Socialists and humanitarians will be especially attracted and the exhibitor who starts an immediate campaign to let his community know that Bluebird Photoplays are sending Mary McDonald, in 'Shoes,' to entertain them, will reap a great financial benefit when the feature arrives, on June 26, beside being the means of awakening his people to the humanitarian appeal of the film.

"'Bobbie of the Ballet,' in which Louise Lovely will appear in her regular order as one of our stars on June 12 will have a feature, directed by Joseph De Grasse, with a strong element of the stage dominating its exciting story. But the principal feature of the plot will be an exemplification of how some self-appointed 'mission workers' do more harm than their good intentions can overcome in the progress of their zealous pursuit of "faddisms," that they complacently believe is 'charity work.'

"'The Three Godfathers' is another humanitarian feature that will have wide appeal through its heart interest. Peter B. Kyne wrote the story for publication in the Saturday Evening Post, and it created an unusual amount of favorable comment when, a few months ago, it was printed. We secured the rights and Harvey Gates turned it over in scenario form to E. J. Le Saint for production. The result is a feature of exceptional merit.

"June will be the best month Bluebird exhibitors have had, in my opinion," Mr. Hoffman concluded. "We will deliver them the goods and it will be to their interest to exploit the features with every faith in their public being pleased."

Diversity in Pathe Program

A Serial, a Series, a Comedy, a Scenic and Educational, a Cartoon and Two Issues of the Pathe News, for Week of May 22.

PATHE offers, for the week beginning May 22, a program of nine reels in a variety of subjects. "The House of Serials," has a new episode of "The Iron Claw," a chapter of the "Who's Guilty?" series, a "Lonesome Luke" comedy, a split reel scenic and educational, a Goldberg cartoon comedy, and two issues of the Pathe News.

"The Hidden Face" is the name of "The Iron Claw" episode for release in the week of the 22nd, and in it the identity of the mysterious "Laughing Mask," "foe of evildoers," protector of Margery Golden and the particular aversion of the sinister Iron Claw, is revealed—but not to us. Its an episode fraught with thrills—and Pearl White.

"The Tangled Web" is "Who's Guilty?" release. It is a realistic modern two-reeler and tells of Ruth Alden (played by Anna Nilsson), and Fleetwood Blair (played by Tom Moore), a pair of lovers. Through the machinations of her guardian, Ruth is made to believe Blair has deserted her. She then marries Kendrick, but after a year finds him unbearable. Also she learns the deception her guardian practiced upon her. Meanwhile Blair, innocent of all this mess and madly in love with Ruth, searches for her. He finds her and together they financially ruin Kendrick, being themselves swept into the discard by his ruin. Query, "Who's Guilty?"

"Luke's Late Lunchers" is the name of the "Lonesome Luke Comedy. It's a one-reeler and shows Luke as the proprietor of a bean foundry, where the gentle flies mingle ever with the peaceful butter cakes. But they're the best butter cakes, so Luke doesn't worry for the flies digestions. He does worry though, when the beard of one of his customers gets into them in a manner of speaking, soup, and fixes things by tying said beard around the old one's neck. Of course, Luke can't get away with this stuff, and lots more like it, and the picture ends with a ludicrous scrap that wrecks the place and is "enjoyed by all."

"Saving the Shad Supply" is an educational film and one of the official pictures made for the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries and released with Government approval. It shows the various method of catching the shad, and how the fish culturist selects ripe shad from the catch, squeezes mature eggs from the females and fertilizes them by mixing a small quantity of milt from the males. On the same reel with the scenic is "Yunnen-Fou" (Southwest China). "Yunnen-Fou" is one of those intimate travel films for which Pathe is so well known, and is short enough not to be tiresome.

Rube Goldberg's second creation, following on his "Boob Weekly," is "Leap Year," which is, to tell it in Goldberg's own words, "the story of a forty-seven-year-old maiden who would have been more popular if all men were near-sighted." "Leap Year" is on the same reel with "How to Bring Up a Child," a nonsense film, heralded by Pathe as "something no wives or mothers should know."

Pathe News Numbers 42 and 43 will be released respectively May 24 and 27, and should be interesting numbers if they show such beats as they did in getting the Verdun battle scenes and the shooting of Policeman Reilly by his unwitting mate, Kilroy, at the Police Parade on May 6.

Big Picture Players' Carnival

Manager Rothapfel Arranges to Hold One During the Week of May 22 at the Rialto—An All-Star Event.

THE enthusiastic motion picture "fan" has in store for him the greatest treat ever designed for his delectation. The most unusual entertainment is planned at the beautiful new Rialto theater, New York, during the week of May 22, in connection with the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund.

A festival of personal appearances of stars of the screen in the flesh will take place at the Rialto, which will write a new chapter in theatrical and motion picture history. For the entire week there will be a series of tableaux presentations of film favorites for the personal greetings of their admirers. S. L. Rothapfel, director of the Rialto, is arranging the affair, together with Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the National Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Campaign, and Daniel Frohman, president of the Actors' Fund. The results of their labors promise to be sensational. The proceeds will go to the Actors' Fund.

The "fans" of the city have been treated to personal appearances of their favorites to quite an extent during the past few weeks, but this Rialto festival is to be on a much larger scale than was ever before attempted. Not only will it be the most stupendous affair of the kind in the number and prominence of the stars who will appear but in addition many of the leading men and women of the screen will be seen in a general public appearance for the first time. They have been persuaded to break their rule against personal appearances for this occasion on account of the efforts of the film industry to raise $500,000 for the endowment of the Actors' Fund.

All the leading figures of the screen world will be seen on the Rialto stage. The presentations will be arranged by days to include the men and women stars of all the big film producing companies. Combination nights will be given to the favorites from such studios as Lasky, Famous Players, Pathe, Vitagraph, Universal, Mutual, Metro and Thanhouser.

DUNCAN McRAE, VIOLA DANA'S LEAD.

Duncan McRae, the English dramatic artist, who has been the director general at the Edison company, is now appearing as leading man for Viola Dana in "The Flower of No Man's Land," in which both will make their debut on the Metro program. Mr. McRae is a brother of Bruce McRae and comes from a well known theatrical family, that has given several noted artists to the speaking stage and to the silent drama. Mr. McRae was last seen on the screen as leading man for Florence Reed in the five-part feature, "The Woman's Law," which was produced by the Arrow Film Company for the Pathe program.

Paramount Program

Variety of Interesting Short Subjects Strengthens the List for Week of May 29.

SHORT reel subjects released on the Paramount program for the week of May 29th will range in interest from the unmaking of a cake to a jaunt among the most murderous tribe of the Philippines. The usual features will include Earl Hurd's "Bobby Bumps Goes Fishing," Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, a Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Picture, "The Murderous Moros of Mindanao," and the Pictograph.

When Bobby Bumps decides to go fishing his Dad accompanies him for a fine time. Each takes a seat at one end of the boat, but luck favors Bobby and he gets a fish as soon as he throws his line in. Dad decides to change places, but as Bobby's luck continues he returns to his original position. This time the small boy jerks in his line so speedily that Dad is knocked into the water and becomes so angry that Bobby exits. Here the scene changes to the store where the hero buys a large stuffed fish, which he equips with a motor attached to a propeller at the fish's tail, which he throws into the water near Dad's boat. Dad continues his fishing, lands the fake fish and starts at once for the photograph gallery, where he has his picture taken with his catch. Returning home Dad describes the details to Ma, who at once detects the deception. Recognizing his defeat, Dad bribes Bobby and the latter exits victoriously.

To see the Moros, most troublesome of all the tribes of the Philippines, on the Island of Mindanao, their native heath, Burton Holmes continues his cruise through this distant archipelago in the seventeenth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, "The Murderous Moros of Mindanao." Zamboanga, capital of the Moros, is well worth seeing and here the natives are comparatively tame, while in the wilder parts of the Island they are in their natural and appropriate atmosphere.

Reversing the usual order of things, this release of the Paramount Pictograph shows a reel novelty in the interesting process of unmaking a Lady Baltimore cake. Butter, eggs, flour, nuts, milk and other ingredients are first shown in the films as they are put together into a snowy layer cake made after the receipt of Lady Baltimore, wife of the second Lord of Baltimore, who founded the Province of Maryland. As this receipe has never appeared in a cook book, the editors of the Pictograph's household department will send the formulas for cake, icing and filling, to any one writing to the Paramount Pictures Corporation, 485 Fifth avenue, New York City. Motion picture audiences will see how such ingredients may be literally unscrambled under the eyes of a startled cook and returned to their original forms on the pantry shelf.

"Better Babies" of all nationalities make their screen debut in another feature of this Pictograph, which also includes more preparedness films, and "Happifat and Rip Van Winkle" in the "Trickids."

Coming Universals

"The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring" Tops an Attractive Program for the Week of May 22.

THE feature of the Universal program for the week of May 22d is "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," with Francis Ford and Grace Cunard in the leads. Episode Four was made partly in Universal City, California, and partly in New York, where Miss Cunard obtained some wonderful new gowns for the play and where Mr. Ford completed arrangements with some big circus people regarding the sensational "big top" scenes included in the serial.

On Monday, May 22, King Baggot will be featured with Edna Hunter and Clara Beyers supporting in the five-reel Red Feather production, "Half a Rogue," upon which Mr. Baggot has been working for some time. Special posters will be issued with this Red Feather feature, including two six sheets with four-sheet streamers to be used for combination sixteen sheets or separately in addition to the regular two three sheets, two one sheets and window cards. On the same day's program Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Betty Compson will cavort about in the Nestor comedy, "Her Celluloid Hero," a romance of filmdom.

On the following day the feature will be "The Woman Who Followed Me," a two-reel comedy drama released under the Gold Seal brand and featuring Juan de la Cruz and Gladys Brockwell. On the same day Cleo Madison will appear, supported by Eddie Hearn, in the Rex drama, "Virginia," a feature of the Southland, and Bernarr McFadden, of physical culture fame, will appear with Allen Holubar in a strong-arm light comedy, "The Health Road." Arrangements have been made to show this feature in gymnasiums and Y. M. C. A. auditoriums all over the country where Mr. McFadden is known.

Mary Fuller leads off the program of Wednesday, May 24th, in "The Limousine Mystery," a two-reel drama to be released under the Victor brand, which relates an intensely absorbing story of a murder, which is not solved until the last fifty feet of film is flashed on the screen. "The Limousine Mystery" is followed by the L-Ko comedy, "A Busted Honeymoon," in which Alice Howell and Ray Griffith do the bustin'. On the same day Universal Photo fans will get their first glimpse of Animated Weekly No. 21, which Editor Jack Cohn says is a hummer for hot-stuff news events.

On May 25th Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson, will put on the two-reel Big U rural Decoration Day drama, "Corporal Billy's Come-back," which catches at one's heartstrings at the same time it brings the laughs. An unusually interesting Powers split reel follows "Corporal Billy's Comeback." In the first part the amusing cartoon character, "Mr. Fuller Pep," dabbles around in a pond in mirth-provoking fashion, and when his five hundred feet are done, dainty Little Lena Baskette, "Pavlowa, Jr.," is presented in a group of classic dances.

"The Unconventional Girl," a two-reel society drama, will be released under the Imp brand as the feature of the day's program on Friday, May 26. Edith Roberts and Joe Gerard play the leading roles in this drama of an unconventional girl who does some unconventional things, but finally forces her tempter to make good his misdeeds. On the same day Ben Wilson, with Dorothy Phillips, appear in a dainty little Rex comedy, "Harmony in a Flat," which deals in the main with the troubles of a couple of newlyweds in a Harlem bird-cage "apartment."

Another comedy, "Love and Brass Buttons," will be released on the same day under the Nestor brand, with Ray Gallagher and Billie Rhodes in the fun-making roles.

On May 27th Harry D. Carey and Olive Golden appear in "The Wedding Guest," a two-reel western drama of unusual plot and situations, while "Storming the Trenches," a Powers comedy, and "A Stage Villain," a Joker comedy, featuring William Franey and Gale Henry, closes the day's selection of pictures.

Ben Wilson, supported by Dorothy Phillips, appears in a timely three-reel special Southern Decoration Day drama, "A Gentle Volunteer," on Sunday, May 28. This feature deals with miscegenation and hinges on the adoption of an apparently white octoroon girl into an old Southern family in Civil War times. Just to finish up the day with a laugh the L-Ko comedy, "Gamboling on the Green," with Gene Rogers, Reggie Morris and Anna Darling doing the gleeful gamboling, follows up "A Gentle Volunteer" and "leaves 'em smiling."

POPULAR PICTURES TO RELEASE SHORTLY.

Popular Pictures Corporation of No. 218 West 42nd street, announces through its president, Milton M. Goldsmith, that this company's first release will be forthcoming within the next two weeks. The title will be "The House of Mirrors," which is a story replete with dramatic climaxes.

The story is by Frederick Chapin, and the picture was made under the direction of Marshall Farnum, by the Rialto Film Corporation. No less stars than Frank Mills, formerly of Triangle; Bliss Milford, formerly a Pathe star; Harry Spingler, formerly of Fox; Rudolph Cameron, Lillian Kemble, Runa Hodges and Jack Curtis will be featured.

There is more than the average touch of heart interest in this picture, as the lives of all the characters are touched and crossed at some time during the progress of the story. Mr. Farnum's work as a director is so well known that it goes without saying that the picture will be up to the highest standard of art.

It is also announced that, beginning September 1, Popular Pictures Corporation will begin releasing a regular feature program consisting of one feature each week. These releases will be the products of some of the highest class producing companies in the business.

GRACE WILSON IN HORSLEY'S COMPANY.

Grace Wilson, late of the Fine Arts studios, has been added to the company in which Margaret Gibson and William Clifford are co-stars. Her first appearance will be in one of Theodosia Harris' two-part dramas in a character role such as has caused wide attention from theatergoers in the past. Clair Alexander, a young woman still in her 'teens, is among the new arrivals at the Horsley studios. She has already been seen in two of the Cub comedies in support of George Ovey, and is now playing her third part.

Big List of Mutuals

Thirty-one Reels and a Wide Variety Embraced in the Program for Week of May 22.

TWO Masterpictures, de Luxe Edition, with Winnifred Greenwood, Franklin Ritchie, Edythe Sterling and Norbert A. Myles the featured players, head Mutual releases for the week of May 22. Thirty-one reels, presenting a wide variety of themes and subjects, with many interesting and thrilling situations, comprise the Mutual release for this week.

"Nancy's Birthright," a Signal production featuring Miss Sterling and Mr. Myles, is the first of the Masterpictures to go to the public. It will be released May 22. Power of will to destroy inherited criminal traits is the all powerful theme treated in the story on which this production is founded. Director Murdock MacQuarrie, under whose supervision the piece was filmed, and Clarice Manning MacQuarrie, the author, have collaborated in the treating of this subject along lines never before attempted in a screen drama. Director MacQuarrie also appears in the production, playing the part of "John Martingale," wealthy head of a large iron works. Millard K. Wilson and V. T. Henderson are other members of the cast.

"Reclamation," from the American studios, which is to be released on May 25, is from the pen of Kenneth B. Clarke, author of a number of Masterpictures de Luxe Edition which have come from the Santa Barbara studios. It was screened by Director Edward Sloman, who worked for many days with the members of his company in the desert, where considerable of the story takes place.

"Reclamation" is an unusually stirring story of the West, in which an interesting love theme adds considerably to the plot and action of the piece. The scenes, particularly those depicting the great waste of sand, are actual and bring before the public with striking realism the horrors of the deserts where men perish for lack of water. For the filming of several of the scenes the great irrigation plants of the Imperial Valley in California were used.

Miss Greenwood is seen in the role of the true daughter of the West. Mr. Ritchie handles an exceedingly difficult role with the ease of a veteran.

"Armadale," from the Gaumont studios, based on the celebrated novel of the same name by Wilkie Collins, is the title of the three-part feature of the same week. It will be released on May 25. This is the first of the new features of this length to emanate from the Gaumont studios, under the change of policy recently inaugurated. One of these features will be released every other week, and in them will be featured one or more of the stars who have frequently appeared in Masterpictures, de Luxe, screened by Gaumont. Richard Garrick, director of the drama, has made an excellent screen story of this popular Collins novel and has followed the plot and action with exceptional faithfulness. Iva Shepard, famous for her "vampire" roles in Gaumont Mutual productions, will be seen in the role of Miss Gwilt, the maid, while Alexander Gaden essays the role of Ozias Midwinter. Others in the cast are Henry W. Pemberton, Lucille Taft, Harry Chira, Kathleen Butler, Robert Clugston, John Rinhard, James Levering, Charles A. Travis, John Mackin and several others equally as popular.

Four two-reel subjects are included in the releases for the same week. "Repaid," first of these short length features, is an American production. It will be released May 22. Lizette Thorne and Edward Coxen have the principal roles.

"For Uncle Sam's Navy," from the Thanhouser studios, with Kathryn Adams and Edwin Stanley in the leading roles, is a stirring story of the nation's navy. It will go to the public May 23.

The Mustang two-reel subject will be released on May 26 under the title of "Jack," starring Anna Little and Frank Borzage.

"The Kaffir's Gratitude," a powerful story of the African jungles, with Margaret Gibson, the star, is the Horsley contribution to the two-reel dramas. In this release the celebrated Bostock animals play an important part. "The Kaffir's Gratitude" will be released May 27.

Mutual comedy releases for the week are comprised of a number of excruciatingly funny single reel subjects, featuring a host of noted Mutual laugh-makers. "Politickers," featuring Claude Cooper and Frank McNish in the comical roles of "Conrad and Oscar" and "Sammy's Semi Suicide," with Walter Hiers, the principal, are the Falstaff contributions. They will be released May 22 and May 27 respectively.

The Vogue comedies include "Rival Rogues," with Rube Miller and Madge Kirby, for release May 23, and "National Nuts," to be released May 28. "Beauty" offerings for the week include "Adjusting His Claim,' with Carol Halloway and John Sheehan, to be released May 24, and "The Pork Plotters," starring Oral Humphrey. It will be released May 28.

George Ovey, the diminutive Cub-Mutual comedian, is the hero of "Preparedness," a laughable take-off on the question now holding national attention. It will be released May 26.

Mutual Weekly No. 73, presenting a number of exclusive pictures of Gen. Pershing's Mexican Expedition, "See America First," presenting an interesting trip through Savannah, Ga., and Harry Palmer's comic cartoon, "The Escapades of Estelle" with "Reel Life" the third issue of the new and exceedingly popular single reel subject, complete the releases for the week. "Mutual Weekly" and "See America First" will be released May 24. "Reel Life" will go to the public as regularly scheduled on Sunday, May 28.

New Faces at Famous Players Studio

Peggy Hyland, Ann Pennington, Louise Huff and Others Have Recently Joined Pioneer Producers' Staff.

THAT the productive activities of the Famous Players Film Company are rapidly increasing is evident to any casual visitor at the company's studio, on West 56th street. In addition to the many familiar faces of the celebrated stars who have long been associated with the concern, Mary Pickford, who will soon be seen in "Hulda from Holland"; Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, and Hazel Dawn, there are others who, though well known in the theatrical and motion picture world, are comparative strangers in the Famous Players studio.

Louise Huff.

Among them are Peggy Hyland, the little British star who is working on "Saints and Sinners," in which she will make her American debut, Louise Huff, whose great success as the country lassie in "The Old Homestead" won her a permanent place on the Famous players roster. Ann Pennington, the diminutive star of the Ziegfeld Follies, is already playing Susie Snowflake—the titular character in which she will make her screen debut. Valentine Grant, who won a reputation by her clever work in Irish productions, has just completed "The Innocent Lie," which was staged in Bermuda.

In the directorial staff there has been one important addition, in the person of Joseph Kaufman, who was formerly a member of the Lubin Company, and is now directing Pauline Frederick in an adaptation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's "The World's Great Snare." Robert Vignola, who has supervised Miss Frederick's more recent activities, is now directing a big production in which there will appear several well-known players who have not before been seen in Famous Players productions, among whom are Grace Valentine and Crauford Kent.

Louise Huff is now on Block Island doing a sea coast story, "Destiny's Toy," in which she plays a fisher maid. The elevation of Miss Huff to a place of permanency by the Famous Players will be a welcome event for the thousands of admirers which her beauty and rare talents have won for her in her clever work in the films of other producers.

These increased activities are only indicative of a natural and healthy growth of the producing company, which was the pioneer in the launching of a program devoted to the presentation of celebrated plays and stars on the motion picture screen.

EUGENE HOWLAND JOINS METRO.

Eugene Howland, until recently a member of the Edison forces, has been engaged by Metro as an assistant director. He will be associated with John H. Collins, and his first work on the Metro program will be seen in "The Flower of No Man's Land," in which Viola Dana is starred. Mr. Nowland has many years of training as an artist and draughtsman before he went into motion pictures.

Victor Miller Talks of the Congo

Young Cameraman Describes a Few of His Experiences in Equatorial Africa.

SOME of the troubles of a cameraman in equatorial Africa were outlined the other day by Victor Miller, who in the summer of 1915 spent four and a half months in the Congo country in search of subjects for his camera. Mr. Miller, who is chairman of the press committee of the Cinema Camera Club, is contemplating a return trip to this strange country. If he undertakes it he will be able to profit by the experiences of his first journey; he will make different arrangements for developing his film. It is this phase of tropical work wherein rest the greatest difficulties for the exploring cameraman.

Mr. Miller left New York on January 31 and arrived in the Congo country on April 1. At first he encountered opposition from the Foreign Trade Office of the British Government. "I had the job of my life to convince the officials that I wanted supplies to enable me to go into the interior to make pictures," said the cameraman. "I had to appeal to the Belgian Colonial Office to help me out.

"My conception of the Congo country was limited. My only knowledge of it was such as I had been able to gather from reading the works of Henry M. Stanley on exploration in the Belgian Congo. At Metadi I took the narrow gauge railroad to Kimsheda. Here the heat was killing. My assistant, Frank Farrell, of Chicago, was taken down with a serious case of malarial fever. The state doctor told him he must get out of the country quick if he was to get out at all. It was the only thing to do, and he did it. That left me on the job with sixty-seven cases of baggage, camera, chemicals and provisions to handle without the aid of another white man.

"You may believe me when I tell you that a cameraman on a tropical expedition has many things to worry about besides the climate. I had my chemicals in specially soldered tins, fixed up in London by an expert. The English missionary at Kinsheda advised me to proceed to Equatorville—and as you may guess, that is just on the equator—where I would find an American missionary, which I did.

"One of my initial difficulties was the fear of the native helpers for the camera. I was forced to appeal to the missionary to explain to them its mysteries, which he did to their satisfaction. They called it the 'jijijingi,' which in Congo means the reproduction of a shadow, not a half-bad term, you will agree. One of the things that much impressed the natives was a print of a close-up. Another was a flashlight, an electric storage torchlight battery. I finally succeeded in inducing one of them to press the button. They called it the 'wonder of the white man.'"

Mr. Miller had one close call. It was his custom to take his canoe ashore each noon for the midday meal. In the big craft with him, going down the Bussira river, were fourteen natives. On the occasion in question a stop was made at a small fishing village. As a result of a disagreement between the Congoese in Mr. Miller's party over an attempt on the part of the inhabitants to charge eight prices for one chicken there was a small riot. In order to stop the fight Mr. Miller got his men into the boat. Showers of stones followed them. The natives got too close for comfort at a bend of the river. As a shot fired over the heads of the attacking party failed to stop them Mr. Miller was compelled to fire into the water, slightly wounding two of the assailants, who had no weapons. There were no more stones thrown.

The remainder of Mr. Miller's experiences were mechanical troubles, mostly in developing, as he modestly expressed it. The ultra violet rays are so strong, the cameraman explained, that if the film is not developed immediately after exposure the negative image will fade. In a majority of cases where there was a delay in developing the negative would be reversed to positive, and it seemed to make no difference how much he "cut down" on his exposure. Mr. Miller carried a tent which he used for developing. One of the difficulties was keeping the water cool. He had no means of judging the intensity of the heat. A recorded given temperature of the water seemed in its effects to be higher than what he had reason to expect, or "higher than normal." The lowest water temperature noted was 74 degrees. It was almost impossible to keep the emulsion hard.

Mosquitos proved to be a genuine pest. The insects seemed to be at the height of their power when the cameraman was developing film. "They were filled with malarial germs, and they got on my nerves," said Mr. Miller. "My head would swim. One time I had to run out of the tent and sacrifice 400 feet of film. Remaining was impossible. The next morning the film was lightstruck."

There were transportation handicaps, too. The natives will not touch a burden that exceeds sixty pounds. At the start of his expedition he had sixty bags of salt. This commodity has money value. In fact, the natives were paid in it each night—a cupful. Land travel was especially hard. Much of the country is swampy. For hours at a time, Mr. Miller said, his party would travel over logs. A mis-step would mean a plunge into mud of a most unpleasant sort. Bathing also presented difficulties. Swimming in the river was out of the question on account of the crocodiles. On one occasion, visiting a village, he was provided with a bath. He discovered before he had completed his much needed wash that the function had been seized upon by the natives as a sort of holiday. The embarrassment of the white man did not extend to the blacks.

"Camera work was possible only at certain hours," said Mr. Miller. "I could 'shoot' from about 6 to 10 o'clock in the morning and from about 3 to 4.30 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon. For the rest of the day a white man, if he have any regard for his life, must keep out of the sun. It also takes two or three months to get accustomed to light conditions."

Mr. Miller exposed in all 30,000 feet of negative, but owing to the climate and the impossibility of developing film in the Congo country he lost a majority of it. He was told, however, by an authority in London that he had brought out of the Congo belt a larger amount of stuff than had any of his predecessors. One of the subjects which he particularly regretted losing was a rehearsal of the beheading ceremony by one of the tribes. He saved some, but not enough to preserve the continuity. During the taking of this picture Mr. Miller had been uneasy at times that the participants in their fanatic zeal would transform the play into an actuality.

Mr. Miller praised the fidelity of the natives. "Once you can induce them to work for you," he said, "they will fight for you if you treat them squarely. I knew no Congo when I went in. I had a list of names prepared for me by a missionary. One of my men knew a bit of English. Much of our 'conversation' at first was in signs."

The cameraman participated in the killing of three elephants. The number of flies of the tsetse variety that met death at his hands was not counted. Not one in ten thousand of these may carry the germs of the deadly sleeping sickness, but when one silently alights on a man's body there is no time lost in "swatting" it. Each one in the party took care of the one next to him and with a quick stroke would annihilate any insect he detected. Mr. Miller remarked that there would be many evidences of the slaughter at the end of the day, as the fly is full blooded.

Mr. Miller traveled 1,000 miles on the Congo and 600 miles on its branches. He says when he goes on his next expedition he will carry either an ice machine or a quantity of sal ammoniac, for its cooling influence on the water. He believes he will bring back a class of films never before seen by white men.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of May 14 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

H. B. Warner at the Rialto.

H. B. WARNER headed the bill at the Rialto in a Triangle photoplay, "The Market of Vain Desire," a sociological study of the "upper crust," by C. Gardner Sullivan. The star was seen as a young clergyman, who "goes right" in spite of the efforts of the social set to reduce him to a ballroom ornament. In addition to this feature Director S. L. Rothapfel provided an attractive program of spring novelties, both from a musical and visual standpoint. As a seasonable offering a beautiful botanical study was shown. The travelogue took one to Egypt and for a visit to a typical Nubian city. The news features included late developments on the battle fields of Europe and in Mexico and current events of a general character. A Keystone comedy of the Keystone standard of absurdity completed the bill.

Hazel Dawn at the Strand.

The Strand theater presented Hazel Dawn in "The Feud Girl," a screen play produced by the Famous Players Film Company. As the title indicates, this photoplay concerns itself with a mountain feud. The principals were taken to the mountain regions of northern Georgia, where their number was augmented by many picturesque local types, who brought to the making of the picture an authentic touch that could never have been given by supers. The rugged country in which the pictures were taken made a sterling background for the elemental story of feudal peoples.

To support the feature of the program Managing Director B. A. Rolfe supplied the Strand Topical Review, Strand Fashion Pictorial, a cartoon comedy and a short farce comedy. The musical program included solos by three of the Strand's favorite artists.

"Alien Souls" at the Broadway.

Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese actor, is at the Broadway theater, in the Jesse L. Lasky-Paramount production, "Alien Souls," a photodrama written by Hector Turnbull. In "Alien Souls" Hayakawa is seen as a wealthy dealer in Japanese curios. He is deeply in love with a young Japanese girl, for whom he is supplying an education at a leading American school. How this beautiful young Japanese girl falls into the clutches of a money-mad young American, and is finally brought to realize that "East is East and West is West," is shown during the action of the play. Hayakawa is supported by Tsuru Aoki, the niece of Madam Lacco, the famous Japanese Bernhardt. Charlie Chaplin in "The Floorwalker," his first Mutual two-part comedy, was added to the program on Monday and remained throughout the week. The latest news events from all over the world, colored scenics and cartoons were also shown.

COLLINS TO DIRECT VIOLA DANA.

John H. Collins, one of the youngest but also one of the most successful directors in the country, has signed a long time contract to produce Metro wonderplays and his first feature will be "The Flower of No Man's Land," in which Viola Dana is starred. This production will also mark Miss Dana's debut with Metro. Mr. Collins is but twenty-three years old and before he was out of his teens he was general stage manager for seven directors in the Edison studio, where he supervised the construction of more than 5,000 studio sets during the two years he held that important position.

JULIAN FINISHES THE TRANSFORMATION."

Director Rupert Julian, at Universal City, has finished a two-reel society drama entitled "The Transformation," from a story by Elsie Jane Wilson, who also appears as a featured lead with Julian, supported by Douglas Gerrard and H. F. Crane. The scenario was prepared by E. J. Clawson.

Emile Chautard

EMILE CHAUTARD, now working with World-Paragon at the new Paragon Studios, under the direction of William A. Brady, is the honor man of the World roster this week by reason of the completion and release of his most recent effort, "Sudden Riches," in which Robert Warwick again makes his appearance on the World Program.

Emile Chautard.

Mr. Chautard is completing his year with the World Film Corporation and his seventh production for that company. Some of the other pictures were "The Boss," "Old Dutch," "Human Driftwood" and "Sudden Riches," and is now busily engaged on Thomas W. Lawson's elaborate story, "Friday the Thirteenth."

Chautard and Maurice Tourneur were companions during their student days in the Latin Quarter, Paris. Tourneur was studying art, while Chautard was endeavoring to learn the intricacies of stage technique. Several years later they met at the Theater Francais, where Tourneur and Chautard were engaged in making a production. They separated and were again drawn together in the early days of film making in the various studios around Paris.

Chautard took up film production and when the Eclair Company began operation in Paris, he was one of the mainstays of that organization. Mr. Brady has assigned a number of highly important productions to Chautard for the coming season and beginning with "Friday the 13th" will keep him busy right through the hot months into the fall. Chautard, in addition to being an actor, director and film author, is at work on a book entitled "Film Photography," which is to be published by a French publishing house and which it is thought will be translated into English and published here.

VAN DEUSEN INTERNATIONALIZED.

Cortland J. Van Deusen, one of the youngest and most successful directors in the business, has been signed by the International Film Service, Inc. Mr. Van Deusen played for a season in stock and in Shubert productions. Following this he went to California, where he was associated with the Kalem, Thanhouser and Kinemacolor companies. Returning to New York he was employed by the Biograph Company and later went with the Famous Players. Mr. Van Deusen left this organization for a splendid position with the Vitagraph Company, where he was featured for two years. He became associated with Sidney Drew, remaining with that comedian for some time.

Next he directed several pictures, "Keyboard Strategy," "Conquest of Constantia," "Between Two Fires," and "In Arcadia." His last work with the Vitagraph was a Blue Ribbon Feature "Behind the Curtain," with Lillian Walker. Mr. Van Deusen's past experience should prove highly valuable to him and to the International Film Service, Inc.

DES MOINES SCREEN CLUB GIVES BALL.

The newly organized Des Moines Screen Club is making its first public bow by holding a big ball and convention in the Auditorium at Des Moines on May 23 and 24, with the Iowa Exhibitors' League. The booths were occupied by exchanges and accessory dealers, and all were eagerly snapped up, some of the exchanges taking two spaces.

The ball is being given to raise funds for the Actors' Benefit Fund and to fight censorship in Iowa. Although that State does not have such a law now, each year legislation is introduced hitting at the unlimited showing of pictures. The Iowans are not awaiting the passing of the bill, but are taking the initiative and have already started fighting it.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE rats are at the cheese again in Washington. The long and profound silence that followed the introduction of the several censorship bills at the National Capitol last winter led many to believe that reason and fair play had prevailed against the rantings of the agitators and the lawmakers had dropped the measures. It now appears that the bills were not dead, but only sleeping. Simultaneous with an announcement that Rev. Crafts has started from Washington on an extensive tour of the country to work up sentiment in behalf of his censorship ideas comes a statement that within a few days the Educational Committee will favorably report to the House the Smith-Hughes bill with modifications. It is also stated that Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia, has presented a new bill on censorship to the Senate. It is not antagonistic to the measure now in the hands of the Educational Committee of the House, but is what may be termed an accident insurance policy. Despite all conditions and cost the agitators are determined to keep up their battle. If the Smith-Hughes bill should be defeated in the House they will have the Hoke Smith bill in store as ammunition for another battle.

With Washington once more upon the job, the fight against the Cristman-Wheeler bill, in Governor Whitman's hands, is in full sway, and equally bitter fights on censor bills being made in Indiana and Massachusetts, the main topic of discussion in moving picture circles and the leading periodicals devoted to the trade is censorship. For the immediate present New York is the chief seat of war. All eyes are upon the master workmen watching for the signal that is to start the march upon Albany to convince Governor Whitman that the obnoxious Cristman-Wheeler bill should not prevail. One of the chief events at the expositions of both the Exhibitors' League and the National Board of Trade were campaigns for signatures to protests against the bills and if there is any virtue in the number of signatures to petitions the bill is already a dead one.

In a recent issue reference was made to the conversion of one of the most prominent exchange men of the country to the Federal Commission idea, as the lesser evil. Since making the declaration the exchange man has been communicating with the chairman of the Educational Committee at Washington on the Federal bill. When we first learned of his conversion we were at a loss to understand it, unless his object was to publicly endorse Federal regulation as against all state and local censorship. After reading his letter to Chairman Hughes we must plead ignorance as to his convictions in any respect. It would take a Philadelphia lawyer to determine whether he is for or against the moving picture interests, or for or against the Federal measure. One of his objections is to a section of the bill which fixes a fee of two dollars on each reel of negative passed upon. Mr. Berst says this fee would be too small to cover expenses and it should be fixed at four dollars. Now what do you think of that! As a moving picture man we think he has gone outside his latitude. These politicians need no advice as to the regulation of fee schedules. It is an old business with them and if the bill passes with an under estimation of revenue they will lose no time in raising the fees. For this the exchange man deserves a slap on the wrist.

Our esteemed convert asks that pictures of prize fights and bull fights be excluded fro n the bill, because they are wanted in New Mexico, Texas and Lower California, and prize fight films are big money makers and in great demand in all states. There is another poser! It is a mighty good thing that in announcing his conversion to the Federal measure he did so as an individual and not as a representative of the moving picture industry as a whole. It is inconceivable that any one could seriously arrive at a train of thought that would induce him to accept censorship of all moving picture films except those bearing upon prize fights and bull fights. It may or may not be true that the latter films are favorites in New Mexico, Texas and Southern California, but it is known to managers throughout all other parts of the country that audiences will not tolerate exhibitions of bull fight pictures. As to prize fights, it makes little difference what bearing censorship may have upon them as the Inter-Commerce Act already has them in charge and until that act is revoked the pictures could not be shown, even if excluded from the Federal censorship bill.

Mr. Berst also objects to news, or topical films being included in the censorship bill, because it is necessary that such films be exhibited immediately to preserve their value to the producer and exhibitor. In this contention he brings the moving picture films and the newspapers to the same plane, but we scent a personal motive. There seems to be an inclination on the part of the Washington committee to exclude news films, the intention being to let them go on special permit which may be revoked if the films be found improper. If this prevails, the moving picture people who are unqualifiedly opposed to official censorship will have an opportunity to shoot the bill so full of holes in the courts that there will be nothing left of it but the record of its passage. What Mr. Berst suggests with regard to news pictures is what the moving picture industry is contending can be provided to apply to all pictures by a brief amendment to an existing Federal law and without censorship in any form.

Another interesting problem is offered by Mr. Berst's letter. He is opposed to that part of the proposed law which provides that no film can be copyrighted until it has been approved by the censors. He says many companies produce films to sell to others and are obliged to exhibit them several times, perhaps, before securing purchasers. Unless the subject is copyrighted they may be pirated before a sale is made. Mr. Berst would have the law changed so that the producer could copyright the films and the purchaser could deal with the censorship board. There is not much weight in this contention. It savors of the story of the man who bought a pig in a bag. In the first place, under the proposed law, what right would a producer have to sell, or exhibit for selling purposes, a film that has not been censored? In the second place, what position would the Government be in if it should accept a film for copyright in one department and refuse to license it for censorship reasons in another?

We cannot agree in this contention of Mr. Berst's for another reason. The kind of producers he refers to, at least most of them, are those who have been an injury to the moving picture industry. Their interloping methods have put the business in a precarious condition. With little or no capital they have invaded the field and with productions of little merit they have built up a cut-rate market that has seriously interfered with the legitimate efforts of those who have invested real money and spent years of labor to advance the moving picture art to its true standard. If the Smith-Hughes bill, or any similar measure, is to become a law, the provision for censorship before copyrighting should stand. It will save the Government from getting into controversies and will protect the purchasers of the pictures. If a producer has not enough confidence in the merits of his films to go with it before the board of censors he stultifies himself and has no claim for protection of the law. If he is afraid his film will not bear inspection he should not expect a copyright, much less should he expect the law to allow him to take the money of a purchaser and leave the purchaser to the mercy of the censors.

There are two points Mr. Berst makes in his letter in which we fully concur. One is that no board of censorship should be created in which the clergy have controlling power. The other is that condemned parts of negative should remain the property of the producers. Little need be said on the first proposition. The experience the moving picture people have had with most of the clergymen who have been active in censorship matters justifies the protest and there is no reason, if a Federal board of censorship is to be created, why it should not be absolutely impartial. As to the second proposition, the condemned parts of negative should remain the property of the producer because to confiscate them would be imposing an uncalled-for penalty. They represent a value to the producer. Although rejected here they might easily pass in the foreign market and prove of great value to the products in that market. If a producer should comply with the requirements of the censors they have no more jurisdiction over him. If he cuts out objectionable parts and subsequently uses them within the jurisdiction of the board—in the United States—the proposed measure provides for his punishment. The censors can have no jurisdiction of the parts in foreign countries and if they are acceptable there the producer should not be deprived of an opportunity to retrieve some of the loss he has sustained by their condemnation here. There can be no danger of the condemned parts being exhibited in the United States after export to foreign countries because the proposed law gives the censors jurisdiction over imported films.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Overshowing.

OCCASIONALLY George Editor Carpenter brings out Real Reels with something exceptionally good. Any issue is worth reading, but now and then he makes a bulls eye that spreads clear to the edges of the target in its sweep. In a recent issue he does one of his fake fables, this time about the common process of trying to hurt a competitor by booking all the regular services and running as many reels of this as possible, while paying for it all. The hero of his fable is praised by some for his generosity in showing twelve reels, but the saner element rises to remark: "Behold motion pictures are an amusement; not hard labor."

Just let that phrase sink in. Ten or twelve reels of pictures in a straight run is not amusement. It is hard work. It is an infliction to the intelligent person to sit through a twelve reel show, particularly when the same backhanded reasoning that leads an exhibitor to show so long a program also induces him to speed up to get the show over and another house in, and as George E. further puts it, "the glad tidings of the satisfied patron hath ten 24 sheets on the main street of a burg beaten to a frazzle." And for this same reason George E. puts in a plea for the rebooking of the feature that has made a hit. More and more the exhibitors are coming to realize that the show that has made better than merely good is a better repeat than an unknown first run. If you have not tried it, do so, and boom the repeat because it is a repeat.

And as a further shaving from the Carpenter shop, read this:

> When the other fellow down street gets all het up and starts in to put you out of business by taking a crack at your show and methods through the medium of slides on his screen, nasty little unethical digs in his newspaper and bill board advertising, you can afford to smile up your sleeve and leave him alone, because you have got his goat!
> When busybodies come romping up your foyer with the startling news that Mr. Jones is knocking you and your show in every saloon, cigar store and pool room in town, you have another smile coming because the more he keeps this up the more will the general public wink the other eye and aver that your show must be something out of the ordinary if it gives Jones such temperamental spasms every time it is mentioned in his presence.
>
> Do you get the point? Leave Jones and his show alone. Every move he makes is a boost for you, provided you really have the goods.

Own Their Boards.

H. C. Clauer, of the Dreamland, Galena, Ill., sends in a photograph of his private bill board. It is a real photograph, too. Also it is a real bill board, though we do not quite like those date strips. Since it is to be presumed that he regularly runs three changes a week, it would be effective to have permanent boards, lettered with the days, that could be affixed to the top of the board, running the width of the paper and prominently lettered with the days, or the boards could be arranged to be changed as might be necessary. A few screw hooks and eyes; about three to a board, would permit any changes to be made in the boards if the eyes and hooks were regularly spaced so that any board could be hung from any set of hooks. Some managers say that it costs too much to paste paper, and they borrow or hire loose sheets from the exchange, but here is a 216 house that finds it pays and that backs up the boards with newspaper advertising and a lot of lobby frames with stills and portraits. You can make it pay if you have the goods and know how to sell them. Mr. Clauer does. You can.

Is He Kidding?

V. M. Kidd, of the Dominion, Victoria, B. C., send in a slip the house used as an advance for "The Cheat." It is nicely done with press comment and gossip of the subject, a leaflet of four 3 x 6 pages. Mr. Kidd writes that he thinks it is more important to state the location of the house than the hours of commencement, particularly if the house is in the business centre with opposition, as a statement of the hours of showing might send to another house the possible patron knowing the show has started. The point is that the men who goes past the house at eight-thirty, knowing that the show started at eight-fifteen, will try to get to the house at eight-fifteen if that is the hour and he is interested.

That sort of man will not come in if he does not know the hours of performance. If he will not come in knowing that the show has started, he will not come in on an off chance. When such practical men as George Bleich and Jimquin go to extreme pains to get their time tables right, there must be something besides theory in the idea.

Jimquins.

Jimquin, of L. A. sends in some new time tables. This time he seems to think that running the titles tandem is better than running one time table for the first half and foot notes for the change. It is better than the form shown in Picture Theatre Advertising, but we would like even better a split time table giving the two changes as distinct time tables. The cut will give an idea of the form. If you cannot read them, the foot notes give the names of the stars. The time table is on a sheet 7 by 8½ and the back is printed up with a photo-reproduction of the lathe work on the back of a bond. It is good enough to catch the eye and suggest something of that nature, on the lines of stage money. The rest of the time tale side is printed up with Jimquin talk, his latest idea being a series of arguments that the Isis shows are food for tired brains, which is not a bad line of reasoning to take. Here is a sample of the stuff:

> Once there was a fellow who just knew he couldn't leave his business for a minute or it would sure go to the bow-wows.

Unusual, But Good.

Nikitas Dipson, of the Family, Batavia, N. Y., sends in a vest pocket of unusual form, but good. It is good general practice to run a booklet one-third longer than it is wide, but this V. P. is 3 inches wide and 8½ deep. It is so much out of proportion that it comes into proportion again. It is eight pages and cover, a day to a page, a full week's program on the first inside page and house talk on the front inside cover, and biographical sketches on the inside back cover with the underline on the back. This is a methodical and intelligent treatment, but it is only one of the good points; the stock is good, the type is not the usual machine stuff, but a slightly fancy face; the cuts are suited to the paper; the stories are well told, and about the only thing the most captious could object to is that the black-letter for titles is not wholly clear. That is the only thing to quibble over. For the rest of the job is about as neat as anything we have seen from anywhere of late. If you want to see a really pretty job, write and beg a program from Mr. Dipson.

Their First Full.

Some people complain that business is getting bad. Others go out and make it better. Hunt's theater, Wildwood, N. J., is located in a summer resort colony, so they make business instead of complaining. W. C. Hunt writes:

> Herewith we send you our maiden effort in making up a page advertisement, and would be very pleased to have your criticism on same.
> Many valuable ideas have come to us through your columns. During the winter months it has always been very difficult for us to make our business pay here owing to the small population and what there is being scattered thinly over a distance three miles long by nearly a mile wide. In this large area we have only about 2,800 population, this winter, many families having left the island this year, that have heretofore stayed the year 'round. In spite of this and increased expense for a Feature program, in place of an ordinary commercial service, we have increased our business over 30 per cent. this winter over any previous year, and we have been here nine years. We attribute this solely to our having had a good program and letting the people know it. If there is anyone here that hasn't been to see us every week this winter, it's because they are laying around waiting for Mr. Undertaker to come and take them away.
> Keep up the good work.

The advertisement cannot stand reduction very well, but it is nothing for Mr. Hunt to be ashamed of, and he has hit upon a good layout. The paper is eight columns wide. At the top comes the house name in an eight-line letter flanked on either side by large Paramount cuts. Below this is a four-column bank about the house, with panels on either side, giving one of the underlines. For the rest of the page the program is announced in display, by days, in a four-column width, and on either side is a column of straight reading matter; all headed items, topped by Triangle cuts. Each day should have been dated, not trusting to the "Program for the week of ——." But apart from this, Mr. Hunt has made a nice job of his space and fills it like a veteran agent. If business is not good, make it better by advertising as Mr. Hunt has done. If he can coax them over the Jersey sands, you can get them from anywhere.

That Thirsty North.

Tom North must be so dry that in comparison the Sahara looks like the deepest part of the Pacific. Ever since the State of Washington went dry he has been letting his tongue hang out so far that it licks the suspender buttons off the waistband of his trousers. First he printed George Blaisdell's Fireman's Shirt button with a few longing remarks, and then he broke in with a note of regret that he could not show strangers around as he could in the old days, but lately the Seattle Times prints an article in which he claims that a combination of grippe germs, quinine and a picture show is a passable substitute for the gone but not forgotten glories. The V-L-S-E Pals is a great home organ, but it is not the voice of the W. C. T. U.

An Invitation Worker.

Edmund Reid, inventor of the one-page daily newspaper and now manager of the Palace, Barnesville, Ga., sends in an invitation to Carmen, the idea for which he got from this department. He writes that he mailed one of the invitations to every automobile owner within a radius of twenty miles, and that as a result he had the greatest collection of cars in front of the house that has shown since it opened. The invitation was nicely displayed, though we do not like the face of type used, a wedding text that is not as fashionable for invitations as it was some years ago. Copperplate gothic or that in combination with the same face shaded, or all shaded, would have been better, but probably the printer did not have it. The main point is that it made business.

Do you follow Mr. Reid in circularizing the automobile owners? Most States permit the addresses to be copied from the license lists, and if you have something really worth while, a twenty-mile run is merely part of the fun of the outing.

Mr. Reid also sends in a one-sheet monthly program, and on the vacant Sunday dates he prints in "Go to your church." It emphasizes the fact that the house is not open Sunday, and also pleases others than the ministers.

Something New.

The News, published by the Mary Anderson management, Louisville, Ky., has something that beats the misspelled word and similar devices. It gives out a list of six questions. Two tickets are given all who reply correctly. One list of questions, for example, reads:

> Who starred in "Tangled Lives?"
> Where is Annette Kellermann?
> What is wedded to art?
> Why should William Farnum feel patriotic?
> Who is a favorite at Kingston?
> Upon what cannot you safely count?

In a series of brief biographs it is told that Robert Mantell starred in "Tangled Lives." The answer to the second question appears most casually in an answer to an inquirer; the third is given in the familiar celluloid soliloquy: "I am the offspring of Knowledge and Light, joined into wedlock with Art"; the fourth is also based on data from the biographies, as William Farnum was born July 4; the fifth reply is found in some notes, and the last in an editorial announcement to the effect that repeat performances cannot be counted upon at the house. It takes not a little skill and intelligent application to get at the questions, even when the puzzler knows that the reply is in the same issue, and not many get in a complete list, but most persons read the program thoroughly. In the issue in question it is probable that the fourth and sixth questions kept down the percentage of correct replies.

This is a much better scheme than the cheap and antique lottery schemes so often used and which are objectionable in many ways.

Stand Pat.

Sid. G. Spear, of the Novelty, Malone, N. Y., writes:

> When I received my Moving Picture World yesterday and as usual turned to the Advertising for Exhibitor's department first, I was more than surprised to see a comment on my program. I am sending later copies. This is the eighth week. Nothing pretentious. If there is any credit to be given it is to your department, which I have studied faithfully for two years. Meritt and Casazza are my printers, not the owners of the Novelty. I have a house of 250 capacity two doors from my opposition, who has a 750 house and who, worst of all, does not want to be friends. What drove me to issuing a program was his methods of trying to put me out of business by using all kinds of passes, free matinees for children and the like. Commencing next week I shall run a World on Friday and a V-L-S-E on Saturday in addition to my Triangle. This really is too much for a small house, but when you take into consideration that my opposition runs anywhere from one to three acts of vaudeville each change, two changes a week, four reels General Film service, four serials and a Fox each week, what are you going to do? He formerly had a seven-piece orchestra, but is now down to piano and drums. I have not seen any difference since starting the program, but I think it will pay eventually. Please ask brother exhibitors to exchange with me.

Mr. Spear is trying to fight fire with fire and with only limited supply of combustibles. We think that instead of swelling the program we would use the program to educate the patrons against the vaudeville. The sort of vaudeville the other house can run will speak for itself, but hammer it home. Have someone in the other house to tab up the jokes and actions. Then in your own program ask your reader how he likes to see such things and how he felt if he had a woman with him. Do not say that an act did this or said that, but speak of the act and hint at the action or speech. Meantime give a good picture show, but not one so long as to tire and then tell why not more than five acts are given. Mr. Spear has a whole valuable page he could use for a series of straight talks that would count and perhaps even reduce the drummer out of the former seven-piece orchestra. It might even be a good point to talk about always having the same size orchestra. It is seldom well to fight a competitor openly and this should not be done in this case. Mention the vaudeville and not the house. Tell why you have only five reels, but do not attack the other house's seven or ten. Do this and the program will pay for itself and more and either close up the vaudeville or the house. Only lately a manager was lamenting that the money he could pay for vaudeville was so small that he could afford only negro acts and that he had used so many of these that the house was beginning to have a characteristic odor. People generally go in spite of the vaudeville rather than because of it.

Will some of the brothers please send their programs to Mr. Spear.

Here It Is.

E. M. Simmons, of the New Family, Adrian, Mich., sends in the ticket he refered to lately. It is a manila card with four punch holes, each good for an admission to the Garden, a sister house. It is sold by the local order of Maccabees, a portion of the proceeds being retained by them, and it is announced that the proceeds will be used to arm the order in the interest of preparedness. It is announced that the Adrian Maccabees were the first to arm with rifles. Possibly this will give a hint to other exhibitors, many of whom belong to orders with drill teams. The idea is new and in keeping with the times.

That Record.

Here is a new hang-up. W. B. Harris ran the Battle Cry of Peace in his house, Smithville, Mo. The population is 680. The attendance was 799. The takings $370.25. Next!

Knows in Advance.

F. H. Gray, of the Idle Hour, Wellington, Col., writes:

> I am enclosing a little weekly program which we are getting out.
>
> It is, of course, very cheap, and I know far from your perfection, or even good, but I have gotten so much help from your department in the year and a half that I have been reading The World, that I would be very glad indeed of any suggestions to better it. If it is all wrong, that is what I want to know. I feel sure that you will not favor so much advertising, but I am making the ads pay for the program, and as this is such a very small berg, we cannot command a big price for ads.
> This is my first attempt at a program, and this is the second issue, so hit it as hard as you can, if by so doing I may make it better.

Mr. Gray wins on his premonition. There is too much advertising in that the advertiser is permitted to dominate the sheet. The program is four pages, 6 by 9, with a type page 7¼ inches long. This gives 29 page inches. Of this 14 inches go to the advertiser. This is too much, and yet not more than others give and still get a display. Apparently the house runs three days a week, and they let the stuff run as it will. If they will take the same amount of space, divide by three, and take that much space on each of the three pages other than the cover, they can get the same space and yet, by boxing in, can also get a real display. This may necessitate a little smaller type, or a rearrangement of the stuff, so that each day gets the same amount of space, but by taking the space in the center of each page and cutting it cut from the advertising with six-point border, the result will not be bad, though not as good as where more space could be gained. An additional advantage will then be that all advertisers will be on the same page with reading matter. The front page is divided between two 2-inch advertisements and the house name, the latter in the center. A space of three picas lies between the house name and the advertising, top and bottom with eighteen points at the sides. Were this our program we would build a frame in that space with something like Bullfinch or any similar solid border, and the frame would be even better than white space in throwing out the house name.

The rearrangement would be very simple. Take the four advertisements in the center of the back page and put two at the bottom of Page 2 and the other two at the bottom of Page 3. Make permanent panels of six-point rule to frame in the white space and set one day in each of these spaces. Take the "Concerning prices" from Page 3 and put it in the front page box where it belongs, resetting the date line and the other two minor lines to get the room. With this done, the program will look as neat as can be asked, and at no sacrifice to the advertising, though we are afraid that the advertising space is selling at a dollar an inch across page instead of double that, which should be the least accepted. It doesn't pay to be too cheap to the advertiser. If they say that 50 cents an inch is all they pay the local paper, point out that your circulation is more direct and is kept in the homes a week instead of being read and thrown out the same day it is issued. We hope that Mr. Gray will send in the new editions if he tries these changes.

Neat and Brief.

W. C. Ball, of the Revue, Toronto, sends in several copies of a little house program. It is a four pager 3½ by 6, printed on light tint stock with a colored ink, and the color selection is so well done and the first page is so well set that people will take these who would refuse a smearly looking sheet. It may be argued that any advertising is advertising. It is, but some of it is pretty poor advertising, and no woman is going to reach out a white gloved hand for a daub that will probably send the gloves to the cleaner's. It is worth while to pay a little more and get the sort of job that people will want. Evidently Mr. Ball knows this, and his front is kept light and attractive. Inside we think he is a little too light. This is better than overloading the page with type, but it would be possible to add three or four lines of eight point to the titles; not the story of the film, but a brief comment, that would add much to the effectiveness of the announcement. His days are dated, but would look better if underlined with a light rule, not heavier than one point. This would also serve to break the sections apart, something that is not done by the two light ornaments now used. The back is used for underline, but there is room for about half a page of house talk. About two hundred words a week of sincere talk about the house should work wonders. The front page should be permitted to stand much as it is. For a locality house in a good neighborhood, it cannot be greatly improved upon. The cut shows the front and back pages. At the bottom of the front page the hours of performance should be run and the Saturday matinee announced. It would seem that the house has only this one afternoon performance.

Improved.

The Homecrest, Brooklyn, has given up the staggered advertising form and now puts the house program where it can be seen. Doing so does not hurt the display value of the foreign advertising, either, but rather renders it more distinct. The Homecrest seems to be reaching out for business. It has been drawing to some extent beyond its indicated territory and now a new house has been built in this extra territory, but not yet opened. The Homecrest has started a house-to-house distribution, with two bills to a two-family house, and is going to solidify what trade it can before the other house can open. Two houses nearer the new theater have, as yet, done nothing to prepare for the new opposition. There is going to be a nice little fight just where we can sit on our own front steps and watch it; which will be very convenient.

Hot Scott.

The April issue of the Big Four Clansman, the organ of the V-L-S-E Kansas City exchange, is full of meat. Editor L. J. Scott prints a cut of the fob given him by the Amusement Association of Kansas for getting in the largest number of members in the first ninety days of organization. A pleasant feature is the sincerely written farewell to Charles Hardin, of the Fox exchange, who is leaving that territory for a more important post. It speaks well for a man when his business competitors wish him luck and it speaks well for the competitors that they are big enough to admit that there are others.

E. R. Pearson, manager of the exchange, contributes a page on the value of subjects, the essence of which will be found in these paragraphs:

> Your patrons come to your place to see a good entertainment, and don't care much what length of subjects just so they are all good. As a matter of fact, they rather prefer the variety, thus possible for each week.
> We have some single reel comedies, subjects that foot for foot are as valuable entertainment as our features, and to a large extent this article was prompted by being told by many exhibitors that so far as they were concerned one single reel was as valuable as another. This condition, if general, is a terrible and critical calamity soon to be pronouncedly noticeable to the entire industry.
> How long will it be before the same exhibitors will be saying one feature subject is as valuable as another? How long will it be before those exhibitors commit commercial suicide? I tell you, the industry cannot afford to have those theaters die because when they die they have also exterminated many motion picture patrons, and that is a tremendous loss to the industry itself. Frequently I am appalled at an apparently truthful report of conditions surrounding a town that formerly was considered a desirable motion picture point. Inquiry and analysis always reveal the same story of abuse of the patron's confidence, by the theater management. Four times out of five the exchanges have been just as much to blame as the exhibitors. Always in these cases the business is just as low as it dare go without actually closing the theaters. Naturally something must be done and at once, and usually one or the other of those exhibitors realizing the seriousness of the situation, are ready and willing to adopt any plan that bears evidence of a chance for success.

In the line of stunts Mr. Scott offers much. He writes some stunts for his own service and reports the work of others. Dr. E. E. Trunelle, of the Baxter, Novinger, Mo., offered six tickets for every twenty pounds of paper. The paper was baled and sold at ten dollars a ton, the proceeds being donated to a local fund. With the Government issuing warnings against the destruction of paper stock, this is a particularly timely stunt for local advertising. Perhaps a note to the Secretary of Commerce, Washington, will probably bring some printed matter.

Too Cheap.

The Strand theater, Fremont, Ohio, recently felt the need of marking its anniversary. The result was a plain white sheet, eight by ten inches printed in 12 point Roman with not the slightest effort at any ornamentation. There is no date line, no house card, and though there is no greeting, there is a signature. It should at least have been in the form of a letter on regular letter size sheets, but it would have cost little to put the same text on a neat folder just large enough to slip into the envelope. The circular speaks of the great success the house has enjoyed in its first year, but the job gives not the slightest hint of success; rather it suggests a policy of rigid retrenchment. It would be better to do nothing at all than to seek to mark an anniversary with such cheap and casual printing and preparation. Even some little 300 houses in 600 towns have done much better. The circular is well worded, but the effect is nullified to some extent; probably to a large extent, by the cheap format.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising to Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid, $2.00.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Fat for Fives.

ALICE C. BROWN says a lot when she remarks that she finds that in a five reel she must have at least three threads of plot to get enough to keep a five reel from dying on third, and to show that she knows she adds that this is not the same as sub-plot in fiction because these threads must all be a part of the plot and not minor invention, and that they must be established and prepared for in the early reels and not dragged in when the story commences along about the middle of the third reel.

If you can catch Miss Brown's idea, you will have the full secret of writing fives. You must, first of all, have enough plot. It must all be the same plot and cannot be two or more plots in combination. It is all one plot but with more than one angle because a simple and direct plot will not last through five reels. It must be all one plot, because we cannot give the time and the leaders required to explain sub plot. We must hold it all to the one idea. And all of the idea must be prepared for in the first reel. It must be that sort of a plot that is capable of this preparation. Then you'll have a story that will come to a climax at the end of five thousand feet with no sagging action in the middle. There are a lot of professional writers and reconstructors who make the grave error of running on a single plot theme until they run it out and then gain the additional length needed by trying to build an aftermath plot on the first, though it is seldom that this second plot can possibly be more important than the first.

Sane.

Recently we wrote a long letter to a woman who wanted to know about writing photoplays, and we wondered if we were again wasting our time, but she paid us by writing that she was going to try out on plotting and if she found she could, she would get a copy of Technique of the Photoplay and go to work. Then we knew that this particular letter had not been wasted. It pleased us more than an order for the book would have done, because she is one of the few who had the good sense to realize that plotting came before the technique of form and development.

Keep Going.

Writes a lady: "If manufacturers purchase synopses only, what use is there in studying the technique of photoplay writing?"

In the first place, you must be able to write good plays before you can write practical synopses.

In the second place manufacturers who buy only synopses or who maintain staffs of editors and directors who purchase synopses only will presently give place to other and more intelligent manufacturers who will buy full plays because they will know that only by this means can they gain a sufficient diversity of production. Keep on studying. It is not so long ago that writers were asking what use it was to write plays at all since nothing but book and drama adaptations were being made. And do you remember how—almost overnight—editors were falling over their own and each other's feet trying to find original fives? Cheer up and keep on working.

Got It Anyhow.

One author got mad and vowed that the business is all a snare and a delusion. "I shall write for my own amusement hereafter," he announces to a shuddering world, "and shall send out a story only now and then to assure myself that I am right when I say that no stories sell."

If he writes persistently for his own amusement and makes an honest effort to write well, some day he will send out a test script and be shocked to receive a check in return. He is on the right track even though he came in from the wrong switch. Do your practice work under any reason you prefer, but do your practice work before you try to sell. You'll take the strain off the post office and have stamps against the time when you will need them for good scripts.

Bargain Prices.

William F. Hart, of the Keystone staff, sends in a funny boob letter. We wonder what companies bought plays at prices ranging from $14 to $59. Pathe in the early days used to pay in odd prices, but this was because the directors marked the scripts in francs and the business office did not bring the sums up to even fives, but any company that is willing to pay $59 can be coaxed to yield $60. It reminds us of a man who told R. Ralston Reed that he had sold a story to the Vitagraph. Reed asked what he got for it. "What would you say if I said a thousand?" hedged the man and Reed said he would say he was a specified sort of liar. The letter is addressed to the "Editor in Chiefe" and runs:

> Beg Pardon for writing you. Bout I have 5 plays and will not sell to the firm I have ben. I am trying to find a firm to deal with, how is all O. K. I have sold 38 plays in 9 months bringing from 14 dollars up to $59. I lurned under William Lord Wright and the Producers League St. Louis Mo., I now all I gess I can lurn about the movies. and I write mostly. Comedys and western dramas. All are propper Length with say five Leaders or sub titles. 2 or 3 is the most eny of my plays have. I have a vay deap interesting decteve play. of 52 scenes and 5 leaders this one has because tis for a 2 real play. Will set no price on my plays. Submitt them at usel Rates.

We think the writer speaks the truth when he says he thinks he knows all he can learn about the Movies, but this is merely because he cannot learn. It will be news to William Lord Wright that he "lurned" this genius.

Once Again.

If only some Federal law could be enacted to license those who could study photoplay writing, we would insist that before any license could issue the author in embryo be required to sign this pledge:

> I promise that I will give my full time and attention to getting the best development of my plots without any effort whatsoever to employ technical terms that I have heard about, read about or may have manufactured for myself.

Only the other day a correspondent wanted to know if there was a special term to designate a close-up when used apart from the larger scene of which it was supposed to be a part. He wanted to have two kinds of close-up, one when the camera came into a running scene, and one when there was no prior showing of a large scene. He was not content to write: 16—Close view of Polly on the balcony. He wanted to have some special term to show that this was a special sort of close-up—which it was not.

Studio writers use technical terms much as they use slang, not because it is necessary but because it is brief. They do not ring in every technical term they can think of, and some use few technical terms, yet the outsiders are not content with the terms they hear. They wish to be supplied with even more. It cannot be done.

Another Plot Machine.

Vachel Lindsay, in his The Art of Moving Picture, suggests a scheme for plotting not unlike the plot machine recently described in this department. In his chapter on Hieroglyphics he gives the meaning of the Egyptian signs and suggests that each of these be given a higher and more esoteric meaning. He goes on to argue that these cards be shifted to form combinations of ideas, but with only one of the higher meanings taken as the key to the plot for, as he writes:

> I would like to suggest as a beginning rule that in a play based on twenty hieroglyphics, nineteen should be black realistic signs with obvious meanings, and only one of them white and inexplicably strange. It has been proclaimed further back in this treatise that there is only one witch in every wood. And to illustrate further, there is but one scarlet letter in Hawthorne's story of that name, but one wine cup in all of Omar, and one Bluebird in Maeterlinck's play.

Mr. Lindsay puts rather fantastically the great basic truth that there can be but one central point to a plot to which all else must incline. His is not a book on play writing, but a treatise on the art as a whole, but in spite of his many fantastic ideas, there is much sound sense in his observations, and the book is one that may be read with profit and interest by the advanced writer.

Hurray!

At last! A correspondent writes: "I can write better plays than I see." We have heard that before, but this man adds: "So could almost anyone with imagination. But I cannot sell them." Here is at least one man who knows that plays must not merely be better than the screen botches, but that they must be vastly better if they are to sell. The trouble is that the average manufacturer fails to realize that the studio-produced script that apparently costs him nothing is the most expensive thing he could have.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no aparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operators should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 138.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

If you are projecting a 16-foot picture and it is proposed to enlarge to an 18-foot one, what percentage of increase in light would be necessary to produce the same screen brilliancy? If 35 amperes were used in the first instance, how many would be necessary in the latter?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 131.

I would refer particularly all of the answerers of question 131, including the Roll of Honor men, to the published reply of Brother Martin. It is interesting; also, it will show some of you the amount of knowledge one may possess on any given topic if one really studies. All the Roll of Honor answers were correct as far as they went, but none of them came anywhere near covering the ground Brother Martin covered, nor making as perfect a statement of the matter as Edward Marshall, though Marshall frankly admits his dope is a copy of what was published in December 25, 1909, issue. But that does not matter, so long as he has the knowledge. I don't care how he gets it, so long as he HAS it, though I would have preferred him to put it in his own language.

I have selected the reply of Brother Martin for publication, although I believe he is stretching things a little in attempting to connect moving pictures with the carvings of ancient people. I am also publishing Friend Marshall's reply because it more nearly fulfills the real intent of the question.

Reply to Question No. 131.

By Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal.

The Question:

Explain, in full detail, just what the phenomenon called "moving pictures" consists of. Come, now, let us see how much you know about this subject anyhow!

The Answer:

The phenomenon called "moving pictures" is as old as man himself, and has been observed in the works of art dating clear back to the Pleistocene and Eocene Periods when the Pithecanthropus Erectus and the Heidelberg Man were walking around with their foot on the ground and carving crude descriptive sketches of bear hunts on the walls of cliffs and caverns.

But coming down to a little later time, the ancient Assyrians, Babylonians, Egyptians and Greeks give abundant evidence that the fundamental notion of the moving picture was well understood and utilized. The ancient bas-relief carvings in particular, which adorned the walls and friezes of temples were intended as a kind of pictorial story, relating the progress of events in the history of a nation, or career, of some famous personage.

Later on, this same idea was adopted in the comic supplements of modern newspapers, and today this form of moving pictures represent the most fundamental basis of the industry, i. e., in a technical sense. In following the action or progression of ideas which are shown in a comic serial of the Sunday supplement, the technical connection of the action from one picture to the next following is very crude. Persistence of vision is out of the question. Movement is merely suggested by the attitude and feature of the people and things depicted, and the skill of the artist comes greatly into play in order to suggest to the imagination all the occurrences and movements that take place from one picture to the other.

This form of moving picture can present a very complete theme, but the details of its presentation are left largely to the imagination of the observer. It's relation to the cinematographic representation is about the same as that of a silhouette to an actual photograph.

A little nearer approach to the technical moving picture of today is to be still found in the ordinary toy magic lantern. These outfits were usually furnished with a number of slides, among which was one moving picture. This slide contained two pictures and was mounted in a special carrier which was constructed so that one picture could be quickly superimposed upon the other on the screen. For instance, one picture would be projected showing a man seated on a mule, then by quickly shifting the slide the pictures became interchanged, showing the mule's rear quarters elevated and the rider going over his head. Even in this method, persistence of vision does not come into play. Memory, imagination and power of analogy is relied upon to connect the events of one picture with the next following, and the quick change of some scene causes surprise on the part of the observer which is an essential element in producing the humorous effect which is aimed at. This process was little removed from the comic supplement method except that the change of scene was supplied by mechanical means.

Although a very recent development, the animated cartoon, supplies the next logical step in the evolution of the moving picture. In this method, which just about marks the half-way point, persistence of vision first comes into actual existence, but this factor is wholly at the control of the artist. Even when the artist uses the greatest care, it is very difficult to present movements which have the smooth rythm of regular pictures. All movements are more or less jerky and sometimes it is difficult to decide whether actual persistence of vision really operates, or whether only the memory impressions are so close together as to actually overlap in the consciousness. In fact, persistence of vision and persistence of memory are so closely allied in function that they practically amount to the same thing in effect. At any rate, the further pursuance of the analysis would concern only psychologists and the like.

However, oftentimes the animated cartoonist will forsake entirely the tedious labors which persistence of vision pictures demand, and fall back upon the old magic lantern stunt before described. For instance, old Col. Heeza Liar will be shown looking in a certain direction with an expression of joy on his countenance, and the picture will then instantly change, showing him looking in a differnt direction with an expression of chagrin. The two poses will often be switched back and forth on the screen several times in order to drive the idea home to the audience.

Here it is seen that the artist takes advantage of the fact that memory and imagination will supply the missing scenes which, by the strict persistence of vision plan, would have required a great number of pictures instead of only two.

But even the modern director makes use of the same process by using the expedient known as "switching there and back." When it is desired to show the logical connection between two occurrences, the intermediate steps of which would be uninteresting, or require useless time and film; the cause or beginning of the action is first photographed, and later on the results of the same action are shown, oftentimes without much reference to the intermediate occurrences.

Thus it is seen that while persistence of vision is the most prominent technical factor in modern moving pictures, still the old psychological stunts known from time memorial and a very prominent factor in modern poster advertising, are still in full force on the screen.

Persistence of vision is merely an optical refinement, which permits drama to be presented on the screen in its true Shakespearean reality, and this really constitutes the vital definition of the cinematographic picture. The technical accomplishment of persistence of vision overcame those limitations of all other forms of pictures, which were all too psychological to appeal to the masses as a whole, and made things actually real and true to fact, which art in the long run usually gets the money.

The humor intended in a cartoon may appeal to one individual but not to another. A fine oil painting and other similar forms of art, usually appeals to only a limited number; but a human figure moving about on the screen in a truly life-like manner and actually doing everyday stunts will deliver the goods every time, because the average mortal with a jitney in one hand and a market basket in the other is a pretty close equivalent to the mental effort that can be depicted in the average photoplay. For the desires and requirements of mankind today are not a great deal removed from the times when the Pithecanthropus Erectus and the Heidelberg Man were walking around with their foot on the ground.

Reply to Question No. 131.

By Edward Marshall, Vancouver, B. C.

Animated photography is snap-shot photography, without much interval between the shots. To do the work you provide yourself with a special camera and a roll of sensitive film, which latter may be of any length from 50 to 500 feet, and on this film you take snap shots at the rate of 16 per second. A crank on the camera actuates the machinery which carries the film forward. You turn the crank at a speed which causes the film to pass behind the lens at the rate of one foot of film every second of time whilst a revolving shutter with an opning in it prmits sixteen images to the foot to fall in rotation upon the traveling sensitive surfac. It is important to note that the sensitive film is not traveling past the lens continuously; the machinery causes it to stand still momentarily while the actual snap-shot is being taken, and while the film is being moved forward preparatory to to another snap-shot being recorded, the revolving black shutter intervenes to protect the film from light. Thus the film jumps forward sixteen times every second and stands still sixteenteen times every second. When all the film has run through the camera, or when you think enough of the scene has been recorded, the film is developed like any other negative. When dry a contact print is made on another piece of film of corresponding length, and when that print is developed and dried it is ready to exhibit to an audience. It is run through a projection machine fitted with a lens and provided with a powerful light, in such a manner that the snap shots are projected just as lantern slides are shown, only that they change at the rate of sixteen per second. A black shutter here again revolves and obliterates the light every time a picture changes. The screen is, therefore, being bombarded with a stream of snap-shots at such a rapid rate that before one snap-shot has had time to fade from the observer's retina another one is in view, and as each view is a record slightly different from its predecessors, the illusion of movement is conveyed. The part played by persistence of vision in this process is important.

Another Argument.

John Solar, Watertown, N. Y., writes:

Commenting on Friend Martin's "Structural Aberration of the Condenser Beam," an astigmatic field or image is one that is curved towards, and in some cases, away from the lens. When astigmation exists we can not have a true focus at the center and outer border of an image at the same time; that is with a flat screen. If we had a screen curved with the same radius of curvation as the image, we could project a clear, sharp image at all points—that is so far as astigmatism in concerned. A lens that projects a flat image is termed a true anastigmat, in this case we have an astigmatic field. (Martin: Aberrations at B are due to astigmatism.) Aberrations named are due to angle of incidence and the curvature of the lens. (Martin: The cross-sections reveal some very odd shapes.) These odd shapes are termed Coma, or Side-flare, and have no similarity to astigmatism. To explain this phenomenon in an understandable manner is very difficult and would require too much space to attempt it here. (Martin: Spherical aberration and Astigmatism are caused by practically the same action of the rays.) The effect of spherical aberration is to focus complete images in different planes. With astigmatism present, that is a curved image, we have points of a complete image focused in different planes. A lens may be corrected for spherical aberration, and still have an astigmatic field.

From this we can see there is no similarity between the two. His drawing representing a condensing lens, in such case it is not necessary to project a sharp flat image of the crater, a curvature or astigmatism of the crater image causes no loss of light or definition at the screen. In projecting an image of the film at the aperture we need not consider astigmatism in relation to the condenser. But in relation to the objective lens, it is very important that this fault be corrected.

Now, I will take a side swipe at Martin to offset his criticism of the two-ray system, his "anastigmatism" should be printed in capital letters framed.

With reference to Brother Solar's remarks upon the effects of spherical aberration, why perhaps he is right, but the actual practical effect as applied to projection is, I think, to produce unevenness of illumination. Where spherical aberration is present, the illumination at the spot lies in circles, or concentric wings. Friend Solar is correct in saying that a lens may be corrected for spherical aberration and still have an astigmatic field, but let us not misunderstand. A lens which is corrected for astigmatism projects a flat field, not an astigmatic field. It also follows that there is greater need for astigmatic correction with short focal length lenses than with lenses with long focal length. With long focal length lenses I don't believe astigmatic correction will give sufficient improvement to justify the cost of the correction, though that matter is, of course, open to argument. As to Brother Martin's "astigmatism," why the side swipe applies equally to the Eastman Kodak Company, who use the term in their literature.

Questions.

Oklahoma orders a Handbook, and says:

What focal length condensers would you use with a 6½ inch E. F. projection lens? I am told that you now advise the use of a 5½ inch rear, where before I would have, as a rule, used two 7½. How many amperes does a mercury arc rectifier pull from a 110 volt A. C. line? Have never had an ammeter on the line, and was asked this question and could not answer it, unless I knew the ohms resistance. What about the new Chemical Violet Ray Screen?

Don't know anything about any Chemical Violet Ray Screen, unless you refer to the Luna-Lite Screen. If that is what you mean, why I have not heard of it for quite some time. They were going to give me a demonstration, but something seems to have fallen down. No, I have never advised a 5½-inch condenser at the rear. The focal length of the rear condenser will depend upon circumstances. See Table 1, page 141 of the Handbook. Study "Matching Up the Lens System," page 133 to 146 carefully.

As to the mercury arc rectifier, I would recommend you to study the transformer, page 343, and the mercury arc rectifier, page 432, carefully. Any figuring you might do as to the amperage taken from the line would only be approximate, and you would first have to know the amperage at the arc. Multiply the arc amperage by 50, and add to that product 25 per cent. of itself; then divide by the line voltage, and you will come about as close to it as you can get, but it won't be correct, because you don't know the power factor of the current, and are assuming that the apparatus has an efficiency of 75 per cent., whereas it might be lower.

A Rap on the Bean.

George E. Carlson, Burley, Idaho, says:

The fact that I am one of the goats should at least entitle me to butt in in behalf of the vast flock upon which millions are dependent for that which takes to make a good entertainment or amusement. Although we are the public goats, what would the public do without us? We operators are to the moving picture industry what the soldier is to the nation; we are the man behind the gun. Soldiers are backed by the government, wheras operators are backed by the projection department through the medium of the Moving Picture World, which publication is the chief or paramount factor in proclaiming that which is just. The Moving Picture World is endeavoring to lift and keep the business out of the mire, and to mete out justice to all without fear or favor. The Moving Picture World does not hesitate to put blame where it belongs, and demands satisfaction for injury no matter what the nature thereof.

years, and has had juice for seven years—some current too. We are running the big ones, and change every day; Metro, World and Mutual, and you can take it from me there are film slaughter houses in this part of the world. The still small voice ought to tell every operator that the better he takes care of his service, the better service he is likely to get.

As to film cement it should be carefully remembered that a cement that works well on some films does not work so well on others. There are three or four different makes of film which require different cements.

You will find enclosed cuttings from a Metro which will show that the fault is not always with the exchange, but right back where the film is first put together, and that is where some good, hard hammering ought to be done. It took me hours to put five reels in running shape, and other hours might have been spent to good advantage on the very same reels. The exchanges need calling down from time to time, but the man higher up needs a rap on the bean in many cases. Some of them seem to get their experience at the expense of the public and the operator, with the operator posing as the goat. In closing let me quote the old motto: "What is home without a mother?" and add to it another: "What is projection without Richardson?"

Yes, Brother Carlson, I thoroughly agree with you that the man higher up needs a "rap on the bean" occasionally, and he gets it too. But this department has so many, many things to look after, that we cannot always do full justice to it all. If I had ten pages of space available instead of four, I could do considerable more. As it is, however, I know I have gotten results in improvement of film conditions, both with the manufacturers and the exchanges. But conditions will not, for a long time to come, be anything even faintly resembling perfect.

We appreciate your kind words with regard to the department and the Moving Picture World. This paper is, as you say, striving to work for the best interest of the moving picture industry. So far as the projection department is concerned its editor is not the whole thing, by any manner of means. I have been able to accomplish many things, true, but I feel that this has been made possible by and through the hearty co-operation of the men themselves. Mine is a difficult position; more so than you can possibly realize. But there are just three factors which govern my actions, and they are: is it best for projection, for the operator, and for the industry? I shall be glad to hear from you at any time you have things of interest to set forth.

Power Indorses Handbook.

You all know Nicholas Power, the dean of projection machine manufacturers and the pioneer in improvement of projection machinery.

Nicholas Power Co.
OF NEW YORK

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

1st April 1916.

My dear Mr. Richardson:

After having carefully perused the third edition of your Hand Book, it gives me great pleasure to express my admiration for the wonderful manner in which you have handled this difficult work, and I feel that you are to be highly commended for the energy and intelligence displayed in compiling the really valuable information.

The new Hand Book surpasses the previous editions and it should certainly be in the hands of all operators and others using motion picture projection machines.

Wishing you continued success and with very kindest regards and best wishes, I am,

Very sincerely yours,
Nicholas Power

F. H. Richardson, Esq.,
17 Madison Ave.,
New York City.

Here is his opinion of the third edition of the handbook. The opinion of such men counts for much. It cannot be bought. Their approval may only be obtained for articles possessed of real merit.

Eye Strain.

William Peach, Freeport, L. I., says:

I have been twisting the crank for seven years, five of them on the job at the Plaza theater of this city. Find I cannot get along at all without the department and the Handbooks. Am up against it and come to you for advice. I suffer something awful from eye strain. Have paid out good money to eye doctors and oculists for expensive colored eye glasses, all to no purpose. Do you know of any eye glass that will enable the operator to look at the spot once in a while, and yet protect the eyes from the terrible glare?

over, it is most restful to the eye. In your condition, however, the to judge results by looking at the screen only? However you can very easily protect yourself from the glare of the spot by mounting a piece of pale green glass, somewhat as per Figure 30, page 72 of the first edition of the Handbook, copy of which I understand you to say you have. You may also use other colors, but I prefer green, and, moreover, it is more restful to the eye. In your condition, however, the only thing to do is stop looking at the spot. It is not really necessary. Look at the screen and learn to gauge your light by the results there.

"Brain Exerciser."

W. W. Dilley, Jr., Akron, Ohio, says:

I note Brother Stilson's answer to my "Brain Exerciser," February 5th issue, also your reply, which brought the following to mind. You say arc voltage is between 48 and 55, and others ask why can you pull a longer arc on 220 than on 110? This is my version of that proposition. On 110 volts, one-half of the voltage, which is 55, goes to the arc and the other half to the rheostat. Amperage on both sides of the rheostat is the same if rheostat capacity is ample. On 220 volts the division would be 110 volts, which accounts for the longer arc.

You are all right except that you are all wrong; outside of that there is nothing wrong with your version, Brother Dilley. The reason why one can pull a much longer arc with a 220 volt supply than he can with a 110 volt supply is quite simple, once it is understood. You seem to have misunderstood my meaning. The voltage of the D. C. projection arc is between 45 and 55 when operating at its best. It may, however, be much less or much more, but when it is you won't get the best light; also in this I am dealing with ordinary amperage, say less than 50. And now suppose you are running along with a normal projection arc, 110 volt supply, and open the arc, or lengthen it. What happens? Why you increase the resistance of the arc, hence instantly decrease the amperage and increase the voltage of the arc. But the process of lengthening and increasing arc voltage cannot, of course, be carried nearly so far with a 110 volt as with a 220 volt supply, because the resistance becomes great enough to break the arc with a low supply voltage much sooner than with a high one and—there you are.

Incandescent Lamp.

J. H. Pooley, Toledo, Ohio, writes:

In the issue February 26th you say you never heard of an incandescent arc light, therefore I call your attention to the fact that there is such a light. It was fully described in the Electrical World, issue February 1, 1916. If you cannot secure this particular copy you can get information with regard to the light by applying to the manufacturers, Edison & Swan, United Electric Light Company, Ltd., Ponders End, Middlesex, England. This light burns in a gas filled bulb without consuming its electrodes. I trust that this will be of interest.

Yes, Brother Pooley, it is interesting merely as an additional bit of knowledge. If it ever transpires that this lamp is adapted to projection, or for use in the moving picture theater, then it will become of practical interest. But until that happens, I don't believe I will trouble writing to England. Many thanks, nevertheless, for your kindness.

"Anyone," the Operator.

E. B. Tinker, manager of the Feature Phoenix Film Corporation, Ellsworth, Me., writes:

The writer is manager of an exchange catering largely to the smaller towns of eastern New England. I am deeply interested in the discussion of film abuses, and methods employed in the inspection of film, etc. I have noted that such of the prominent film men who have written you have expressed themselves as being strictly in favor of the maintenance of an efficient inspection department in all their exchanges. In every case, no doubt, the wishes of these men are followed (wish I could think so.—Ed.). Their subordinates must see that films are inspected. Judging from my own experience with several companies, every branch manager is glad to keep his reels in the best condition possible. Yet there are many evils to prevent their desire from being put into effect. If I may be permitted to express an opinion the entire trouble is due to lack of co-operation between the exhibitor and the exchange men, supplemented by the exhibitor's belief that "anyone can run a picture machine," and the fact that in many cases "anyone does run it." (Amen.—Ed.) My acquaintance with exhibitors in my territory is wide.

I personally know every one of them, and they are all good fellows too. Many of them have built fine, modern theaters. They believe in good music. They run what is, in their judgment, the best pictures obtainable. Many of them go so far as to occasionally run pictures on which they know they will lose, merely to add prestige and to please patrons. The exhibitors of Maine are a painstaking crowd; also many of them have operators who are such in name only. In my estimation an operator is not merely a man who will run the show through without a break or a flicker, but a man who when he puts a reel into his machine knows that it is in condition, and who sends it to the next town in as good condition as he receives it. I am not making this statement with a view of shielding the exchange from blame in the matter of poor condition of film, but merely claiming that if more efficient operators were employed, a far better film service would be in the hands of the exhibitor. Under existing conditions, however, if an operator is criticised it means that favor with the exhibitor is most always lost. Therefore instead of getting after the exchanges, who are, of course, in some measure to blame, have a series of talks with operators on the importance of the proper handling of film while in their possession. Exchange men know they are very much at fault, but operators, many of whom are at fault, yet do not know or realize it. Every operator I know of in the east reads the projection department. They are keen to adopt every suggestion, yet they do not, as a rule, realize that a film is a valuable piece of property. It is necessary in many instances, in this as well as many other exchanges serving in the smaller towns, to circuit films. There is no good reason why films could not be worked on circuit indefinitely, always, of course, provided the operators were as anxious to please the exchange as the exchange is to please the theater. But to circuit more than two or three houses is out of the question. How about this, operators of Maine?

Brother Tinker writes a sensible, gentlemanly letter and, moreover, it contains a very large degree of truth, therefore I second his remark: What about it, operators of Maine? But I take the liberty of applying that remark also to operators of forty-three other states. (I think it is forty-three.) I don't pretend to say that the fault is altogether on the side of the exchange, but I do say that if (there's that confounded if again) the exchanges can, or would get together and stick together they could force exhibitors to employ operators who would take better care of film, or see that their present operators took care of it by adopting a rigid inspection rule, and compelling payment for damage. I defend the operator when I believe he is abused, but in this case, whereas, I have held, and do still hold, that the exchange is the greater offender, still the operator does not by any manner of means go scott free. The fact remains, however, that, in all too many instances, very cheap labor is employed for film inspection, and the inspector is expected to do so much work in a day that he or she can only make a bluff at it, with the result that the inspection in those exchanges is largely a farce. I do not agree that films can be circuited indefinitely. It is up to the operator to repair such damage as he does to the film, but it is unreasonable to expect him to make a regular inspection before it is shipped away, unless you are willing to pay him extra for the time thus expended. I hold that if a film went through the machine perfectly on the last run, the operator is justified in shipping it away without examination, but this fact remains that a film which may run perfectly on a given machine may still be in urgent need of inspection and repair, and may not run perfectly on the next machine—loose patch, broken sprocket holes on one side, etc. But the operator who is careless, who keeps his machine in poor adjustment or sends films away knowing it to be in bad shape, yet sending no warning to the "next man" is deserving of discharge. I have talked to operators on this subject and will, from time to time, continue to, Neighbor Tinker.

Of Interest to Operators.

Robert Dauphinee, Lincoln, Nebr., says:

I am very much interested in knowing what will be the effect of connecting a compensarc wound for 60 cycle current to a 133 cycle circuit.

Now I had never really looked this matter up, but thought the practical effect would be heating of the compensarc and considerable added noise. I concluded, however, to check up this particular piece of what appears to be misinformation, and with that end in view, proceeded to consult the Engineering Department of the General Electric Company, Fort Wayne, Ind., and here is the result. I presume the same thing will apply to all other low voltage transformers. I see no reason why it should not.

Referring to your letter of April 6th, with reference to using 60 cycle ompensarcs on 133 cycle circuit, and vice versa, beg to state that our A. C. compensarcs obtain regulating characteristics, due to a certain amount of inherent reactance in the winding and are, therefore, adjusted for the proper frequency when constructed at the factory. Since the amount of reactance is the same for different compensarcs, and since reactance varies directly with the frequency, a compensarc built for 60 cyles when used on 133 cycle circuit will give less amperage on the 133 cycle circuit than it does on the 60 cycle circuit. The compensarc, however, will not be in any way injured. It will simply give a smaller amount of current at the arc. If the 133 cycle compensarc is used on the 60 cycle circuit, then the reverse condition will follow, i. e., since the reactance will be lower when being used on the 60 cycle circuit, it will result in obtaining more current than the device was adjusted for. The additional current would probably be sufficient to cause hissing at the carbons, but the compensarc itself would probably not be injured. Therefore, the reason these devices are not interchangeable in regard to frequency is on account of the results obtained at the arc.

Of Interest.

F. J. Merklein, Brooklyn, N. Y., sends in some sample carbon craters which illustrate the effect of different carbon faults. Specimen 1 shows an imperfect core, falling out at intervals; forming a brown ghost in the center of the screen. Another specimen shows an imperfect core with cracks running lengthwise of the carbon, which same are very pronounced at the crater. Brother Merklein claims these cracks form vari-colored streaks on the screen. Another specimen shows a crater which is too deep, caused by center of carbon being too soft. This sets up a bluish ghost at the center of the screen. The fourth shows a perfect core with a tolerably shallow or flat crater, which is, as Friend Merklein claims, ideal. He says:

The above is the result of many weeks of careful study. I am convinced that many cases of ghost which have been laid to the much maligned condenser is really caused by using carbons which form too deep a crater. I also find that the more shallow, or flat the crater forms, the more uniform the light will be on the screen. These various experiments were made with the crater in focus at the cooling plate. If this is of interest I will send more dope later. Radial cracks in carbon positvely do make a difference in the light on the screen. Try one and be convinced.

As to Brother Merklein's last remark, it does not coincide with my own experience when I was twisting a crank. However, that does not prove my contention that longitudinal cracks running lengthwise of the carbon do no damage. If I am in error in this the quicker that fact is discovered the better, and I would like to hear from operators on this very important point.

With regard to the faulty core, there need, of course, be no discussion on that part, as we all agree that faulty cores are very, very bad. As to deep craters forming a ghost, well this too is an exceedingly important matter, and I believe it is quite possible there is something in it, because if the crater be deep, then with its edges in approximate focus at the cooling plate, the light emanating from the center of the crater would be badly out of focus. That this would produce a ghost on the screen I am not prepared to admit, neither am I prepared to dispute it. Let's hear from you, gentlemen. This is a matter of very great importance. As I said in the first place, Brother Merklein's contention with regard to the deep crater versus flat crater sounds reasonable on the face of it. If he is right then we ought to know that fact, and take the matter up with the carbon manufacturers to the end that the center of the carbon and its core be, if possible, so made that the crater will burn comparatively flat. I am told by a carbon manufacturer that the deep crater is evidence of lack of uniformity in density of the carbon, due to lack of pressure.

Acquires Nerve.

W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada, sends in answers to several questions, and says:

It is but lately I got enough nerve to answer the questions. I have, nevertheless, followed them right from the start, as no doubt have others who, like myself, were timid about answering. One therefore cannot judge the amount of good being done by the questions simply by looking over the Roll of Honor. Personally, I believe those questions are helping operators throughout the United States and Canada more than any other one thing. Yes, we have the new Handbook, and it certainly is great. It is everything I expected of it and more. The index is something worth mentioning. A perfect index is very important, particularly in a book of this size. In closing I wish yourself, the department and the Handbook all kinds of success.

In the lauguage of our friend the Spaniard, muchas gracias for them kind words. Yes, there is no doubt but the questions are being very generally studied by operators; also there is no doubt but that many hundreds who don't reply would like to if they were not too timid. That fact is brought to my attention practically every day.

Richardson's

Motion Picture Handbook for Managers and Operators.

Over 700 pages and over 300 illustrations help to make a book that will be a lasting monument to its author's knowledge, ability and diligence. No such work on Projection has ever before been attempted, nor is it likely to be for many years to come. Price is $4.00 per copy, postpaid.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are inclosed. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in this department, $1.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It a rule of this department that no apparatus will be recommended editorially until the value of such appliances has been demonstrated to its editor.

Emmet Williams Dead.

It is quite proper that the editor of this department make some notice of the death of Emmet Williams, which occurred on Friday, April 28th.

Mr. Williams was popularly known in the profession as the cameraman who worked with Mary Pickford. Miss Pickford thought so much of his work that she would have no other photographer make her pictures.

Emmet Williams received his early training in motion picture photography with the Thanhouser Company, but for some time past was associated with the Famous Players Company.

Some weeks ago he was taken to the New Rochelle Hospital suffering from septic poisoning, which later caused his death. At intervals his condition improved, and hopes were held out for his recovery, but he finally succumbed despite the efforts of physicians and specialists. Everything known to medical science was brought to bear in his case, the Famous Players Company providing eminent specialists and rare antitoxins to overcome the disease, but all in vain.

In the death of Emmet Williams the profession loses one of the foremost photographers, a man held in the highest esteem by his coworkers, whose amiable disposition was one of the features of an estimable character.

Besides his wife, he is survived by his parents, four brothers and one sister.

The Cinema Camera Club Activities.

The Cinema Camera Club, the organization of Motion Picture Photographers, have recently moved their club rooms to suites 1006-1007, Times Building. Here are housed the offices and meeting rooms of the club, together with the offices of the Corresponding Secretary.

The Cinema Camera Club is making an effort to supply high grade, efficient photographers to those concerns desiring this service. At the office of the secretary, a list of all available cameramen is always on hand, and these men can be supplied to producers on short notice.

On Friday evening, May 5th, the Cinema Club attended in a body the Exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at Grand Central Palace, and also attended the exposition of the Motion Picture Board of Trade at the Madison Square Garden on May 12th.

The Cinema Camera Club numbers among its members some of the best photographers in the profession. Cameramen who are photographing the leading features meet at the club rooms and compare their work with the experience of some of the members who are doing special stunts in far away lands, the jungles of Africa, or those who are engaged in making photographic records of the gold mining industry in Alaska.

The Entertainment Committee of the Cinema Club have planned a series of informal talks by members and guests who have had varied experience along lines different from the regular work than the majority of the men are doing. These informal talks will no doubt prove highly beneficial to the members.

Black Leader Stock Formula.

C. W. V. R., Geneva, N. Y., writes:

> Will you be kind enough to advise me through your column of a suitable formula for making black leader stock from old film both cleaned and that on which the emulsion still remains. I have tried several methods and found that it is quite easy to color the cleaned stock, but that the film having the emulsion still on it does not readily take the color.

The following formula has been tried out quite successfully and is now being used by several manufacturers:

Formula for Black Leader.

I.

Ferric Chloride	50 lbs.
Water	100 gals.

II.

Sodium Sulphruet	30 lbs.
Water	100 gals.

Put film through first solution, and then rinse in clear water, then through second solution, when film will immediately assume dead black color.

CAMERAS EXHIBITED AT THE SHOW.

On exhibition at the Motion Picture Exposition conducted by the Board of Trade at Madison Square Garden, May 6th to 13th, are several of the popular known makes of Cine cameras.

The Bell and Howell Company are showing their latest camera, the widely known Bell and Howell, probably better known among the American made cameras. Many unusual advantages are incorporated in this machine, among them the mounting of four separate lenses in a revolving lens mount, making it possible to fit any size lens to the work in hand by simply revolving the lens mount to bring the proper lens before the aperture.

Bell and Howell cameras are quite generally used in the West, and having them on display at this show will give the Eastern producers an opportunity of familiarizing themselves with the popular camera.

The Motion Picture Apparatus Company, R. H. Hastings, agent, has on display a De Brie, several Pathe's (Professional models) and the Moy. It is rare indeed to see any quantity of these cameras with the present market as it is on imported cameras.

The Simplex Photo Product Company are showing the "Almo" Camera. This tiny model will appeal to the amateur, as the film capacity is 50 feet. The Almo is equipped with a B. & L. Zeiss Tessar F. 3.5 lens, carry daylight loading magazines and is a thoroughly compact little instrument.

Simplex tripods, developing outfits and accessories are also displayed.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Musical Settings for "A Child of the Paris Streets." Released May 22, 1916.

Suggestions Prepared by S. M. Berg.

By Special Arrangements With G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 3½ T "The magistrate dismissing—" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 18¾ D "The Apache dance" is a description of action.

The son of old Mother Dufrane, Queen of the Apaches, is sentenced to jail for theft by Judge Le Tolne. The old lady vows vengeance and, with the aid of her older son, steals Julie, the Judge's baby girl. Julie is brought up in the Apache environment and though she becomes a clever thief, the instinctive refinement of her noble blood causes her to rebel against the life forced upon her. In a cafe she meets a young artist who falls in love with her, and one day when she is severely beaten by Mother Dufrane she runs away taking refuge in his studio. The Apaches trace her here and take her back to the den. Julie's old nurse, now a trinket seller, having seen her in the studio recognizes her strong resemblance to the Judge's dead wife and goes to him with her information. Together they go to the Studio but as they arrive the artist has just discovered Julie's absence. They all hasten to the Apache's den where, with the aid of the gendarmes, they rescue Julie as she is being strangled to death by the orders of the infuriated queen. Julie and the young artist are then united in marriage with the blessing of the Judge.

The whole action of the picture takes place in the city of Paris. Particular care must be taken by the leader in following the picture. In many parts there are scenes of dancing in cafes and specialty dances such as at 18¾ which is an Apache dance. Care should be taken in following the tempo of the dancers. From 37½ to 43 there are continual flashes of Carnival scenes. It is impossible to satisfactorily change the music to portray the dramatic moments blended in with these scenes so as to overcome this difficulty the music should be "ff" at the Carnival scenes and "pp" at dramatic situations. It is logical that the noise of the Carnival can be heard in the cellar where the action is portrayed.

The THEME selected is "Allegretto Movement in 6-8" from the Overture of "Orphee aux Enfers" by Offenbach.

Schedule time: 71 minutes. Five reels (about 4,800 feet).

Time.		Suptitles or descriptive cues.	Music.

Note.—For the convenience of readers of the Moving Picture World a price list of the numbers suggested in the above cue-sheet is to be found in G. Schirmer's advertisement on page 1600.

To the Lone Pianist—Example No. 2.

By S. M. Berg.

For a second example to the lone pianist, no more fitting picture could be found than the Triangle release of May 22d "A Child of the Paris Streets." The complete cue sheet will be found in these columns and in the following paragraphs I will endeavor to state the reasons for the suggestions named.

The character of the picture is French in action wound around the desire for revenge by an old woman, queen of the Apaches. When her son is sentenced to the galleys by the Judge, and later dies in prison, she vows vengeance and with the aid of an elder son steals Julie, the Judge's baby girl. In many parts of the picture it would be impossible for an orchestra to properly interpret the action unless a musical setting had been especially printed and arranged. Even then every care would have to be taken by the musical director. To the solo player, however, excellent results can be obtained if the action is carefully followed.

The story opens in a French Court of Law with the prisoner being sentenced and the mother pleading with the Judge for leniency. Naturally the music must be an Andante Pathetique. Then at 3½ minutes the magistrate is seen in his own home with his young wife. This is the logical place for the theme which is selected to be the Allegretto Movement in 6-8, key of E Major, from the overture "Orphee aux Enfers" by Offenbach. Then we have what might be described as a neutral scene where a pleasing valse lento is appropriate. At 8 we see the Apache spying around the Judge's house, finally stealing the baby. The music must be a dramatic allegro. When the news of this reaches the mother of the child it causes her death. Here naturally the theme should be repeated. At 11½ we have a title "In the Bohemian Quarter." Then follow scenes of the Apaches' den, dancing in the Cafe d'Ambassadors and a scene of an artist's studio. Characteristic French numbers must be played interpreting the action of the dancers and closely following their movements. Later comes a title "A traitor whose punishment, etc.," showing an Apache, who has been false to his oath put to death by his fellows. Of course an Agitato must be used. At 37 we have a title "In cruel contrast." Julie who has been thrashed by the queen of the Apaches is in her room planning how she can escape to her artist lover. She reflects upon the fearful vengeance of the Apaches while outside the Carnival is in full sway with all its gayety

This is where particular care must be taken. Of course it is logical that the noise of the Carnival can be heard in the cellar where Julie's room is located, therefore when the actual scenes of the Carnival are on the screen the music can be "ff." When the action depicts Julie's misery and indecision the music should either be "pp" or suggestive of the theme. It is in such actions as these that the player has the opportunity of showing how he can interpret the picture. I recall some considerable time ago a picture which had continual change of action. The story was of two sisters, one of a pious and the other of a worldly temperament. In one part there was a continual change of action showing the one sister in church during the service and the other in a lively cafe where a cabaret show was in progress. Again here was a problem which appeared insurmountable for the orchestra. My suggestion at that time was for the organ to handle the church scene while the orchestra took charge of the cabaret, each alternating according to the action. This I believe solved the problem though of course it would have presented no difficulty to the solo player.

To continue with our picture, from 59¼ on, we have for ten minutes a misterioso, then a hurry, closing with agitatos. Here is one of those situations which must be carefully worked up. I have often found that players will start an agitato noisily and at a particularly fast tempo. Instead of which far better effect could be obtained if it were commenced somewhat softly increasing the tempo and volume as the action progresses. Then again with regard to the playing of the theme. With the many kind of orchestra organs now in use in theatres, a considerable variety of coloring can be obtained by at one time playing the melody as a flute solo, at another a cello solo, etc., besides changing the tempo. All such attempts will help towards the better interpretation of the picture. To the successful playing of motion pictures there is no royal road. Of course experience counts a great deal, but until the player entering the industry endeavors to use some of the common sense with which they have been gifted, the difficulties will appear very great.

Once again I would remind my readers that the musical settings are not designed as a hard and fast musical interpretation of the film but are intended "as a partial solution of the problem." The one point I have always laid stress upon is that at every change of music the character of the same is marked by its musical interpretation, so that the player can seek from his own library a number with which he is acquainted, thereby avoiding expense yet at the same time giving the scene the same character of musical interpretation.

At a later date I intend dealing in greater detail with the classification of film music. In the course of a conversation with a player we discussed this important question and I was told that he had a quantity of plain manilla covers into which he had sorted his music under such headings as Pathetic, Semi-pathetic, Neutral intermezzos, Allegro, Indian, Mexican, Spanish, etc. By these means he could quickly get the required music together. Possibly some of my readers have worked out other ideas with regard to this. If they would let me hear from them I should be delighted to publish what they have to say in these columns.

Original Compositions.

We have arranged with Mr. W. C. Simon to print a page of original composition in this reduced style at certain intervals. The following score is an original composition—the sixth of a series of ten or twelve numbers which will be suitable for certain styles of dramatic subjects under the general classification of society dramas. The complete sets will be available in loose leaf form and will be a welcome addition to the music libraries of orchestra leaders.

Mr. Simon is prepared to undertake original musical compositions or adaptations for any production or special occasion and may be addressed in care of the Moving Picture World. If any readers of this department desire any special set or series for moving picture work, we will arrange with Mr. Simon for publication as above.

Figures That Point Success

Grand Central Palace Show Brings More Than $14,000 Worth of Bookings on First Episode of Pathe's "Who's Guilty?"

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., and the Arrow Film Corporation both found, in their display at the Exhibitors' Exposition in the Grand Central Palace, success in the way that, more nearly than any other, concerns the distributor and the producer of motion pictures. This is actual film bookings backed up with advance cash payments against collections.

Under the supervision of Arthur S. Abeles, manager of Pathe's Twenty-third Street Branch in New York City, "Puppets of Fate," the first of the fourteen photo-novels comprising the "Who's Guilty?" series, was screened publicly for the first time in the projection room at the Palace for the benefit of the exhibitors attending this big exposition.

When Mr. Abeles checked up on the evening of May 4, he found in the Palace Show itself more than $14,000 worth of "Who's Guilty?" bookings had been written. To be exact, $14,126 worth of business had been contracted for in four showings of one photo-novel alone, out of the eight "Who's Guilty?" pictures which the Arrow Film Corporation, producer of the series, had already turned over to Pathe.

At the close of business on Saturday, April 29, the various Pathe exchanges had reported to the home office gross bookings totalling $275,014 on "Who's Guilty?" series. Under the Pathe system of contracts this means assured gross collections on the bookings already signed of $275,014. Yet C. R. Seelye, head of the Pathe sales force, says he has only just commenced to "point with pride."

PIONEER ACQUIRES "THE END OF THE WORLD."

The Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, Nathan Hirsh, president, 130 West 46th street, have just acquired the New York and Jersey rights for the production entitled "The End of the World," which they intended to release on or about the 15th of May.

The public have been looking forward to such a masterpiece and the exhibitors certainly cannot afford to overlook this production. Several critics who have screened the feature have been very favorably impressed with the construction and spectacular effects.

"THE MIRACLE OF AMBROSIA" COMPLETED.

"The Miracle of Ambrosia" will be completed at Universal City within a week by Robert Leonard. In this story, prepared for the screen and written by Leonard, Ella Hall is featured in the role of a little girl. In the supporting cast are Adele Farrington, Betty Schade and Harry Depp.

Regarding Conventions of Exhibitors.

I HAVE attended many conventions of exhibitors in my time, and while I can easily discern a great improvement in the manner of conducting them, I must confess that there is much to be deplored in the attitude of many members after a convention has once been opened.

Perhaps it is due to the close attention paid to his theater, week in and out, and month in and out, that the average exhibitor shows a lack of strict business methods when he arrives in a convention city. He is like a boy out of school and is out for a good time. It is almost impossible to round him up and get him to attend the meetings—meetings that are of vital importance to his interests and those of the organization.

The officers are obliged to carry the whole burden. They plead and they rush around in a vain endeavor to herd the delinquents, with the result that much of the energy that they require for the proper conduct of the business in hand is wasted and their minds possessed by worry.

At the recent convention and exposition in Minneapolis the officers worked like beavers; but they were not supported in a worthy manner by exhibitors. Many of the latter came into the city from out of town points and never even came into the convention. This showed not only neglect, but a woeful ignorance of the many dangers that now confront the business.

Get together, exhibitors, and keep close together!

The Author of "Gloria's Romance" Describes How It Differs from Other Film Serials.

Under the head "What Are We Trying to Do?" Rupert Hughes, who collaborated with his wife in writing "Gloria's Romance," contributed an article to the Chicago Tribune of May 7, the following excerpts from which will be timely for exhibitors who are interested in that moving picture novel:

In a few years the moving picture has passed through all the phases that older arts were centuries in passing through. It has the advantage of their attainments and the help of science and immense popularity. Under the stimulus of occasional pieces of brilliant workmanship the audience has itself grown better and better, promoting itself every year to higher and higher demands, and offering a glorious opportunity for story tellers who wish to enlarge their resources and get constantly closer to real life.

The demand for genuine art, craftsmanship, imagination, observation, drama, comedy, literature is being supplied more and more honorably. In the shorter forms the one-reel, two-reel, five-reel pictures and the feature films that occupy a whole evening, some of the creators have accomplished splendid things that would adorn any art.

There is a general feeling that the serials have not done their opportunities full justice. The difficulties and anxieties are great, and there is a natural temptation to feel that in a continued story the interest can be held only by piling crimes on mysteries and mysteries on crimes. As a matter of fact, there is nothing that tires people quicker than an over-dose of excitement. Too many killings are more wearisome than none at all. The European war has proven this.

Some of the directors seem to be convinced that when a picture begins to drag the only way to enliven it is to push a motor off a cliff or make the villain a little more devilish than before. As a matter of fact, the moment any story begins to drag the surest way to get the audience back is to get back to where the audience is—on the solid ground of humanity.

With a few exceptions the serials that have been offered to us thus far have been largely made up of mysteries that were too artificial to interest us long.

In such films incidents that could not conceivably occur happen to people who could not possibly exist. Grotesque gorillas of crime, who would be clubbed to death on sight by the first policeman, steal about the city streets unnoticed, take cabs without difficulty, enter millionaires' houses with ease and steal their daughters and their ducats. They fight ludicrous battles, put on and take off disguises that could deceive nobody, and make use of marvelous machines that science never heard of. They are everywhere and nowhere at the same time and never pause to explain how they get from one place to another.

The managers may like these concoctions, but the audiences seem to endure them because they must in order to get to see the next film. I have watched audiences of all sorts sit puzzled and annoyed by these impossibilities; they have laughed or yawned aloud at the scenes of most blood-curdling intent. The same audience would sit up and respond with laughter, tears, and applause to a film in which real emotions were portrayed with a basis of human possibility.

Invitations to write such serials had been extended to me, as to most other authors and glittering terms offered, but I was not interested.

When, however, an opportunity came to write a serial for Miss Billie Burke, the situation was different. She is not only a famous beauty, but an actress of unusually thorough schooling, of magnetism, high spirit, and peculiarly human appeal. She has also an extraordinarily flexible pantomimic gift and what is known as "screen value" to a degree that might be called "screen genius."

With great enthusiasm I undertook the task in collaboration with my wife, who has been of greatest help to me in my other work. We have omitted the usual master criminals, the secret panels, and the ghoulish gangs. We have laid most of the scenes in an atmosphere of wealth and beauty, but we have tried to avoid the usual ridiculous millionaires of the film. Our heroine has adventures, and we hope that they will be interesting—we know that they are not impossible.

We have tried to carry the fascinating young girl of today through a succession of events that might happen to a young girl of her character. We have tried to show her character in all its moods and to make her motives and the motives of those about her human and convincing, and to play out the story in scenes that picture life most charmingly and most vividly.

In this ambition we have been aided and guided with the utmost enthusiasm by the star herself, by the important and experienced people who are backing the enormous enterprise, by the gifted director, and by a splendid company.

We are sure that we have done nothing to be ashamed of. In fact, we have all taken sincere pride in building for the public a big, honest, beautiful, brilliant structure in which everybody concerned has done the best that he or she could do.

Pathe's Chicago Exchange to Have "Rooster-Booster" Night.

Tuesday, May 16, will be "Rooster-Booster" night for exchangemen and exhibitors in Chicago. H. C. Holah, the live-wire manager of the Pathe Exchange in this city, is the instigator of the affair, the object of which is to bring about a spirit of good fellowship among the trade, and to get them in closer touch with one another. In fact, this will be about the first time that exchangemen and exhibitors have gotten together socially in this city, but the future looks bright since Holah has taken hold and started things.

It so happens that Dan Coleman, a particular friend of H. C. Holah, formerly associated with "Johnny and Emma Ray," who are now making the "Ray Comedies" for the Reserve Photoplays Co. of Cleveland, O., has entered burlesque and at present is playing with Harry Hastings big show, which will open here next week at the Columbia theater. As a send-off to Mr. Coleman and in appreciation of his friendship, Mr. Holah has reserved a generous section of the theater for Tuesday night. In fact, the first seven rows, including all sections, has been engaged for the exhibitors and exchangemen who will attend in a body.

It is planned that some time during the performance Mr. Coleman will be made a presentation of something, the nature of which for the time being is kept secret, but which, undoubtedly, will prove a very interesting event.

After the show the whole party, including Mr. Coleman and his entire company, will proceed in automobiles to the North Star Inn, where an elaborate supper will be served. Present indications promise that the party will be a great success, as nearly all the tickets have been sold at the time of writing.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Mary Miles Minter will arrive in Chicago Monday morning, May 15, and will stop over for a luncheon given in her honor at the Hotel Sherman before she resumes her journey to the American Film Company's studios at Santa Barbara, Cal. Miss Minter is a big favorite in Chicago, where she made one of her biggest stage succcesses in the title role of "The Littlest Rebel." "Little Mary," as she is affectionately called by moving picture fans, began her stage career when only five years old, appearing with Nat C. Goodwin, and later with Dustin Farnum in "Cameo Kirby." She is only a little over fourteen years old, and President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, Inc., is much gratified at having secured her. "In Mary Miles Minter we have acquired a star who combines the many essential qualities of endearment to the public," said Mr. Hutchinson recently. "She has them all—youth, innocence, naivette, ingenuousness, beauty of face and form, screen presence, dramatic ability and an established following among picture patrons, particularly the younger set. We believe she is coming to us at the most significant period of her career, and that her greatest work is possible under our direction. A large company of guests invited from various branches of the trade will be present at the luncheon in the Hotel Sherman. Numerous requests from exhibitors and others to meet "Little Mary," in person, led to her stop-over here. She will leave for the Coast Monday night.

Will B. Cameron, owner and manager of the Englewood theater, 63rd and Halsted streets, this city, has sent us an invitation card of admission to visit his theater, which he is proud to call "Chicago's finest photoplay palace." The Englewood is thoroughly up to date in construction, having perfect ventilation and being absolutely fireproof. On his programs he includes the world's best first-run subjects. An expensive symphony orchestra accompanies the pictures and talented solists. A $10,000 pipe organ has also been installed. The Englewood is showing to fine business.

The great ball-room scene in the Carvel home, St. Louis, just before the Civil War, which is shown in the production of "The Crisis," was taken out at the Selig studio under the direction of Colin Campbell recently. Many hundreds of supernumeraries were employed in this scene, which is considered one of the most expensive and elaborate interior sets ever taken by the camera in Chicago. The dining room set can boast of the complete dinner set at one time owned by the late Joseph Jefferson. The occasion was of such spectacular and artistic interest that many ladies and gentlemen of Chicago, prominent in business and social circles, were the guests of William N. Selig at the studio. The members of "The Crisis" company now in Chicago will soon leave for St. Louis and Vicksburg, to which points several cars loaded with special properties, to be used in the scenes taken there, have already been sent on, accompanied by a force of stage carpenters and special scenic artists. Elaborate night scenes connected with the Lincoln-Douglas debate, in which Abraham Lincoln figures prominently, in the production of "The Crisis," were taken at the studios last week.

Harry Weiss, manager of the Metro exchange in this city, gives a glowing account of the business done by his office. He announces that Metro service is now used by 188 people in Chicago. When it is remembered that the records at the City Hall show that 542 theater licenses have been issued, the Metro percentage shows up well. William E. Weinschenker, assistant of Mr. Weiss, has just returned from a two weeks' trip in southern Indiana and southern Illinois, where he was very successful in his contracts. Mr. Weiss tells me that the members of the F. I. L. M. club, of which he is one of the leading supporters, made their announced trip in eight automobiles on Saturday, May 6. They left Chicago for Lyons, Ill., where they held a meeting in the Chateau des Plaines, and enjoyed a country chicken dinner. The last meeting of the F. I. L. M. club was held at the Movie Inn Friday, May 12, when it was arranged that another automobile trip would be made Saturday, May 20, to Cedar Lake, Ind.

H. M. Berman, manager of the Metro Pictures service in Kansas City, Mo., resigned Saturday, May 6, to take charge of the Cincinnati office of the Universal Film Co. Mr. Berman's rise in the film business has been meteoric. It was only six months ago that he entered the business as traveling representative for the Metro product in Pittsburg.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday or Monday, May 14 and 15:

Studebaker—"Gloria's Romance," second chapter; "Caught by the Seminoles" (George Kleine), and Hazel Dawn in "The Feud Girl" (Famous Players). The Billie Burke moving picture novel is evidently on for a crowded run, as chapter one packed the theater all through the week. I visited the house one night last week, and was obliged to wait twenty minutes before it was possible to get in with the long line ahead of me and secure a seat.

Fine Arts—Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "A Million a Minute," and other pictures.

Orchestra Hall—A revival of Mary Pickford's greatest screen triumph, "Tess of the Storm Country" (Famous Players), a travelogue on Switzerland and a Paramount-Bray animated cartoon. Sibyl Sammis-MacDermid, a soprano soloist, and Marie Ludwig, a harp soloist, furnish the concert numbers. The admission in afternoons is 25 cents, and evenings 25 and 50 cents. The opening week's program was well patronized, and indications point to a successful summer season.

Colonial—Alice Brady in "Tangled Fates" (World), Harry Watson in a Musty Suffer comedy (George Kleine), a George Kleine scenic picture, and the Hearst-Vitagraph weekly.

Strand—William Collier, Jr., and Anna Lehr in "The Bugle Call" (Kay-Bee), a Nestor comedy, and a Bruce travelogue. Gage Christopher is the soloist.

Ziegfeld—"The Unwritten Law" (California), featuring Beatriz Michelena, and other pictures.

La Salle—Second week of "The Little Girl Next Door" (Illinois vice film). Crowded houses were the rule the opening week.

The Selig Polyscope Co. will shortly release a series of one-reel Tom Mix comedies through the General Film Co. The series will number a dozen or more subjects, each with an original plot and teeming with hair-raising Tom Mix stunts.

A grand benefit performance in aid of the American Theatrical Hospital association is announced at the Auditorium for Sunday, May 14. This hospital will be the first of its kind in the United States, when finished. The patients will include both stage and photoplay actors and actresses and also others connected with the business. It is expected that the hospital will be opened next October.

To provide space for the new Rialto about to be erected on State street, this city, between Van Buren street and Jackson boulevard, Jones, Linick & Schaefer were obliged to remove their little Lyric theater about 100 feet north of its former site. This was done, and the Lyric opened Monday, May 1, with a daily change of General Film programs, with Louis J. Jones as manager.

Edward ("Spike") O'Donnell, business agent for Local No. 110 of the Moving Picture Operators' union, and Michael Thibeau, who were indicted for the murder of Hugh Coogan on March 26, were placed on trial Wednesday, May 10, before Judge McDonald. After hearing the case as outlined by the state, Judge McDonald announced that he would take the case from the jury and direct a verdict of not guilty, the evidence introduced not being sufficient to warrant the charge. On the request of John K. Murphy, assistant state's attorney, Judge McDonald deferred action until the following day, when the state will argue a motion to dismiss the murder charge and substitute a charge of assault with intent to murder.

The representatives who recently voted to report favorably the Smith-Hughes federal censorship bill were as follows: Chairman Hughes, of Georgia; Doughton, of North Carolina; Abercrombie, of Alabama; Stone, of Illinois; Hilliard, of Colorado; Towner, of Iowa; Fess, of Iowa; North, of Pennsylvania, and McCracken, of Idaho. Exhibitors in these states would do well to remember these men when they come up for re-election. The representatives who will sign the minority report are: Rucker, of Missouri; Key, of Ohio; Powers, of Kentucky; Platt, of New York; Ballinger, of Massachusetts, and Sears, of Florida. These representatives should be particularly well remembered by exhibitors, only in a different way, when they come up for re-election.

The Great West Film Company, of St. Paul, the cowboys and cowgirls of which made a spectacular turn-out at the recent Minneapolis exposition and convention, is planning to build a studio and plant somewhere in the northwest. Formerly they confined themselves to the production of commercial films, but will make their initial step in feature productions on May 20 by filming "Yellowstone Pete's Only Daughter," adapted from Wallace D. Coburn's poem of that name. Mr. Coburn will be the star. He is a rancher of Malta, Mont., and is known as the "cowboy poet." Mr. Coburn is known the country over as the author of "Rhymes from a Roundup Camp" and other western stories in prose and verse. He had charge of the company's booth at the exposition in the Armory. A. R. Tobin is manager of the Great West Film Company.

Mrs. Martha Durnion, of this city, has entered suit against the United Photo-Plays Company to ascertain what has become of $30,000 which she invested some time ago in that enterprise. She claims that she was approached not only by agents of the company, but by officers as well, who assured her that the stock of the company was at a premium. She states that she bought $30,000 worth and has waited patiently for returns. Mrs. Durnion alleges that she has found out that the stock in reality is worth anywhere from 25 to 50 per cent. less than par, and that her money has withered away. Mrs. Durnion desires an accounting because the plant of the company, under a heavy overhead charge, lies idle most of the time.

TWO SCENARIO MEN KILLED.

Famous Lasky Authors Die in Tragic Auto Wreck, Third Man Escapes.

CLINTON HOLLAND STAGG, well known New York writer, and Malcolm Strong, author, both employed by the Lasky Company, were killed here last Wednesday night when the car in which they were riding turned turtle on the road to Santa Monica.

The car, in which they were speeding south on La Brea boulevard, near Santa Monica boulevard, threw tire and rim from the left front wheel and, richocheting from a telegraph pole into a ploughed field, turned over several times before coming to rest.

J. T. Platt, forty years old, another scenario writer, was hurled clear of the wreck, the fall breaking his arm and injuring his back. He was hurriedly taken to the Sisters' Hospital, but because of the shock could give no coherent story of the accident.

Mr. Strong was killed instantly. Mr. Stagg lived fifteen minutes after Motorcycle Officer Roeder of Hollywood Station had pulled him from beneath the overturned machine. Both had crushed skulls.

It appeared from what could be gleaned from the incoherent explanation given last night by Mr. Platt, the three had eaten supper together in the Hollywood Hotel. Following supper the three took the roadster and started for a ride.

The clear night and the apparently deserted boulevard lured the driver into a lively pace. Then suddenly something went wrong. This something was later discovered to be that the left front wheel had become disconnected.

"The machine careened to the left of the road and hit a telegraph pole. That's the last I remember," Mr. Platt said at the hospital.

The sideswipe given the car by the pole threw the car over and, turning over and over, it rolled crazily through the plowed field just north of Santa Monica boulevard for seventy-five feet, finally coming to a stop, upside down, with Stagg and Strong beneath.

WOMEN START SOMETHING.

Sex Revolt to Be Revealed in Films from Studio of American Woman Film Company—Activities Start Here.

Here is a new film company. A new variety, and it is a rich one. It is a picture concern run by women.

The American Woman Film Company is its name, and it is financially backed almost entirely by wealthy literary society women of this locality, whose avowed intention it is to produce motion pictures of the highest moral and artistic tone.

J. Farrell Macdonald, ex-director-general of the Biograph Company, is to head the new firm and is to have full scope for the exercise of his talents and the working out of his artistic ideals. John McDonagh, former theatrical and newspaper man, will be Macdonald's co-director.

The studio is being prepared for action. It is on Gordon street, in Hollywood. It is reported that unlimited capital backs the concern, which is to do only ten-reel features.

Negotiations are under way with several well-known picture stars, who will begin work within the next two weeks. Details as to the names of the stars and the features to be made will be announced during the coming week.

Macdonald is one of the best known and most successful directors. His ideals are of the highest concerning the scope and possibilities of motion pictures, and as director-general of the new studio he will have ample opporunity to work out many plans and ideas in regard to the making of pictures.

Mrs. May Whitney Emerson, president of the company, is a writer of national reputation. The company has obtained the exclusive right to produce Mrs. Emerson's stories in motion pictures. The first one made will be "Saul of Tarsus," a Biblical setting, embodying the chief incidents of the Holy Writ narrative concerning the early life and conversion of the Apostle Paul. Mrs. Alice L. McCaldin, a prominent society woman of Pasadena, is vice-president of the company. Many other local society women of wealth are associated with the organization. J. C. Parker is secretary and general manager of the company and Paul F. Greer is general counsel.

Lucretia del Valle, star of John McGroarty's famous "Mission Play," who has won a national reputation through her acting in the role of the lovely Spanish senorita, has been engaged to play the leading feminine part in the forthcoming production. Arthur Maude has been engaged to play Saul. Among the other members of the cast are Mabel Van Buren, George McDaniel, P. C. Hartigan, Signor De la Cruz, James Warnack, Francis McDonald, Sidney Dean, Daniel Davis, Jane Starr, Edward Alexander and Roxanne Roth.

While stating that individually her plays do not exploit her philosophy, Mrs. Emerson in her office at 418 Van Nuys building said that underlying them all runs a continuous history of the present revolt of women and its meaning.

According to Mrs. Emerson, the revolt has been started by the universal motherhood of the feminine sex and its race obligation.

"Women have been absolute slaves to the will and standards of men," Mrs. Emerson said also. "It is against that and for a single standard of purity that they are fighting.

"The fight assumes many different aspects and women use different weapons, but all to the same end. When our company invades a new field of industry—in the picture line, for instance—and the suffragettes of New York struggle militantly for the vote, it means the same thing.

"The women of to-day are struggling for economic independence so that they may dictate who shall be the fathers of the future race.

"No wife whose husband supports her is free from bondage.

"When all women are free, and under a banner of single standard purity, refuse marriage for all men who do not march under that banner, the revolt will cease."

LAEMMLE PLANT HAS VISITORS

Busy Week at Universal City—Many Interested in Film Making.

A band from the state school at Whittier and four hundred delegates to the annual conference of the Social Agencies of California, which was being held in Los Angeles, marched into Universal City on Tuesday afternoon, May 2.

The visitors spent several hours at the big plant, where all of them, for the first time in their lives, had plenty of opportunity to see the making of the pictures, as many of the companies were busily engaged in filming scenes for their respective photoplays.

The western picture in which Harry Carey and Olive Golden play the leading roles and which was being directed by Jacques Jaccard especially interested the visitors, who were held spellbound by the amazing feats of the cowboys in the picture. At the zoo there was a special program of entertainment provided by Superintendent Rex de Rosselli, the chief feature of which was an act with a dozen lions, presented by Louis Futrelle, the fearless boy trainer.

Another day three justices of the California supreme court took judicial notice of the wonders of Universal City. Nothing was overlooked in the tour of the plant made by the members of the court, escorted personally by Charles Rankin, director of productions at Universal City.

The members of the supreme court were F. M. Angellotti, chief justice; M. C. Sloss and Henry Melvin, associate justices.

The party was taken over the various stages and watched the filming of scenes and then went to the zoo. Afterwards the party was photographed with Ruth Stonehouse, G. Raymond Nye, Eddie Polo and other players.

One hundred delegates to the nieteenth annual convocation of the Grand Court, Order of Amaranth, spent an afternoon recently at the film capital.

The Order of Amaranth is Masonic in character, and the convocation, which was held in Los Angeles, included members from all parts of California. The Amaranthans visited the various stages, the electric light studios and the Universal zoo, and left the city late in the afternoon, all delighted with the unusual entertainment that had been provided for them.

HOLDING UP HELEN

Railroad Officials Refuse to Allow Daring "Stunt" in "Hazards of Helen" Series.

What promised to be the most sensational and most daring "stunt" yet performed for the "Hazards of Helen" series was stopped this week by officials of the railroad company from which Kalem had rented a big engine, when a wrecking crew had to be called out to repair damages caused by a try-out of the feat.

Miss Helen Gibson, the daredevil Kalem girl, was supposed in the scene to climb hand over hand from a bar used ordinarily for shunting cars beside engines, which was to be suspended from a box car to a locomotive on parallel tracks.

After repeated warnings from the engineer that the stunt would wreck the engine and probably result in loss of life if performed, Miss Gibson persuaded her director and the engineer to "take a chance." When the bar was thrown from the engine to the runaway box car the tender jumped the track, tearing up rails, and Miss Gibson narrowly escaped being caught between the cars. It was at this juncture that officials of the road issued orders prohibiting the repetition of the scene. Miss Gibson later made a clear jump from the engine to the ladder of the box car, both trains travelling at a high rate of speed, and this scene will replace the one in the scenario calling for the use of the rod.

AMERICAN DOES BIG ONE.

Allegorical Picture with Two Hundred Performers Done Outdoors Draws Large Crowd.

An allegorical picture in which nearly two hundred performers took part was enacted Saturday afternoon of this week on the Underhill country estate in Montecito, near Santa Barbara. The occasion was the taking of the great outdoor scenes for the American Film Company's beautiful seven-reel picture, featuring Audrey Munson, the famed model, and written by Clifford Howard. There were nearly a hundred dancers in the picture and fully as many more extra people, all in Grecian costumes. Of the number, at last a hundred and fifty were girls. The outdoor picture on the shrub bordered lawn and down the avenue of trees giving an outlook to the ocean proved surpassingly beautiful.

Heightening the effect was the fringe of society people about the grounds, watching the shooting of the picture by Director Rea Berger and his camera men, they being in attendance at an afternoon card party given by Mr. and Mrs. Underhill at their magnificent country home.

The dance of the nymphs began far away at the ocean's edge, painting an exquisite pastoral scene backed by the sea and woods through the wooded avenue. It led up to the lawn, where a dance lasting nearly five minutes was enacted, the premier dancers being the characters of Evil and Pandora, portrayed by Miss Josephine Phillips as Pandora and Mons. Dumont as Evil.

Another outdoor picture on a huge scale will be taken on the grounds of another of the magnificent country homes in Montecito, but this filming will not be of the allegorical kind. It will be a modern, and in it Audrey Munson will pose as part of the statuary in the grounds. Notable among her life poses will be as "Descending Night," one of the famous figures seen at the San Francisco World's Fair, for which she originally posed.

SCREEN AND STAGE AID WAR ORPHANS

Brilliant Event to Benefit Battle Sufferers—Society Participates.

The children of Los Angeles
Come to you with a prayer upon their lips—
A prayer for sympathy and helpfulness
In behalf of the fatherless children of France.

This is the appeal that has gone forth from the Los Angeles branch of the Orphelinat des Armees, the society organized to assist in caring for the war orphans of the republic across the seas.

May 13 has been named as the date for a grand charity carnival, which will be held in the Italian gardens of Mrs. John P. Jones. On this occasion two thousand school children will assemble to contribute their mite toward the great humanitarian movement looking to the relief of suffering among their little brothers and sisters of France, and an earnest appeal has been sent out to all.

Incidentally, the youngsters will tender a reception to De Wolf Hopper, who will tell some of his funny stories, while Corporal Smith and Rose Parker are scheduled for an aeroplane flight in which they will drop valuable prizes from the sky.

Elaborate preparations already have been started which will convert the Jones garden into a veritable fairyland of Oriental splendor.

Mme. Alys Larreyne, prima donna from the Paris Grand Opera company, will sing an aria from Mignon. Charlotte Buisseret, violin virtuoso, assisted by Agnes Buisseret, will give one number. Then there will be Lillian and Dorothy Gish in a film production to be staged by the Griffith players. A full piece band will furnish the dance music.

JOHN BRENNAN "COMES BACK"

Famous Rotund Former Kalem Comedian Signs with Griffith and Will Shortly Be Seen in New Feature.

John E. Brennan, ex-legitimate comedian, film laugh-maker and director, has connected with the Triangle and will be welcomed on the screens of the country by thousands of admirers who remember him when he played with Ruth Roland some two years ago. Mr. Brennan has been off the screen for some months, and it was only on account of the large number of letters requesting his reappearance on the silent stage that he has returned to the film fold. He will be seen shortly in a new Griffith feature.

This spring Mr. Brennan, who has a cozy bungalow on the beach at Santa Monica, "the road race city," made a picture consisting of over a hundred scenes of exciting race incidents, the famous beach resort, canyon and the beautiful city.

The film will be first seen at Madison Square Garden in New York City. If the time expected is made the pictures will be shown there at the exposition. From New York the film will be started on its way about the country and will be thrown on the screen of picture houses in big and small cities and towns of every state in the union.

Several of the race scenes are thrilling, and include crowds massed about the race course, with drivers bunched and racing toward a curve.

Santa Monica canyon is shown with a moving picture battle in operation and the cameras trained on the actors. Several picturesque scenes in Topanga canyon add greatly to the picture.

An exhibition entertainment for city officials, newspaper men and the Santa Monica chamber of commerce is being arranged for next week with the second print that Mr. Brennan is now putting in shape.

We wish the old merrymaker the best of success!

Ince Adds to "Civilization."

Though "Civilization," the big cinema spectacle now showing at the Majestic, has been indorsed by the public to the extent of three capacity weeks, Thomas H. Ince ordered several changes and additions made to his masterpiece.

These were incorporated in "Civilization" Saturday night, some 2,500 feet in all. For the most part they are remarkable submarine battles, though the love theme of the story has been strengthened and there are some new departures in advanced photography in scenes where the Saviour returns to earth and houses His being in the dead Count Ferdinand.

Naturally it is the submarine on which all eyes are focussed. The pictures, it is said, are the real thing, taken with the permission of Uncle Sam, on some of his underwater sharks. They are shown on the water and under it, wireless messages from convoy cruisers are received beneath the water; how the mechanism is operated is graphically shown, torpedoes are launched on their mission of death, and later, when Count Ferdinand opens the sea cocks and scuttles the craft, one realizes just what happens when an enemy's shells find their mark and the war shark becomes a steel, water-filled coffin for a crew which hasn't a chance to escape.

These big scenes climax in the torpedoing of an ocean liner. In the "close-ups" one sees the women and children, non-combatants, and after one has marked the foamy trail of the death messenger comes the explosion which sends the iron leviathan to the bottom with its helpless human freight.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

W. H. Clune and Lloyd Brown returned last week from the east and have already taken preliminary steps to start a production on a big new multiple reel picture called "The Eyes of the World," from the story by Harold Bell Wright.

Mr. Brown and Director Donald Crisp will leave for Tucson, Arizona, some time this week to confer with Mr. Wright, who is in that city at the present time preparing the story for the screen.

A rehearsal of the mobs and dancers to take part in "Julius Caesar" at Beechwood Park Amphitheater took place on Thursday last week. Nearly five thousand persons were engaged under Director Raymond Wells and his assistants. In practice were immense mob and battle scenes. The great amphitheater is nearing completion and is so far advanced that full rehearsals may now be held.

Of the original 128 boxes that were placed on sale less than two weeks ago, only 30 are left. Many of the reservations are for more than one box and several for as many as four boxes.

Abe Stern, the well-known manager of the L-KO Motion Picture Company, and a brother-in-law of Carl Laemmle, has returned from Chicago with a bride. She was Miss Jessie Jacobs, of Milwaukee.

Miss Jacobs is a relative of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and the two met in Milwaukee about a year ago, when Mr. Stearn went there on business for Mr. Laemmle.

Five automobile loads of employes of the company accompanied by two automobiles filled with flowers and a moving picture camera met Mr. and Mrs. Stearn at the Salt Lake depot. After a parade through the business district the party returned to the studios of the company at Hollywood, where a reception was held. Mr. and Mrs. Stearn will make their home in Hollywood.

One of the most interesting automobile races ever held will be put on at the Ascot Speedway May 30. The affair is to be staged by the motion picture people of Southern California, the proceeds of the meet to go to the Actors' Fund.

The committee in charge consists of Charles Murray, Clarence Kolb, Ford Sterling, Fred Mace, Mack Sennett, Harry Gribben, Wallace Reid, Eddie Dillon, Jack Pickford, Lewis Cody, Thomas H. Ince, Pathe Lehrman, De Wolf Hopper, Douglas Fairbanks, William Collier, H. B. Warner, Theodore Roberts, W. Farnum, Dustin Farnum and H. Guy Woodward.

Mabel Normand, the popular Triangle star, was the guest of honor at the Pals Club last Saturday. She was welcomed by a host of Los Angeles friends, and a notable program had been arranged for the evening.

May Bush, the Keystone star, and "Guzzles," a black bear who was to take part in a parade being given last week in aid of Belgian relief fund, came to blows when posing for a picture, and the encounter resulted in Miss Bush having her dress torn from her.

"Guzzles" had been brought down to the headquarters of the relief fund in the Los Angeles Investment building to pose for his picture. Miss Bush happened to stroll into the building to view the prizes donated by the local merchants and which are to be distributed among the purchasers of tickets being sold in aid of the fund. "Guzzles" was not in the mood for having his picture taken, and in order to induce him to stay quiet long enough for the photographer to "shoot" him, Miss Bush volunteered to tempt him with a raw egg, a favorite dainty for bears, and so hold his interest while the picture man operated.

Bruin, however, became over anxious about the egg and made an unceremonious grab to get possession of it. The film star cuffed at him to remind him of his good manners and the bear retaliated by grabbing her dress and underskirt in his unmanicured claws and with the aid of his teeth ripped her garments from her. The Keystone press agent vouches for this story.

Jack Longman, formerly leading man with the Monrovia Film Company, has been engaged by the Nevada Film Company to play their leads. Jack lives up to his name. He is only 6 feet 4 inches and is the bane of the camera man's life. It takes about 20 feet distance to get him into the screen.

Bessie Barriscale, last week, received word of the passing of her father, Samuel Barriscale, of New York City. Mr. Barriscale succumbed to pneumonia following a brief illness and his demise is the second shock to be suffered by the beautiful actress within a year, her mother having passed away last May.

With a clear sky overhead, a warm sun and a delightfully cool breeze from the ocean, more than a hundred bathing girls from the motion picture studios of Los Angeles, all clad in the latest bathing creations, paraded last Sunday before a throng of more than fifty thousand people at the Santa Monica beach.

The first prize was unanimously awarded to Mabel Johnson, Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" girl, a typical mermaid in a creation of silver cloth.

During the past several months many exhibitors have been fined for failing to pay the tax on their theaters, and all on account of ignorance of the law, according to John B. Carter, Collector of Internal Revenue.

The law provides that the new proprietor of a motion picture theater must pay a new tax, no matter whether the man from whom he had purchased the establishment had paid his tax or not. The tax is according to the seating capacity; a theater having 250 seats must pay $25; 500 seats, $50; 500 to 800 seats, $75, and more than 800 seats, $100 a year. Unless the purchaser of a motion picture theater pays a new tax the month when he takes over his theater, he will be fined an additional 50 per cent.

The Police Department, this week, received instructions from the chief of police at Thompsonville, Conn., to detain two young girls, Agnes Curkery, nineteen years old, and Marcella Leete, sixteen years old, who are supposed to be en route to Los Angeles in search of the moving picture heroes with whom they fell in love while watching a silent drama in the Thompsonville town hall about a week ago.

It is the belief of the relatives of the girls that the moving pictures so worked upon their imaginations that they have tried to make the long trip across the continent.

Raymond B. West, the young director of the Thomas H. Ince forces, will shortly undertake an extended tour of the Orient.

Mr. West has now almost completed the Triangle Kay-Bee feature in which Bessie Barriscale is being starred. He has been working incessantly for eighteen months at the Ince studios and looks forward with anticipatory pleasure to pack his trunks and leave for Honolulu and the strange countries of the Far East.

H. B. Warner returned to Inceville this week after a brief sojourn at Coronado Beach and is now at work on a new Triangle Kay-Bee feature in which he will be starred.

J. G. Hawks wrote the story, which takes place in the San Francisco underworld. Dorothy Walton plays the lead opposite, while the remainder of the cast includes George Fisher, J. Barney Sherry, Roy Laidlaw and Louise Brownell.

A large force of workmen this week went to work on the construction of two more buildings at the new Ince plant at Culver City. One of the structures is to be a laboratory and the other a garage, and both will be similar in architectural design to the other studio buildings.

Producer Ince is building a magnificent summer home at Inceville, and work on this construction is being rushed in hope that it may be ready for occupancy in time for the hot season. The mansion is being erected far back in one of the Inceville canyons, yet will be near enough to the shore to provide the Ince family with the conveniences both of a mountain and beach resort.

A large company of Ince players under the direction of Walter Edwards went to Calexico on the Mexican border last week to film some scenes for a current Triangle Kay-Bee feature in which Enid Markey and William Desmond are being starred.

Mae Marsh and Bobby Harron with a company of twenty-five Fine Arts players motored last week to Santa Barbara where Director Paul Powell staged a number of dramatic scenes. The play being filmed is a comedy drama of Irish peasant life and was written by Granville Warwick. Many novel touches and artistic settings are introduced by Director Powell in this quaint Irish drama. John Leezer is the photographer.

Director Allan Dwan returned this week from a location tour preparing to picturize Bret Harte's popular California novel, "In the Carquinez Woods." Upon his return to the studio Mr. Dwan's automobile registered over a thousand miles, which covers the distance he travelled in quest of big trees and rugged settings. He visited within a hundred miles of San Francisco, Santa Cruz, Sequoia National Park and the Yosemite Valley. In some of the big woods the Fine Arts director discovered trees from 150 to 300 feet in height with a diameter from 11 to 35 feet.

Douglas Fairbanks will play the lead in this new Triangle production, and the supporting cast will include San de Grasse, George Beranger, Alma Ruben, Tom Wilson, Art Rosson and Frank Brownlee.

Seena Owen writes from Colorado, where she is spending her vacation, that she is feeling fine and has had a splendid time climbing mountains and taking hikes. The popular Fine Arts actress is expected to return to the Hollywood studios within a short time.

De Wolf Hopper returned this week from a flying trip to San Francisco, having motored up to attend the Press Club celebration at the Tivoli. His high powered chauffeur burned up the road and made the trip in the record time of 13½ hours. The next time he goes, however, he will wear a sunshade or something to keep off the sunburn. "When I reached San Francisco," said Hopper, "my face was perfectly gorgeous. Why, a broiled lobster looked pale beside me."

Courtaney Foote has joined the Selig Company and will play leads opposite Kathlyn Williams in some coming big feature productions. Mr. Foote's last connection was with the Morosco Company.

Universal Director Linn Reynolds has finished "His Date in Honolulu," with Myrtle Gonzales and a stock cast. It is for Fourth of July release.

He is now completing "The Deacon's Demise" with the same players. It is a five reeler, modern southern picture, with the Imperial Valley for cotton fields and Bear Valley for Carolina woods.

Preparedness is a watchword with the Signal studio, and in order to supply the buildings of the studios with a more adequate fire protection they this week secured permission from the city of Los Angeles to lay a private line of four-inch pipes from the city's water mains to all parts of the studio grounds. A consignment of several hundred feet of pipe has been received and a crew of workmen are busy at work digging the ditches and laying the line to the street mains.

William F. Russell has added a fancy roadster to his corral garage at Santa Barbara. The new car is white with red leather upholstery and fittings and is equipped with electric cigar cutter and lighter, a humidor and a make-up box. Though the car has been his now for all of two weeks, Mr. Russell has seen it but once, and then but long enough to drive it from its salesroom to his ranch; immediately thereafter he left with his company of American Film players for Bear Valley, thence to San Diego for the Photoplayers' Ball and Day at the exposition. He will spend two early days at Santa Barbara and then return to Los Angeles to take care of some business matters.

Jay Hunt, director of note with Big "U," has taken a comcompany to Eureka, in the northern part of California, to film two and perhaps three lumber camp and mountain photoplays. The first one to be produced is entitled "The Trail of Honor," and will be made in what is probably the largest lumber camp in the world. Miss Lucille Young will play the leading role in two of the stories with Jack Holt. Hunt will be away several weeks. Mr. Holt, who is a "comer" at this plant, is admirably fitted to play this part, as he has lived out doors all his life, having been in Alaska and the great northwest for many years.

That crack scenario editors and writers need experience to land them at the top was shown here this week, when Director Henry McRae was at his wit's end to get an actor to play the leading role in "The Jockey's Triumph," because it required a man who could ride a race horse and also be an actor.

So he appealed to Dr. H. O. Stafford, head of the scenario deparement of Universal City, and after some persuasion the latter agreed to play the part.

In his younger days Dr. Stafford was a noted jockey, riding under the name of Harry Blake, and was among the first of the American boys to ride abroad.

Later he studied medicine, served as assistant surgeon in the United States navy and, failing in health, took up scenario writing.

McRae highly complimented him upon his acting of the part, not to speak of his riding in the race scenes.

Another automobile accident, though not as serious as the previous recorded, happened at Long Beach this week.

Henry Stanley, leading man of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, sustained a dislocated shoulder and a double fracture of the shoulder blade; Bob Gray, a fellow actor, received painful bruises about the body, a deep scalp wound and a sprained and bruised knee, when a touring car driven by Director Harry Harvey of the Balboa Company dashed into a party of actors talking in front of the studios, at the corner of Sixth and Alamitos, Long Beach, one day this week.

Stanley and Gray were rushed to the offices of a local physician, where first aid measures were given. It was found that the dislocation of Stanley's shoulder could not be reduced and it became imperative that the elderly character impersonator be removed to the Long Branch Sanitarium.

According to the story told by passerby, who saw the auto, the two injured men were talking on the street with a friend when Harvey's car, a powerful touring auto, dashed up the street. Slowing down for a stop, the machine suddenly lurched forward striking the party on the street.

Harvey stated that he had slowed down the car and attempted to apply the brakes. Stepping on the pedal which he thought would apply the brakes, he opened the accelerator which sent the car forward with a rush. Before the momentum could be checked the machine struck the party.

James Young, the Lasky director, we are informed will take charge of the Mabel Normand company and direct her plays for the Triangle.

Anita King, the Lasky-Paramount star, spoke at the regular monthly meeting of the Ad Club at the Hotel Clark one day last week on her work as a City Mother.

Miss King spoke most feelingly of the young girls who are lured to the city by lying advertisements of firms which promise, for $10 or $15, to find work for them in the motion pictures, when such firms have absolutely no power or intention of keeping their promises. Miss King said that papers of the middle west printed such advertisements.

The matter was referred to a special committee for investigation, and a further resolution was adopted providing that the matter be taken up at the convention of the National Ad Club to be held in Baltimore in July.

Rita Jolivet has arrived at the Morosco Photoplay studio and is appearing in the film version of George Broadhurst's play, "The International Marriage," with Frank Lloyd directing.

Page Peters, who is Morosco's star heavy man in films, was held up the other night while returning from the beach in his car. Mr. Peters, with a party, had attended a dance at the beach and was returning to his home in the city when a small machine with three men drew up alongside of the big car, and one of the trio yelled across for Page to hold up his hands as soon as he coud stop the car. By strategy, he turned the tables on the robbers, for he instantly shot at the machine with his automatic and sped away from them, leaving them far behind. However the party was scared, but glad to escape.

The only productions to approach that of "Julius Caesar," in Beachwood Canyon, on May 19, in magnitude or artistic purpose were the "Oedipus Rex of Reinhart," and the "Joan of Arc" of Maude Adams in the Harvard stadium. "Oedipus Rex," one of the earliest of the dramas and still used as a model by students of today, was produced in London before some 30,000 people and was accounted the greatest of spectacles up to that time. "Joan of Arc" attracted many thousand people to the Harvard stadium.

The Hollywood performance will employ in all some 5,000 people. A conservative estimate of the crowd that will both see and hear "Julius Caesar" is 40,000 and the artistry and scope of the drama-spectacle will do much to place California at the head of the world in outdoor dramatic production.

The seat sale so far has been surprisingly large. Thousands of seats and a large number of boxes have been sold and the performance is still three weeks away.

The big amphitheater is the scene of constant hustle and bustle. Sets are going up fast and the seats are being built by the thousand. Where rehearsals formerly occurred only two or three times a week, every night and some afternoons now find members of the cast and the great army hard at work. The production gives evidence of exceeding all expectations.

"Smiling Billy Mason" and Peggy Coudray were both injured last week at Universal City when making a leap from a brick wall in the filming of a scene in "Baseball Bill." Mason landed on a stone and smashed his heel pretty badly. Miss Coudray was no more fortunate and is now on crutches nursing a torn legiment in her ankle. The director is able to go on with his work, but his leading lady is laid up for repairs.

Kalem's June Plans

Month Will See Release of Four More "Social Pirates" Episodes—Sis Hopkins Continues Strong.

FOUR reels a week on the regular General Film programme and the special two-reel release, "The Social Pirates" will be the Kalem output for the month of June. The "Social Pirates" releases will bring that series within one week of closing, July 3 seeing the release of the fifteenth episode of the George Bronson Howard productions.

Scene from "The Disappearance of Helen" (Kalem).

"The Fangs of the Tattler" is the first July release in "The Social Pirates," scheduled for July 5. A blackmailing society newspaper is the center of interest in the two reels of tense drama which finds Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby as the heroines of the series, bringing its wealthy backer to justice.

Printing office scenes in screen dramas are notoriously lacking in realism, so for the press room scenes in "The Fangs of the Tattler" showing the home of the "Tattler" Director Horne took no chances on building a stage set but converted a printing plant at Glendale into a studio by the use of portable lights.

Following "The Fangs of the Tattler" Monday, June 12, will see the release of "The Disappearance of Helen Minter," twelfth episode in the series. A shyster "beauty parlor," of the type that police authorities throughout the country are devoting more and more attention to is the particular evil that calls for the girls' attentions in this episode.

Unusual marine scenes are supplied in "In the Service of the State," released on June 19. One of the most novel plots of the series which has been characterized by originality throughout, is presented in "In the Service of the State," which finds Mona and Mary embarked on a diplomatic mission. The fourteenth episode of the fifteenth week series, "The Music Swindlers," is the final June release on Monday, June 26th.

The Sis Hopkins comedies continue to be among the strongest releases on the Kalem schedule. Included in the coming issues are "A Baby Grand," on Friday, May 26, "Sis, the Detective," on Friday, June 2, and "Juggling Justice," scheduled for June 9. Sis runs the range of occupations from maid to sleuth, to justice of the peace, in this trio of offerings.

A single reel release every week of the Ham comedies, Ethel Teare comedies and "Hazards of Helen" complete the Kalem list.

Serial Program to Cost $5,000,000

During the Next Twelve Months Pathe Will Release Seven Continued Stories.

PLANS for a $5,000,000 motion picture serial program have been announced by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Pathe will release at least seven picture serials between May of this year and May, 1917.

"The continued motion picture is the serial literature of the screen," Mr. Berst said. "There always will be continued stories in the newspapers and the magazines, and there always will be continued stories on the screen. The motion picture serial has come to stay. The public demands this form of screen entertainment."

Newspaper advertising will be the backbone of Pathe's serial campaigns. Pathe has contracted for the services of a number of authors of national prominence. Among those now actively engaged in connection with future serials are Louis Tracy, Randall Parrish, Albert Payson Terhune and Mrs. Wilson Woodrow.

Mr. Tracy is an English author. His "Wings of the Morning" placed him in the front rank of present day novelists. He is in Florida now rushing to completion a photo novel that is said to have an unusual and powerful theme. Arrangements for the syndication of this story are now being made with leading newspapers in all of the important cities of the country. Balboa is producing the pictures under the direction of W. A. S. Douglas, of the Pathe organization. The advertising arrangements are in the hands of G. A. Smith, serial publicity manager.

For release later in the year Pathe is producing a serial story by Randall Parrish that suggests a present day "Monte Cristo." This serial is under the direction of Louis J. Gasnier, one of the foremost producers of the country. Mr. Gasnier recently returned from Havana where some of the scenes were laid.

Mr. Terhune, who novelized "The Red Circle," a recent Pathe serial release, is under contract for a new series of stories. Mrs. Wilson Woodrow is the talented authoress of "Who's Guilty?" a novel-a-week picture series released May 8.

Pathe has been so successful in the serial field that the company is now called "The House of Serials." Among its successes have been "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," "Who Pays?" "Neal of the Navy," "The Red Circle," and "The Iron Claw." Variety in material and treatment has always characterized Pathe's continued stories.

Selig Sport Series

Unique Film Series of Famous Athletic Stars to Come Through V-L-S-E.

REALIZING there is a big market in smaller cities and towns for a series of athletic films in single reels, the Selig Polyscope Company has announced its intention of releasing these pictures, showing the world's greatest stars in all fields of athletic endeavor, through the V-L-S-E organization. The first reel will be shown to exhibitors in the various territories, so they can see for themselves the drawing power of these pictures, which include the athletic heroes in action in every branch of legitimate sport known to the public.

The first release of the Athletic and Feature Film Service Series will show Mike Gibbons, champion of all middleweight boxers, in a glove contest that will prove a revelation to lovers of the fistic arena. In addition, Gibbons shows the methods he uses to condition himself for his ring battles.

The next event is a billiard contest between Koji Yamada, the Japanese exponent of the cue, and Albert Cutler, the Yankee champion, of Boston. In addition to the billiard match each expert presents a number of marvelous exhibition shots.

The final event in the first release of the Athletic Films is a wrestling match to a finish between Dr. B. F. Roller, one of the greatest of wrestlers, and Frank Dalkus, the Lithuanian champion. Every move can be plainly seen from the time these two famous wrestlers enter the ring until the referee declares Roller the winner.

J. H. Herman, manager of the Selig Athletic Feature Film department, in conjunction with Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer, are responsible for the development of this unusual film series. It is their plan to film every leading sporting star in action and exhibit the series in their chain of vaudeville houses, among which is listed the famous McVicker's theater of Chicago.

WIL REX DIES SUDDENLY.

Wil Rex died suddenly at his home on April 12th of septic spinal meningitis. The end came unexpectedly, as he had been sick but two weeks and was on the road to recovery. He was but twenty-four years of age, and had built up an enviable reputation as an actor, author and director. He began his career at an early age in moving pictures, and is a graduate of Stevens College. He attracted considerable attention in 1915, when he appeared with Al Ray, his most intimate friend and chum, in "The Adventures of Smaltz and Fish." Rex played the character of Mr. Fish. He received considerable praise for his work by the various trade and film magazines, but he retired from actual work on the screen when he fell down a flight of stairs in one of Ray's comedies and landed on his face, breaking his nose in three places and damaging his face considerably. He then began to direct dramas for the Associated, and his pictures were praised as highly as his acting. His health began to fail shortly afterward, and he gave up directing to write scenarios and magazine articles, and became associate editor of Picture Play Magazine, where he remained in that capacity until two weeks before his death.

Deposit of Copyright Reels

Favorable Report on Bill to Ask Only Selected Prints and Description.

THE House Committee of Patents has rendered a favorable report on a bill which would relieve motion picture film manufacturers of the necessity of filing two copies of each completed work in the copyright office in order to avail themselves of the protection of the copyright law. This requirement of the law has imposed a burdensome obligation upon the manufacturers, the committee states, which was not intended. The complete reels are very expensive and they are practically of no greater value for the identification of the motion picture in which copyright is claimed than the selected prints together with the title and description required by the law to be deposited in the case of a motion picture. The deposit of the complete reels is of no service to the Copyright Office, and these articles are of no value in the Library of Congress, and by reason of their inflammable character are dangerous, and their deposit only imposes an added burden upon the Copyright Office to no purpose. Motion picture manufacturers have expressed approval of the purpose of the bill and it is the opinion of the committee that it should become a law.

WINCHESTER WITH PATHE.

Following closely on the announcement that J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, had engaged C. R. Seelye, comes word that Tarleton Winchester, for the last year and a half advertising and publicity director of Paramount, has also joined Pathe. The first work Mr. Winchester will take up will be the publication of a weekly house organ for Pathe employees along lines already approved and from which the entire organization expects to derive most beneficial results.

Coming to New York three years ago, Mr. Winchester attracted attention by his reviews and articles in the Morning Telegraph. By standing always for dignity and never for "circus methods," he helped in no small degree in stimulating the high regard in which Paramount is held and by holding himself always ready to serve the editor and the exhibitor, he made a host of friends for his company throughout the country.

A Week of Vitagraphs

Entertaining Program of Comedies and Dramas Promised for Week of May 22.

FOR the week of May 22 Vitagraph promises an entertaining program of comedies and dramas. The six-a Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Suspect," and "The Primal Instinct," a three-part Broadway Star Feature, furnish the drama, while in "Kernel Nutt Wins a Wife," "The Cost of High Living" and "The Battler" are found three reels of high class comedy.

In "The Suspect" Anita Stewart portrays the part of a young girl, who, after her father's murder by the Russian Government, vows to devote her life to avenging his death. After many tragic experiences, she meets an English nobleman and true love overshadows the hatred in her heart. S. Rankin Drew, Anders Randolf, Bobby Connelly, Edward Elkas, George Cooper and Julia Swayne Gordon are seen in Miss Stewart's support. The story was adopted from H. J. Dam's book, "The Silver Shell," and produced by S. Rankin Drew.

Frank Daniels in "Kernel Nutt Wins a Wife" is seen as the proprietor of a matrimonial agency. Much to his chagrin, he is forced to marry one of his clients, a "cold storage chicken." Alice Washburn and Adele De Garde support Mr. Daniels. C. Jay Williams is responsible for the production.

"The Cost of High Living" tells the story of a college boy who is fond of the high life until his father gets him interested in a pretty girl and things seem to take on a different aspect. William Duncan, Corinne Griffith, Carmen Phillips and Anne Schaefer are seen in this pleasing comedy. Joseph F. Poland wrote the story and William Wolbert supervised the action.

When they wrote "The Battler," C. Graham Baker and Lawrence Semon gave us something different. Hughie Mack, in the title role, introduces a new form in the manly art of self defense. When he is pitted against a champion, he uses the "gas bomb wallop" with wonderful effect. The things that follow at the fight club are too funny to be related. Lawrence Semon produced this comedy.

Leah Baird shows to excellent advantage in a sympathetic role in "The Primal Instinct." Miss Baird takes the part of a rich young heiress, whom an unscrupulous lawyer tries to estrange from her husband for selfish purposes. When her fidelity is wavering, her child is born and she realizes that she really loves its father. Don Cameron and Van Dyke Brooke are also seen in this Broadway Star production. The filming was directed by Van Dyke Brooke.

Late May Releases on Triangle Service

William S. Hart in "The Primal Lure," Mae Marsh in "A Child of Paris Streets," and a DeWolf Hopper Subject.

WILLIAM S. HART'S last appearance in Western character for some time, and the second appearance of Mae Marsh on the Triangle screen, are the features of the late May releases of the Griffith-Ince-Sennett combination of producers. Hart's "The Primal Lure," shown at the Rialto theater in New York week of May 7, and "A Child of the Paris Streets," with Miss Marsh and Robert Harron, are the dramatic releases of the week of May 21. Although placed in the Canadian Northwest, "The Primal Lure" gives Hart the role of a hard-headed Scot in charge of an isolated post of the Hudson Bay Company. Margery Wilson, last seen with Douglas Fairbanks in "Double Trouble," has the leading feminine role. A thrilling fight beneath the surface of a mountain stream is one of the spectacular features of this Ince picture.

In "A Child of the Paris Streets" Mae Marsh shows her ability to make an unaccustomed role her own. She is the cleverest thief in Paris, but her blood surmounts her environment and she flees from the Apache band and takes refuge in the studio of a young American artist, whom she has met in the Latin Quarter. How she is dragged back to the den of her former associates to be strangled as a traitor, her rescue and restoration to her father, is told in a dramatic and spectacular film. Tully Marshall heads a strong supporting company of Griffith players.

For month-end entertainment the Triangle has combined the third DeWolf Hopper picture and the third H. B. Warner drama. The comedian is "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan," and the matinee idol has the role of an earnest young minister with a protest against the indifference of the rich to the teachings of the gospel. Clara Williams, Gertrude Claire and Charles Miller are active in the star's support. Ince calls the play "The Market of Vain Desire." Hopper has Fay Tincher and his familiar cast in the lighter vehicle.

HARRY BROWN IN WESTERN ROLE.

Harry Brown, the distinguished dramatic actor, has been engaged by Metro to play the role of the big Westerner in "The Flower of No Man's Land," in which Viola Dana will make her debut on the Metro program. Mr. Brown met Miss Dana on the studio floor for the first time in several years when he was called for the first rehearsal. He played the "heavy" with Miss Dana three years ago in the noted stage production of "The Poor Little Rich Girl." Mr. Brown, in addition to his studio work, is appearing in a prominent role in "The House of Glass," the successful Broadway play.

Dixon Moves Company

Executive Organization Rapidly Transferred from Los Angeles to New York—Personnel of the National Drama Corporation.

WITHIN the last week the big executive organization of the National Drama Corporation, producers of "The Fall of a Nation," has moved from Los Angeles to New York, preparatory to a country-wide exploitation campaign beginning with the opening presentation of the Dixon-Herbert grand opera cinema here. The officers of the corporation are P. D. Gold, Jr., president; William R. Perkins, vice-president; Thomas Dixon, director-general and treasurer; William A. White, secretary; T. A. Campbell, assistant secretary; Bartley Cushing, head producing director; William C. Thompson and John W. Boyle, head photographers; Harold Sanford, conductor and assistant to Victor Herbert.

Messrs. Gold, Cushing and Boyle arrived in New York May 10 and plunged into the many details of getting the Broadway production ready. A suite of offices at 720 Longacre Building, had already been actively in use a fortnight, but a new impetus was given to the work by their arrival. A dozen trained executives are on the job in as many departments, so results are rapidly being achieved that would be impossible with a less expert body.

President Gold is of the newer type of alert efficiency in "Big Business." He is a native of North Carolina, where he was graduated at the university and later read law at Richmond College, Virginia. At the age of 34 he founded the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company of Raleigh, N. C., and put it in the front rank of such organizations. Of recent years he has been prominent in Wall Street. Thus, when the National Drama Corporation was started a year ago, Mr. Gold interested financially in the enterprise men of large capital who were attracted not only by the motion picture field as such, but even more by the possibilities it presented of furthering the great national cause of military preparedness. For the last eight months the chief executive of the company has been in California supervising the vast expenditures of the Dixon studios and laboratory and "The Fall of a Nation" filming.

Vice-President Perkins and Secretary White are both men of large interests in the New York downtown district. The former is legal counsel of a great corporation, the name of which has often been mentioned in connection with the rumors of proposed film mergers.

Although best known as the famed author of "The Birth of a Nation," and of many highly successful books and plays, Director-General Dixon has been actively identified with theatrical management for the last decade and with film enterprise for several years past. Bartley Cushing was the chief of six technical directors in the studio and on the field. On the legitimate side, before entering film work, Mr. Cushing staged several of the Dixon dramas and, as director for Henry W. Savage, put on the memorable production of "Everywoman" at the Drury Lane theater, London. Harold Sanford is one of the few native-born American musicians of the first quality, and in his association for many years with Victor Herbert, has won gold opinions. He returned from Los Angeles after two months of rehearsal work with orchestra in the projection room. As a result, the Victor Herbert "Fall of a Nation" music is now finally revised and in practice by the sixty musicians of the Herbert grand orchestra.

John W. Boyle and William C. Thompson shared the heavier photographic labors of the filmed spectacle. Mr. Boyle is now in New York for the purpose of supervising the initial Broadway screening, while Mr. Thompson, remaining in Los Angeles, will take charge of the technical side of the Auditorium opening there and will continue to manage the Dixon laboratory. The laboratory, now open to commercial work, is one of the finest in the country. It has the capacity of printing and developing 500,000 feet of film a week. Mr. Thompson, its manager, is a scientific graduate of Columbia University and a member of the American Chemical Society. In the smaller experimental laboratory, which Director Dixon provided for the scientist's research work, Mr. Thompson is said to have achieved some striking new art-processes and results which will be publicly exhibited for the first time in "The Fall of a Nation."

BILLIE BURKE PICTURE AT GLOBE.

The widely heralded Billie Burke serial picture, "Gloria's Romance," in process of filming at the George Kleine studios for the past six months, will have its New York opening at the Globe theater May 22. This is the official announcement of the Kleine studios, following negotiations between the producer, George Kleine, and Charles Dillingham. Contracts were signed recently.

World "Warm Weather" Plans

No Let-up on Producing Activities During the Hot Weather Months.

THERE will be no diminishing activities at the World Film Studios during the forthcoming hot months. William A. Brady, who returned from a short trip this week, has completed the business of assignment and for the months of June, July, August and September, has scheduled twenty elaborate photo-dramas of the new-day type. World's greatest stars and stories are to characterize the warm sum months.

Robert Warwick, under the guidance of Chautard, is at work on "Friday the 13th." The work on this production will carry both star and director into June, when another highly important fictional document will be started. Thomas W. Lawson is responsible for the vehicle, "Friday the 13th," and it is thought Mr. Lawson can be prevailed upon to create another story for Warwick.

Alice Brady has completed "La Boheme," and is at work on "Her Majesty," which will be seen on the regular program about August 1. Miss Brady and her supporting players will give a private showing of "La Boheme" to a number of Metropolitan Opera singers some night next week. Her appearance in "La Boheme" was at the suggestion of either Caruso or Cavaleri that she appear in "La Boheme" and the picture is so promising, it will be shown now to the opera stars.

Holbrook Blinn is at work on "The Weakness of Man," and has just completed "The Way of the World," in which he is supported by an all World star cast.

Kitty Gordon, preparatory to her branching out under the World trade mark in Kitty Gordon features, will be seen on the regular program June 12 in "The Crucial Test," and Mollie King, the little sunbeam of World Film, will star in "Fate's Boomerang," May 29.

Ethel Clayton will make her first appearance on the World Program in a co-starring vehicle with Carlyle Blackwell, "His Brother's Wife," a stirring five-act drama, which comes on the summer program June 5.

Thereafter, Clara Kimball Young, the famous World star, will be seen in "The Story of Susan," an ambitious vehicle, amply befitting the importance of Miss Young, to be followed by Alice Brady in "Her Majesty." Gail Kane in "The Other Sister" will be offered July 10, and House Peters and Gail Kane will be seen together during the early summer months in "The Velvet Paw."

Muriel Ostriche, Carlyle Blackwell, Frances Nelson, Robert Warwick, Holbrook Blinn, Kitty Gordon, Alice Brady, Mollie King and all the other World stars will be seen at least twice during the hot months, which more than demonstrates General Manager Brady's intentions to maintain his standard during the dull season.

Ivy Close in Comedy

Kalem Makes Announcement Concerning Plans for English Beauty and Star.

IVY CLOSE, the famous English star and beauty, who arrives in this country May 22d on the St. Louis, to take up screen work with Kalem, will be presented in one-reel comedies. That was the gist of a statement made by William Wright, of the Kalem Company, last week to a World representative in response to a request for further information concerning the company's plans in presenting the prominent star.

"Critics in England and on the continent have been lavish in their praise of Miss Close for her work in both drama and comedy on the stage," declared Mr. Wright, "but her beauty and deft artistry make her unusually well suited to the type of refined comedy now demanded by exhibitors.

"The subjects will be written especially for Miss Close around the talents which have made her a favorite comedienne in Paris and London. While it is perhaps early to be making promises I feel certain that we can hold out to exhibitors the assurance of a type new and distinctive in refined screen comedy.

"Miss Close will probably take a few weeks of rest and sight-seeing after her arrival next week. Meanwhile, as I have said, we are making extensive preparations for her screen vehicles. We are not quite ready to announce the names of the players who will be seen in her support, but from the arrangements already made, I believe we may hold out promise of a few welcome surprises in this regard also."

General Film Program

Provides Unusual Features for the Week of May 22—Pictures With a Punch.

GENERAL Film Company's information department lays more than ordinary stress on the importance, strength and variety of General Film Service for the week beginning May 22. Each picture, the department says, carries the needed punch.

The week will have an auspicious start Monday with Selig's three-reel production, "The Test of Chivalry," featuring Fritzi Brunette. This versatile Selig star has in "The Test of Chivalry" a role that gives her every opportunity to display her acknowledged ability and she makes the most of it. As the title implies, "The Test of Chivalry," is based upon a love story. Supporting Miss Brunette are Vivian Reed, Edward J. Piel, James Bradbury, William Scott, Frank Clark and Lillian Hayward.

A Vitagraph comedy, "The Cost of High Living," furnishes an unusually strong feature, while "The Mistake," a Biograph drama, helps mightily to round out a strong program for the day. A Lubin comedy, "Otto the Hero," gives a finishing touch to the day's releases, all of which are bulwarked by the Selig-Tribune News Service.

Edison's "The Coward's Code" will be shown Tuesday and word from the Edison studio in Bedford Park states that they consider it one of their strongest three-reel features. Essanay offers on that day an all-star drama, while Biograph and Kalem provide the comedies, the former in "Whose Looney Now?" and the latter in "Ham's Busy Day."

Kalem, on Wednesday, releases "The Bogus Ghost," a comedy. Essanay a feature, and Edison provides "The Cecropia Moth" and "Tom the Tamer and Kid Kelly."

Lubin, Selig and Vim will get the spot light Thursday, Lubin presenting "Prisoners of Conscience," a three-reel drama; Vim offering "Baby Doll," a comedy, and the Selig-Tribune News Service will round out the day's releases.

"The Flirting Bride," a Knickerbocker Star Feature production; "A Baby Grand," a Kalem "Sis Hopkins" comedy series; "The Battler," by Vitagraph, and "Villains and Violins," by Vim, should keep patrons in good humor Friday.

Essanay heads the list Saturday with a feature; Lubin is second with a comedy, "Oh, You Uncle!"; Vitagraph provides "The Primal Instinct," in three parts, and Selig will present the original cowboy film artist, Tom Mix, in "A Five Thousand Dollar Elopement," and Kalem will offer "The Capture of Red Stanley," an episode in the "Hazards of Helen."

Selig General Film Releases

Policy of Playing Stars in Short Length Subjects Meets With Favor.

IN THIS day and age when many of the leading motion picture stars appear only in feature film productions of five reels or more in length, the Selig Polyscope Company calls attention to the fact that many of the most popular and widely known stars have been exploited in Selig one, two and three-reel productions released through General Film Service.

That Mr. Selig's policy to exploit his highest-salaried and most versatile star players in shorter length films, as well as in the longer feature productions, is an action appreciated by the public, is proved by the great strides the Selig General Film releases have taken within the past six months. The Selig Company asserts that their business through General Film Service has trebled within the past few months and, judging from the compliments received from exhibitors, the Selig releases will set a still greater pace. Among the stars now appearing regularly in Selig productions, released through General Film, as well as in the Selig Red Seal Plays, can be named: Kathlyn Williams, Bessie Eyton, Thomas Santschi, Tyrone Power, Otis Harlan, Edith Johnson, Eugenie Besserer, Tom Mix, Vivian Reed, Jack Pickford, James Bradbury, Harry Mestayer, Guy Oliver, Fritzi Brunette and others.

Among the forthcoming Selig releases through General Film, which are calculated to make filmland sit up and take notice can be named: "A Temperance Town," featuring Otis Harlan and an all-star cast. "A Temperance Town" could well be released as a five-reel Selig Red Seal Play, but the action and plot has been presented in three reels and there is not an inch of padding nor a dull moment.

Another Selig release through General Film Service will be an elaborate and spectacular revival of "The Two Orphans." This wonderful production will be released through General Film Service on Monday, June 12. The production is in three reels and for the first time in motion pictures presents what is really and truly an all-star cast. The stars include T. J. Carrigan, Kathlyn Williams, Winnefred Greenwood, Myrtle Stedman, Charles Clary, Lillian Brown Leighton, Adrienne Kroll and others. Very seldom, possiby never before on the screen, has such a collection of talent been gathered together in one production.

A year ago, Mr. Selig asserted that the best one, two and three-reel pictureplays were none to good for the public. He proceeded to bend every endeavor to make his shorter length films noteworthy. The result is being proved a success.

General Film to Release Features

Five-Reel Subjects Presenting Notable Stars Will Be Added to An Already Strong Program.

A DEPARTURE in General Film Service will be inaugurated by the release May 21, of the Knickerbocker Star Feature, "Spellbound," in five reels. Heretofore the Service has been confined to releases of lesser lengths.

The General Film Company has chosen "Spellbound" as the vehicle with which to launch this latest addition to its service, inasmuch as Lois Meredith, star in the picture, is conceded to be one of the accomplished film artists of the day.

May 31, the Biograph five-reel feature, "The Woman in Black," will be offered and in the cast will be found these old favorites in the Biograph Service: Mrs. A. C. Marston, Marie Newton, Elizabeth Eldridge, Millicent Evans, Alan Hale, Charles Mailes, Lionel Barrymore, Hector Sarno, Frank Evans, Jacques Matation, Will Jefferson and J. Droumier.

It is planned to release a five-reel feature every two weeks hereafter.

Forest Fire Pictures

Vitagraph Taking Motion Picture Scenes for Pennsylvania State Forest Bureau.

DIRECTOR William P. S. Earle, of the Vitagraph Company, and his camera man, Clark R. Nickerson, are at Mont Alto, Penn., filming scenes showing the old and new methods of forest fire fighting. There will be two full reels made to assist the Pennsylvania State Foresty Bureau in their campaign for the collection of the necessary amount of money required to improve the present conditions. One part will show the system in vogue now, the old style way and means of carrying out their work and the others will present the advantage of the new and improved methods.

In taking these photoplays Mr. Earle has the assistance and co-operation of the Pennsylvania Forest Rangers and School of Foresty. The reels promise to be two of the most interesting ever shown on the screen, not only for the Forestry Bureau's purpose, but to motion picture audiences in general. This is another example of the usefulness of the picture in assisting in State and Government affairs.

THREE NEW PLAYERS FOR MOROSCO.

The Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company has engaged three new additions to its roster in the persons of Juan de la Cruz, Katherine Griffith and Colin Chase who are now appearing in forthcoming releases for the Paramount Program.

Juan de la Cruz has appeared under the Morosco banner before in "Peer Gynt," and for Pallas Pictures in "The Gentleman from Indiana." Katherine Griffith, who appeared with particular success in "The Heart of Maryland" with Mrs. Leslie Carter, has played in stock, vaudeville, musical comedy and in dramatic productions. In Morosco productions she will appear in heavy character parts. Colin Chase has appeared in leading parts for Essanay, American, Eclair and Universal and comes to the Morosco studios with three and a half years of picture work behind him. Mr. Chase has many friends among patrons of both screen and stage and will be displayed in important roles in Morosco productions.

FOUR NEW BRANCH OFFICES FOR KLEINE.

The constantly growing demands of the big Billie Burke Serial have induced George Kleine to add to his already long list of branches. New offices were opened last week in four cities. I. P. Rosenberg was appointed manager of the St. Louis branch in the Empress Theater Bldg.; W. A. Ratz, Fletcher Savings & Trust Bldg., Indianapolis; F. Rutledge, 207 Broadway Market Bldg., Detroit, and Rudolph Berger Bank of Commerce & Savings Bldg., Washington, D. C. These offices are already open and ready for business.

Wallace Beery to Direct Carter De Haven

WALLACE BEERY has been engaged by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to direct Carter De Haven, the well known comedian, in a new serial, work on which already has been commenced at the Pacific coast studios.

Beery is well known to the followers of motion pictures for his work as "Sweedie" and other comedies. He has been an actor for a number of years—in fact, all his life has been spent in the amusement business. Recently he has been playing comedy leads with the Keystone and his work attracted the management of the Universal company, which saw in him a director for the class of work which is making De Haven as big a screen favorite as he was on the comedy Stage.

Wallace Beery.

The new serial will be made under the title of "Timothy Dobbs," De Haven playing the title role. It begins with the comedian working behind a soda fountain with most of his girl customers admiring him. He gets the idea he should be a motion picture star and applies at a studio, at which time his troubles begin.

The episode will be practically a story in itself, with plenty of good comedy action—in fact, just the sort of a story for the clever work of De Haven.

Miranda With World Film

THOS. N. MIRANDA, formerly general manager of the B. S. Moss Theatrical Enterprises, the Amalgamated Vaudeville Agency and the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, resigned to become advertising manager of the World Film Corporation.

Mr. Miranda is a man of excellent business training and a wide experience in the advertising and news service field. Himself a versatile writer, who has contributed to various magazines, and with editorial experience, the World is to be congratulated upon securing a man of his calibre.

Might also refer to fact that Mr. Miranda has a liberal education, and has traveled extensively throughout the entire world, being familiar with the atmosphere and the habits of people in most of the civilized countries.

Thos. N. Miranda.

OVERLAND PARK FILM MANUFACTURING CO.

The Overland Park Film Manufacturing Company, of Kansas City, Mo., has been organized with a capital of $200,000, and a studio which cost $25,000. The company is now doing commercial work for other motion picture concerns. It proposes to make a specialty of commercial work for universities, railroads and general manufacturing concerns, together with comedies in one and two reels. F. B. Baumtee is general manager.

A REMARKABLE NIGHT SCENE.

A surpassing achievement in the difficult art of night photography in motion pictures will be noted in "The Toilers," the new feature directed by Edgar Lewis for the Lubin Company. The scene shows New York's great white way at its own nigh moon, which elsewhere is called midnight.

It was taken from the ninth floor of a Times Square building with the camera pointed to the north, where the weird kaleidoscope of light and motion reaches flood tide at the hour which, according to Shakespeare, is the witching one when churchyards yawn.

In Daniel Carson Goodman's scenario of "The Toilers" this bit of night life is indicated merely as a brief vision of Annie Brett, the oil worker's daughter, as she listens to the pleading of a wealthy admirer to leave the shacks and derricks and tread the great white way with him. Yet to place this bit on the screen Edgar Lewis and Edward Earle, his camera chief, with their assistants, went over to New York, and setting up their apparatus in the Times Square building, worked for hours in overcoming technical obstacles and were finally rewarded by a night picture of marvelous quality.

Against the screen of black night the incandescents of the n ammoth advertising signs come and go and play their design with startling realism. The electric signs of the theaters are seen, but, after all, the most effective surprise in the astonishing picture is furnished by the headlights of the automobiles as they first twinkle in the street canyon and enlarge into the advancing globes of white.

NEW YORK METRO IN NEW OFFICE.

The New York Metro Film Service, Inc., distributors of Metro wonderplays, have removed from No. 110 West Fortieth street, to more spacious quarters in the Godfrey Building, at Seventh avenue and Forty-ninth street. The new offices are in charge of Edward M. Saunders, general manager of the branch. In the new quarters Mr. Saunders has been able to enlarge several departments and install several new ones. Among the important departments are the booking and sales, stenography, bookkeeping and auditing, poster and advertising, repair rooms and extensive film vaults. Another important department which has been considerably enlarged is the publicity department, which is run under the slogan of "first aid to exhibitors."

TERRY RAMSEY MARRIES BETTY SHANNON.

Terry Ramsey, the able publicity manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, and Betty Shannon, who has been doing motion picture publicity in New York for the past two years, more recently for the Mutual, slipped over to Philadelphia the other day and were very quietly married. They say that there was no reason why they shouldn't, and two very good reasons why they might (both were willing), so they did, and there you are. Congratulations are in order and they have ours together with sincere wishes for a long and happy life.

MASTERS IN HOSPITAL.

It is with much regret that we note that E. Lanning Masters, advertising director of V-L-S-E, is confined to his bed at the Flower Hospital, suffering from an acute attack of appendicitis, which made itself felt on his return with the V-L-S-E censorship delegation from Albany on Thursday last. Victor M. Shapiro, the assistant advertising director, will handle his work while he is away.

MERRILL ON MISSION TO MINNEAPOLIS.

W. L. Merrill, manager of Unicorn's New York exchange, has been sent to Minneapolis to acquaint the exhibitors of that section with Unicorn films. Mr. Merrill is especially well fitted for his assignment, as for a number of years he was manager of the United Film Service exchange at Minneapolis and is acquainted with practically every exhibitor in the territory. During Mr. Merrill's absence the New York exchange will be in charge of his assistant, H. W. Harwell.

THOMAS H. INCE IN NEW YORK.

Thomas H. Ince, the widely known producer of Kay-Bee Triangle subjects, arrived in New York on Sunday, May 14, bringing his new production, "Civilization." Mr. Ince was accompanied by J. Barker Read, Jr. Both looked in the best of health. Mr. Ince said he would be in New York for several weeks.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

U. S. PALACE THEATER, ORANGE, N. J.

One of the Up-to-Date Chain of Photoplay Houses Operated by United States Amusement Company. Seats 1,200 —Managed by D. J. Shepherd.

ORANGE, N. J., is a comparatively small town, and when the writer, standing at the Four Corners, Newark, often heard Newarkers declaring their intention of going to Orange to see the pictures at the Palace, he decided to also make the trip. Expecting to see a small one-horse theater there, he was surprised to find a modern, up-to-date, fully-equipped moving picture house. A long row of automobiles was in front of the house, which is situated at 504 Main street, between Baldwin and Harrison streets, Orange.

The building is of white terra cotta exterior, and a large illuminating sign, advantageously placed, announces the location of the house. The house is built on a plot 75x140 feet.

D. J. Shepherd.

The lobby is 25 feet long and 40 feet high. The house was built two years ago by Louis J. Finger at a cost of $50,000. It was practically a failure until it was taken over by the United States Amusement Company, of which Frank G. Hall is president. This corporation is the only one in the state of New Jersey which controls a chain of moving picture theaters. There are eight houses in the chain, all showing motion pictures exclusively.

The lobby is of prepossessing appearance. Beautiful and showy display signs are scattered at quite a distance from one another throughout the lobby. The house, which has no balcony, seats 1,200 comfortably. The seats are of mahogany, with metal supports, and are divided into three sections, with aisles between the sections, thus making easy egress from the building in case of emergency.

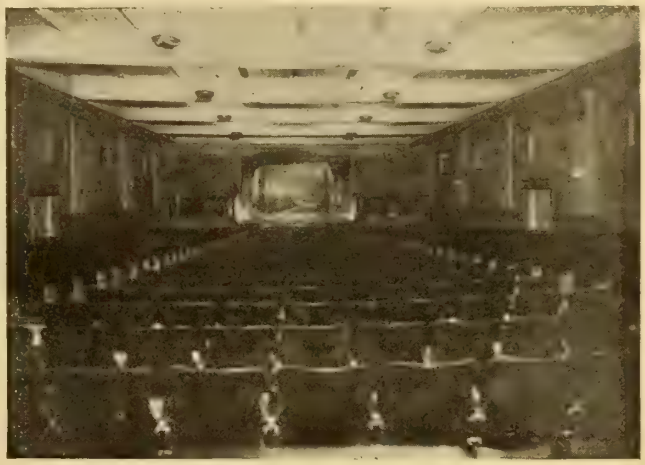
A program of Triangle, Paramount, World, V-L-S-E, is given at an admission price of 10 cents afternoons and 15 cents evenings. At special performances only 25 cents is charged. Children under sixteen are positively not admitted without being accompanied by parent or guardian.

U. S. Palace Theater, Orange, N. J.

The ventilating and heating systems have proved most effective. Several ventilators provide fresh air for the house, while large exhaust fans continually carry the stale air out. Heat is furnished by a large boiler in the cellar. There are eight skylights, and twelve windows on the sides which also furnish plenty of air and light. In the summertime twenty electric fans help make the heat less oppressive.

Although utilized for the exhibition of motion pictures at the present time, the house is also equipped for the presentation of vaudeville performances. In the basement is a place equipped for a dressing room for actors. The dimmers are also an essential part of the equipment. The music for the show is rendered by a five-piece orchestra.

The projection department is equipped with all the latest improvements. Two 6A Power's machines are used. The house is equipped with its own generator, and the machines are motor-driven. The projection is in the hands of Operator John C. Tasto, and Assistant M. R. Heslowitz, two of the best and most careful operators in this vicinity. The throw is one of the largest in the state, being 143½ feet. The screen is a sixteen-foot Gold Fiber. The Palace prides itself upon its good projection, and not without cause.



Interior of U. S. Palace Theater, Orange, N. J.

The manager of the U. S. Palace is D. J. Shepherd, a man who has a varied and interesting career. Mr. Shepherd received his first taste of theatrical experience when, at the tender age of seven, he distributed advertising hand bills. From this "position" he was promoted to doorkeeper. He proved so satisfactory that he was again advanced, this time to assistant property man and electrician of the same theater. Then followed a period of traveling as chief electrician for a burlesque and musical comedy company. Mr. Shepherd then became a moving picture operator.

From the operator's place, Mr. Shepard advanced to the postion of actor with the Famous Players Film Company, where he worked under Director James Kirkwood. He left the Famous Players to found the Shepherd Song Slide Service, at 28 Union Square, New York. He then went to Elizabeth, N. J., where he operated three small moving picture houses at the same time. The recalling of the Elizabeth houses put Mr. Shepherd in a reminiscent mood. "Yes, those were the happy days," he said. "I ran one reel, then, and changed twice a week. Each of my houses seated 120. There was no thought at that time of the magnificent structures to be built for the exclusive use of moving pictures." After he sold his three houses, Mr. Shepherd assumed the managerial reins of the Goodwin theater, 863 Broad street, Newark, from which place he went to Plainfield, N. J. to look after the U. S. Astor there. This latter place was the last prior to his coming to Orange, where he has already demonstrated his worth in the short time he has been there.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS

EDUCATIONAL FILM SERVICE CONTRACT.

THE proposed co-operative plan for educational film service on an economical basis, as treated in my former articles, has already elicited responses from numerous and widespread sources. Because of the keen interest manifested by educationists wherever the proposals have become known and understood, I have decided to publish as preliminary information to prospective subscribers an abridged form of contract comprising especially those arrangements that are likely to be of general interest. When you have read this condensed subscription contract,I shall be glad to have you write me, at least briefly, in regard to your institutional needs and intentions in this matter. In view of the fact that the fresh positives will not be printed until the necessary number of subscribers is assured, and since the producers must receive my orders to print them many weeks—preferably months—in advance of the date (September, 1916) when you are to be provided with the first of the year's series of weekly five-reel programs, I hope you will not fail to write me promptly. By enlisting the co-operation of others and stimulating them also to write in promptly, you will be furthering the interests of many other institutions besides your own.

Following is a simplified summary of the main provisions in the contract:

A.—The subscriber agrees: (1) to pay in advance (as soon as the required total of subscriptions are received) a membership fee of twenty dollars; (2) (a) to use (exclusively in non-commercial institutions—schools, churches, settlements, etc.) the weekly film programs furnished under the supervision of the Director, and for ..... runs each, said weekly service to continue through a period of forty weeks beginning the first week of September, 1916, and (b) to pay rent for the use of said films at the rate of thirty-seven and one-half cents per reel per run, amounting in all to the sum of $.... (in addition to membership fee), said gross rental to be paid as follows: forty per cent. by July 10, 1916; thirty per cent. by November 10, 1916; thirty per cent. by March 10, 1916; the two thirty per cent. payments to be represented by negotiable notes; (3) to pay transportation charges from preceding station on circuit, and for any damage suffered by material while under his charge; (4) to bear—in case of his fault in forwarding films—all expenses incurred in reasonable efforts to remedy his error; also, in such case, to reimburse next succeeding member on circuit for rent estimated as wasted because of failure of material to go forward on time, and to pay into the reserve fund a special cumualtive fine (sums to be determined by vote of subscribers); (5) (a) to provide proper local carriers and caretakers; (b) to check contents of parcels and report any discrepancies; (c) to have films carefully inspected while being rewound before using; (d) to keep his machine, especially parts from which film might suffer damage, in standard condition; (e) to report number of runs for which each film is actually used; (f) not to allow any of said films to be used for any purpose by any person or institution not a circuit member in good standing; (g) to follow all reasonable instructions that may be issued from time to time for the good of the service.

B.—The Director agrees: (1) to devote his efforts, so far as may be needed, to the development, organization, and operation of a circuit for the purpose of supplying to its members on a co-operative, profit-sharing plan a school-year series of weekly five-reel educational motion-picture film programs, supplemented with lantern slides and other visual aids to education; both films and slides to be of size to fit standard machines; (2) to accept said subscriber as a member of said circuit for educational picture service, provided transportation facilities and like consideration permit; (3) to select on the basis of personal inspection approximately two hundred reels of standard films especially suitable for educational use, choosing the best obtainable subjects from the stock of all the film producers that have pledged to him the privilege of securing fresh positives to be printed specially for this service; (4) to place orders for said positives as soon as the aggregate of subscriptioons under contracts like this shall warrant such action; (5) to arrange said two hundred reels into forty programs of five reels each, so balanced and varied as to attain desired educational ends; (6) to arrange for the preparation of a series of pedagogical leaflets, containing information and literary matter closely related to each film subject; (7) to effect complete bookings for the entire yearly series in advance, informing each subscriber before September as to the precise program allotted to him for each of the forty weekly dates; (8) to apportion and apply the funds received as follows: (a) aggregate of membership fees to be devoted to promotion expenses and general equipment, the balance to be applied toward editorial work—then to printing and mailing of leaflets; (b) aggregate of forty per cent. payments to be paid over to film producers in accordance with their requirement that each positive must be paid for in cash on delivery, additional funds for this purpose being raised by depositing as collateral some of the notes for thirty per cent. payments due at a later date; (c) necessary operating expenses not on hand from membership fees to be secured by other similar loans; (d) the net profits, or excess of total receipts over the sum of the various items beforementioned, to be divided:

One part to supplement the funds available for printing and distribution of leaflets, and to purchase and provide on circuit suitable lantern-slides, stereographs, color prints, and other aids to visual education along the lines of the film subjects; one part to be deposited as a reserve fund, from which films worn out rapidly may be replaced, the final balance in said fund to be returnable pro rata to circuit members—or held as advance membership fee (or part thereof) for a like circuit to be operated during the following year; a part to be retained by the Director as reward for his planning, developing, organizing and operation of this circuit.

NON-INFLAM STANDARD FILMS.

Many prospective users of educational films and subscribers for this service will be especially interested to know that I am arranging to supply on one or more circuits exclusively the new non-inflammable (acetate of cellulose) film. This material is inferior to the regular celluloid only in point of durability, but the number of runs for which it may be relied upon—particularly if operators are reasonably careful in handling each reel—seems to be well above the basis of my financial calculations. Naturally, those institutions already equipped with regulation booths or intending to incur the expense (from $80 to $800, according to type chosen) will care little for this difference in film material; but the hundreds of smaller institutions all over our country, and even some of the larger ones that would find the expense of a booth and the requirement of a licensed operator a discouraging obstacle, will doubtless warmly welcome this announcement. Those who are concerned over this feature of the service should write me without delay.

POTENTIAL SCHOOL CLIENTELE.

In this connection it is worth noting that the potential clientele for a regular program of five educational reels weekly throughout the school year is easily large enough to justify liberal provision for the needs of various types of institutions—the only prerequisite being that they (elementary schools, high schools, colleges, churches, Y. M. C. A.'s, and like institutions) promptly subscribe for reel-runs aggregating a number sufficient to warrant the necessary special selection of suitable films and the printing of fresh positives from the original standard negatives now lying in the vaults of producers or distributors.

For instance, within the United States are fifty cities of over 100,000 population each. The total high school enrollment in these cities alone far exceeds a quarter of a million, and, of course—as explained in my last article—a specialized film program will be available for their use just as soon as their educators show themselves energetic enough to lend their active co-operation to my efforts to supply their film needs. Even if half of those fifty cities should fail to grasp the present opportunity, surely the 165 cities ranging from 100,000 down to 25,000 population could make up more than the additional subscribers needed, or suffice for a complete circuit. In like manner the nearly four hundred cities between 10,000 and 25,000 population can certainly support a circuit; as can also the more than six hundred smaller cities of from 5,000 to 10,000. Doubtless a far better basis of actual circulation will be a division into several geographical regions, but I have enumerated the population groups merely for the purpose of showing the possibilties more convincingly.

When you realize that the membership fee and rental charge for a single run of each of the forty weekly five-reel programs to be provided under this co-operative plan amount to only ninety-five dollars a school year and that even that sum may be considerably reduced by the dividend to be distributed out of the reserve fund, you cannot fail to move on to the conclusion that almost any live school of a few hundred pupils may enjoy the benefits of the two hundred reels a year. With safe and simple machines for films of standard gauge now obtainable at prices as low as $125, the last excuse for delay seems to have vanished.

BRITISH NOTES

THE two matters still of first-rate importance to the British industry are the new tax upon the exhibitor, which will soon be in operation, and the licensing of film exports. In respect to the first-named, details have now been settled to the apparent satisfaction of most of our exhibitors and removing the great bone of contention; the machinery to be employed for the collection of the impost. The general method of collecting the duty from the exhibitor will be by means of stamped tickets, which he will previously purchase from the customs offices. The inconvenience occasioned by this method (considering that every ticket issued has to be defaced) in its application to city shows or halls with a very large turnover has proved a successful argument to the Government to allow those exhibitors to pay the tax weekly on the basis of their certified accounts. Film exporters are yet skeptic as to the ultimate outcome of the new legislation necessitating the examination and licensing of every consignment of prints sent out of the country. Many firms have thousands of feet of stock held up awaiting the issue of a license and one firm of second-hand film exporters, who only obtained their license before the Easter holidays, was compelled to retain a staff, working day and night, to clear a congested warehouse.

Messrs. Sheehan and Darling, of the Fox Film Co., Ltd., have been hustling up arrangements for the handling of Fox products rapidly during the past few days. Practically the whole of the staff are now appointed, and the offices, at the corner of Old Compton street, will be ready for occupation in a day or two. The company's releases may be expected to go ahead now at the rate of one a week, for only a day or two ago they took out of bond at Liverpool negatives of the first sixty features. Mr. Darling thinks the company may eventually produce on this side, but no definite plans to this end have yet been formulated and it is unlikely that anything will materialize before the end of the war. While considering the English climate will always be a disadvantage to the producer of exterior scenes, he is quite positive that English studio work will compare well with its foreign competitor and holds up as an example the interiors in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray."

At one of the regular theaters in the West End of London, it is stated, the management intends screening a feature film of three or four reels as a curtain raiser to the usual stage performance. This is nearly as complimentary a tribute to the superiority of the picture as that in another theater where the interval between the acts was given over to the projection of a single reeler. But as the saloon-bar receipts dropped forty per cent. the orthodox "fifteen minutes" was soon reinstated.

According to a Central News telegram from the Italian capital, an American moving picture company, authorized by Cardinal Merry del Val, took films of the solemn ceremonies of Holy Week at St. Peter's. The three cameras working within the sacred precincts created some misunderstanding at the start and several of the clergy protested against the innovation and for some time sternly declined to proceed with their duties.

At the invitation of the Home Office a conference of municipal delegates from the principal provincial cities was held in London last week to discuss the advisability of establishing an official censorship of moving picture films. The existing British Board of Film Censors is, of course, a self-imposed tribunal maintained by and at the expense of film manufacturers. The result of this conference, however, proves an immediate danger of our voluntary system of censorship following the trend of the times and America and becoming compulsory. The delegates at the conference, who included over a dozen chief constables of different cities, were unanmious in their request for a Government censor. What perplexes the trade about the whole matter is why should the Government give official recognition to the British Board of Film Censors by appointing it to supervise and license the exporting side if it contemplates the institution of another censorship?

How has the British exhibitor been faring during the past twelve months of war? is a question one can imagine to be often asked by his American cousin. Statements at the annual meeting of Provincial Cinematograph Theaters, Ltd., just held, furnish an interesting and encouraging retrospect of the progress under difficulties of our largest single circuit of theaters. The gross profits on the year exceed $370,000, which, after carrying a substantial balance forward, allows of a dividend of fifteen per cent. being paid to shareholders. Higher costs of films and materials, the payment of $30,000 to employees on active service was insurances and a general all-round increase of nearly twenty per cent. upon normal expenditure are responsible for the unusually heavy outgoings.

There is at times no comprehending the ways of our local legislators. The London County Council, the responsible authority for licensing picture theaters in the Metropolitan area has just decreed that there shall be no Sunday trade shows in London. It doesn't mind kinema shows being open to the public on the Sabbath, but it does draw the line at private trade shows. Manchester, along with other provincial cities, on the other hand, will allow no public exhibitions on the first day of the week, but takes no objection to trade views. The London authority has also this week drafted out a radical revision of conditions under which exhibitors may open their doors on Sundays. In my last letter I mentioned that in future the Sunday moving picture exhibitons in London would be under the control of the National Sunday League, a philanthropic institution for the provision of cheap Sunday entertainments. Apparently this arrangement does not suit the London County Council, for it now proposes to levy a specific rate, based on previous profits, upon each show open on Sunday. The proceeds would eventually be handed over to one or other of the city charities at present benefiting from Sunday moving picture performances, but the bare idea of being compelled to hand over a certain amount, whether he takes it or not, is regarded here as holding the pistol to the head of the exhibitor.

A recommendation to the Government made at a recent meeting of the Society of Authors is couched in the following terms: "A substantial tax should be placed on films coming from the United States, with the exception of original film plays of British authors or films based on books and plays of British authors from which British authors derive benefit."

CHAPLIN VERSUS V-L-S-E.

Charlie Chaplin's much advertised motion for injunction to restrain Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay's distribution of the Essanay four-reel burlesque on "Carmen," which features Charlie Chaplin as star, was argued before Judge Hotchkiss of the Supreme Court, New York City, on Friday, May 12.

Chaplin's counsel argued that under contract which he had had with Essanay, that he reserved the right to approve or disapprove pictures in which he personally appeared and that because the burlesque on "Carmen" had been distributed in four reels by V-L-S-E. instead of in two, as he had left it, the Essanay Company ought to be enjoined from representing it as his burlesque.

The Essanay Company was represented by William N. Seabury, who showed that the contract upon which Chaplin relied had been entirely abandoned by both parties, and the picture made under a contract which contained no such restrictions.

WILFRID NORTH AND HIS COMPANY RETURN.

Director Wilfred North and his company of players headed by Lillian Walker, Evart Overton, Denton Van and Robert Gaillard arrived back at the studio early in the week from Highland Falls, New York. Mr. North and his company of players spent two weeks at the country town filming scenes for an adaptation of one of Hamlin Garland's books, which is being produced as a Blue Ribbon Feature. There is an iron mine shown in this picture that has been in operation since 1776. Iron was extracted from this mine that furnished cannon balls for Washington in many of his battles.

Director North used many of the natives of Highland Falls in the filming of the play and the locations corresponded exactly with the description in Hamlin's book. The picture features Lillian Walker, who is supported by Evart Overton. It will be released through the V-L-S-E. the latter part of June.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES

DURING the tour of Fred Niblo through Australia about a year ago, J. C. Williamson, Ltd., took pictures of two of his biggest successes, "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" and "Officer 666."

The former, which was released sometime ago, was very poor on the screen, but "Officer 666," released on the 1st instant, is a very fine comedy, and one of the best yet produced in this country.

Fred Niblo still retains his great personality on the screen. The whole company took the same parts in the screen version as on the stage, Enid Bennett appearing as Helen Burton, and John de Lacy as the gallant officer.

The same firm announces the release, on April 8, of a four-part screen adaptation of the famous play "Within the Law" with the well-known American actress, Muriel Starr, in the leading role.

Metro and Fox features are now well established with picturegoers in Sydney. Triangle films are becoming rapidly popular, and a double program is to be presented at the Triangle playhouse next week. Broadway Universal Features are shortly to be released by Fraser Films, Ltd.

Exhibitors state that features of four and five reels in length are still much in demand by the public. Good strong dramas are best liked, especially when someone well known to the audience is in the lead. In addition to the brands already mentioned, the Equitable, World and Paramount features get appreciative audiences.

There is an increasing cry for better comedies. Some of the "comedies" shown here lately were unworthy of the name, and, as the Theater Magazine points out, "Keystones are practically the only laughter-pictures we get."

The usual program for continuous shows is a four or five-part feature, with a news gazette and a comedy. For night shows the same as for continuous, but with two one-part pictures added.

I was present this week at a private screening of the first Willoughby Australian photoplay, a European war story entitled "The 'Joan of Arc' of Loos." This picture is of a much higher standard than the usual war topical drama.

Some of the later productions of this company may be shown in America. If they are all as carefully directed as this picture their success should be assured.

The company is now actively engaged on the filming of their second production, a screen adaption of the play "The Woman in the Case."

The J. C. Williamson experiment with Fox features at their big "legit" theater in Sydney has been so much of a success that the management has followed up with the same subjects at their Melbourne theater.

At Adelaide, S. A., they have also installed the Fox features permanently, and Brisbane, Qsla., is to follow.

The same firm is also getting ready to run these productions in several of their theaters in New Zealand, where the war has had a bad effect on legitimate attractions.

W. Barrington Miller, Harry G. Musgrove and C. L. Yearsley, of Australasian Films, Ltd., have just returned from a trip to Melbourne in connection with the first presentation of the Triangle Photoplays in that city. These will open at the Majestic theater on the 6th of next month. This theater was formerly a "legit" house, and seats 1,600 people.

J. C. Williams, Ltd., has secured the big Glaciarum picture theater in this city, heretofore controlled by Wests. Ltd.

It is understood that the new management will screen World Features.

"Britain Prepared," the official British war pictures, are enjoying an extended run at the Sydney Town Hall, which in spite of a seating capacity of 3,500, is crowded out each session.

The chief features showing here this week include "Mr. Lyndon at Liberty," a London film; "The House of Tears," by Metro; "Little Pal," a Famous Players, with Mary Pickford; "Let Katy Do It," from the Fine Arts studio. This picture has been commented upon very favorably by the press. It is the first Griffith supervised production yet shown on the Triangle program. "Fatty and the Broadway Stars" was the very amusing Keystone on this week's Triangle bill.

MOTION PICTURES IN TONKIN AND ANNAM.

Consul Lawrence P. Briggs, Saigon, French Indo-China, writes in "Commerce Reports" that Pathé Frères operate motion picture theaters in Hanoi and Haifong, in Tonkin, and at Hue and Tourane, in Annam. The Haifong establishment seats about 400; that of Hanoi about 500. At Hue the entertainments are held in a special room of Morin Frères's hotel and at Haifong in the café of the hotel belonging to the same firm. About 300 spectators can be accommodated at Hue and 200 at Tourane. The Hanoi theater is open every evening and Friday and Sunday afternoons; that of Haifong, Tuesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings and Saturday and Sunday afternoons; those of Hue and Tourane, two nights a week. Prices are uniform, 20 cents to 1 piaster (about 9 to 45 cents United States currency).

Since the beginning of the war these places have constituted practically the sole form of amusement in French Indo-China. Theaters are closed, dances are forbidden, and the bands no longer play in the public parks. Hanoi and Haifong had splendid municipal theaters with good programs, and since the closing of these the picture theaters have been well patronized; but the Hue and Tourane motion picture establishments are not so well attended. The audience is generally made up of Europeans and the better class of natives.

The films include the usual range of subjects. Comic scenes are most in demand, especially by natives and children. Every performance generally contains one film devoted to current events in Europe and America. Usually there is also an American film, almost always an Indian or cowboy scene, which seems to be very popular here. The films used are almost exclusively Pathé's, but other films are sometimes purchased or rented. The purchasing agents for this circuit are De la Pommeraye, Jousserand et Cie, Hanoi and Saigon.

Before the war motion picture shows were given at Namdinh and other places in a large tent with a seating capacity of 400 or more. The director made his headquarters in Namdinh, but traveled throughout Tonkin and Annam, holding entertainments in the principal centers of population. After the outbreak of war this enterprise was found unprofitable, and it was disbanded about the middle of 1915.

MOVING PICTURE ADVERTISING IN SOUTH AMERICA.

One of the leading New York hotels that caters especially to foreign visitors has sent two representatives on a tour through South America with a film showing views of life in New York calculated to arouse the "wanderlust" spirit in the minds of their audiences. At the places visited it is customary to give the owner of the theater free use of the film. According to William H. Montavon, the American commercial attache at Lima, Peru, the production was popular there and netted a good profit to the owner of the theater.

It is believed that the possibilities of this sort of advertising are not fully realized by American manufacturers seeking foreign trade. In the case of wearing apparel, for instance, a film showing every step in its evolution from the raw material to the finished product, and bringing out at the same time the high degree of specialization and sanitary working conditions in some of the largest plants in the United States, would make a lasting impression on the minds of an audience, and if this impression were tied up with the manufacturer's trade-mark, which could be shown at the top or bottom or in the corner of every picture, it would be a species of advertising that would appeal as no printed matter can.

MRS. COGSWELL BACK IN THE HARNESS.

Mrs. Laura Cornelissen Cogswell, president and founder of the Children's International Motion Picture League, has again taken up the work of that organization, which she was compelled to relinquish on account of illness. Mrs. Cogswell has done some effective work in the interest of motion pictures and has large plans in connection with the movement for better pictures for children regarding which she will be heard from later.

"Sudden Riches"

The Danger of Wealth Is the Theme of Excellent Peerless-World Film Picture Made by Emile Chautard.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE demand for photoplays dealing with the problem of modern life in a common sense way is recognized in this admirable production, directed by Emile Chautard from a scenario by E. Richard Schayer, who had a story to tell and the skill to tell it. The author does not go so far as to argue that "money is the root of all evil;" but he does contend, through the experiences of his characters, that it may bring misery into a household that prior to the advent of wealth knew only happiness. Of course, it would be just as safe to assume that poverty will cause estrangement; but there is at least an element of truth in the premises on which the author rears a logical, convincing story.

The prologue, occupying a few hundred feet in the first of the six reels, may be passed over as inconsequential, though not out of place in providing a background for the Crewe family —Robert, a successful young lawyer, whose income is sufficient for the maintenance of a modest home; his entirely devoted wife, Marion, and their lovely little daughter, Emily. For reasons, properly set forth, Robert is marked for ruination by an aged uncle, who tempts him with a dishonest get-rich-quick scheme and failing in this employs a beautiful woman to lure him away from his wife. Both of these plans prove of no avail and then the uncle dies, leaving Robert a fortune, confident that it will wreck the simple household.

Director, author and players are to be commended, first for their success in catching the spirit of an ideal home life, and then for the adroit manner in which they convey the changed attitude resulting from the sudden acquisition of wealth. With the doors opened to fashion and luxury, husband and wife drift away from home and they drift apart, leaving their love-starved daughter dependent for companionship upon an unfeeling nurse and expensive toys. The sympathy aroused by the child, beautifully played by Madge Evans, accounts to no small degree for the exceptional appeal of the picture, that at times suggests "The Poor Little Rich Girl," as presented on the stage. While Robert is carrying on an affair with a vaudeville actress, Marion is receiving attentions from a popular sculptor, and Emily is eating lonely suppers and crying herself to sleep. Then comes the awakening crash, the threatened death of the child that brings husband and wife to their senses, and henceforth Robert is content to dispense with his uncle's fortune.

Robert Warwick, Gerda Holmes and Clara Whipple give natural, effective performances; but audiences in the habit of selecting their own stars may give first place to Madge Evans, one of the prettiest and cleverest youngsters that ever acted before a camera—and she really acts. Clearly photographed settings are in excellent taste.

"The Girl with the Green Eyes"

Splendid Visualization of Clyde Fitch's Melodrama Presented in Pathe Gold Rooster Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

POPULAR Plays and Players with Herbert Blache as director are responsible for this five-part production which appears on the program of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., for May 15. The players who lend themselves so becomingly to the three principal characters of the play are Julian L'Estrange, Katharine Kaelred and Edith Lyle. The title role as played by Miss Kaelred suggests a careful study of the character of Scene from "The Girl with the Green Eyes" (Pathe).

Mrs. Travers who, listening to the mischief-making tales of Mansfield, one of her husband's club acquaintances, becomes so insanely jealous that she tries to poison herself.

The play as presented in the picture belongs essentially to the school of melodrama with its entertaining improbabilities. It is artistically set, well-dressed and well-photographed, and is therefore pleasing to the eye. As the story runs, Edward Travers, a noted actor and beloved by the women, one day comes by accident upon his sister who has been duped by a man by the name of Redfern. With her child she is standing on the river bank and is evidently about to commit suicide. Travers takes her back to her rooms and later provides a comfortable apartment for her. Not long afterward Mansfield, who, by the way, is identical with Redfern, sees him enter his sister's apartment, and carries the news to Mrs. Travers, who knows nothing of her husband's sister, in hope of alienating her affections. The usual developments take place and the situation referred to in the first paragraph occurs followed by the reunion of husband and wife, and the introduction of the sister and her child to the home of her brother and his wife.

"The Mysteries of Myra"

Third Episode in International Film Service Serial Presents an Unusual Situation.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AS IN the first two episodes of "The Mysteries of Myra," the outstanding impression in this, the third installment, is the suggestion of an occult power threatening the life of the pretty heroine. Owing to the ingenious story prepared by Hereward Carrington and Charles W. Goddard and to the superior production made by the Whartons, an audience is effectually brought under the spell of the Black Order, determined upon the death of Myra Maynard. Double exposures are used in a masterly fashion to show the meetings of spirits and ordinary flesh and blood mortals; also difficult lighting effects, such as those utilized in depicting the Black Order in their secret council chamber, add greatly to the atmosphere of mystery.

At the opening of the third episode, Dr. Alden has determined to beat the powers of evil at their own game. Being an expert in occult matters, he thinks it might be wise to send Myra's astral body on a little sight-seeing trip among those who are persecuting her, and in order to do this it is necessary to place the young woman in a trance. This accounts for the chief feature of the second reel, which finds Myra in Alden's laboratory, facing a most complicated hypnotizing machine. Soon she falls under the influence of the dazzling, revolving mirrors and her astral body departs, to enter the council chamber of the Black Order.

But in his calculations, Alden lost sight of the possible difficulty of reuniting the spirit and the material form. When the disciples of the Devil find that Myra is in their midst, they bring into play all their mysterious powers to retain the astral body, while Alden and the girl's mother are praying for the reawakening of the lifeless figure reclining in a chair. In time, consciousness returns and Myra is able to give her champion a hazy description of her experiences in the Black Lodge. Howard Estabrook and Jean Sothern strengthen the favorable impression made in the initial installments, whereas other characters are ably presented by Allen Murnane, M. W. Rale and Bessie E. Wharton.

One and Two-Reel Biographs

"The Reformers" Ridicules Intolerant Busybodies—Appealing Characterization in "A Misunderstood Boy."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHEN Griffith made his two-part drama, to be reissued by the Biograph Company on June 20, the self-appointed reformers were no less active than they are today; but they favored motion pictures with less of their attention. These two reels might have been called "The Censors," using the title in its broader meaning, yet including the agitators for a legalized supervision of photoplays. The principle involved is the same and the characters met in Griffith's production are patterened after the types found in the ranks of our militant reformers, vitally concerned about the moral welfare of the community.

The experiences of one family are disclosed as an example of what public benefactors of this stamp may encounter. Intent on heading a movement that places a ban on dancing, closes the saloons and eliminates the theaters, a father and mother are blind to the happenings in their own home where a suave youth from the city holds sway. He supplies the son of the house with liquor that cannot be purchased through the customary channels and effects the ruination of the daughter, while the parents are congratulating themselves on the success of the puritanical crusade. The situation prepared for the climax is legitimately ironic and fairly dramatic, as acted by Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Charles H. Mailes, Jenny Lee, Walter Miller and Charlie Murray.

In ability to give sympathetic interpretations of boys not yet passed the awkward age, the screen has brought forth no actor superior to Robert Harron during the years that he played for Biograph pictures under the direction of Griffith He is seen at his best in this dramatic single reel called "A Misunderstood Boy," in which he acts opposite Lillian Gish, with able support furnished by Lionel Barrymore, Alfred Paget and W. Chrystie Cabanne. Practically all of the scenes were photographed in the open and their arrangement shows rare skill in the development of a vivid sketch.

"Sherlock Holmes"

A Photoplay Adaptation of Wm. Gillette's Famous Play in Seven Parts, by Essanay, with Mr. Gillette, Members of His Own Company and Several Essanay Players in the Well Assigned Cast.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

WILLIAM GILLETTE as Sherlock Holmes, in moving pictures, even at the ripe age of 63 years, was "a consummation devoutly to be wisheu." For five consecutive years he toured this country, England and Canada in his famous play, during which theatergoers never tired looking at his characterization of Conan Doyle's great detective. A few more years and it would have become impossible for Mr. Gillette to take the part with the physical vigor that would recall his best efforts of the old days to his international-wide admirers, and at the same time would leave in comparatively permanent form, his Sherlock Holmes for the delight of future generations. I did not ask whether it had been done or not, but I hope that Essanay took two good negatives of this subject, so that the period of future time during which positive reproductions can be successfully made, shall be prolonged to the classic limit.

Scene from "Sherlock Holmes" (Essanay).

Mr. Gillette acts like an old-timer before the camera, and is just as natural and forceful as we have seen him on the stage. The scene in Edelweiss Cottage, where the Larrabees hold Alice Faulkner a prisoner, shows Mr. Gillette as the Sherlock Holmes of years ago. The seeming lapses into a sleepiness of manner and action suddenly resolve into a display of imperiousness and overpowering mentality and will. The greatest scene in the photoplay, as it was in the drama, is that showing the test of wit and cunning and masterful resourceful ability between the detective and Professor Moriarty (the Emperor of Crooks), in the home of the former. Mr. Gillette never had a stronger opposite than Ernest Maupain in this great scene. This fine character actor well merits the distinction of being entombed in films for coming years with the master of all detective impersonators.

Miss Marjorie Kay's Alice Faulkner and the Dr. Watson of Edward Fielding are both meritorious. Indeed, the cast is commendable throughout. "Billy" (Burford Hampden), the "Buttons" in Sherlock's home; Sidney Prince (William Postance), James and Madge Larrabee (Mario Marjeroni and Miss Grace Reals), Sir Edward Leighton (Hugh Thompson) and Count von Stalberg (Ludwig Kreiss), all stand out prominently in the action in the films.

The settings are worthy of the acted production, and these and talented direction must be credited to Director Arthur Berthelet.

The release will be made through V-L-S-E, Inc.

Heffron Finishing the Return.

Director T. N. Heffron, of the Selig forces, is finishing "The Return," which features Kathlyn Williams, and is making active preparations for his forthcoming five-reel feature, "The Valiants of Virginia." This feature requires a large cast, and many of the sets are massive and elaborate.

Hoadley Finishes Scenario.

Harold Hoadley, who recently became a member of the Beauty-Mutual scenario department, has completed his first scenario. It will be released under the title of "Perkin's Mystic Manor" and will feature Orral Humphrey. Josephine Phillips heads the company supporting Humphrey.

Triangle Program

"A Child of the Paris Streets," Five-Reel Fine Arts; "The Market of Vain Desires," Five-Reel Ince Product, and "The Lion and the Girl," Two-Reel Keystone.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"A CHILD of the Paris Streets" presents entertainingly the story of a Jurist's child stolen in infancy by the Apaches out of revenge and raised in a low environment, where she is trained to be a thief. Mae Marsh, as the fluffy-haired young pickpocket and cabaret dancer, installs a lot of bright comedy into the lurid melodrama, and Tully Marshall, as the Apache who stole her, is a villain of villains. These two are very convincing and carry off honors by sheer force of strong personality; though the other types are good, Jennie Lee as the hideous old leader of the gang of thieves especially so.

Melodramatic suspense in this story is worked up to a high point by theatrical methods, and there is a sincere attempt to give the visualization atmosphere by carefully arranged settings and costumes, but the story lacks the subtle charm of psychology in most of its scenes—they are almost purely dependent upon activity of movement, the kind that used to respond to a demand for "action." Yet it is well constructed, admirably handled and reasonably sure to please almost any mixed audience. Out of the sum of its values rises the quaint and piquant charm of Miss Marsh at her best, a rollicking, don't-care girl, so delightfully American in her "poise and rhythm," her general attitude toward circumstances and her relaxation under their influence, that she should be given opportunity as the American girl in some future release.

"The Market of Vain Desires."

"The Market of Vain Desires" affords H. B. Warner opportunity in a rather difficult role, that of a young minister so serious and sincere that he dares compromise his position for a great social service. Stung by a close glimpse of a "Bartered Bride," a young girl about to marry a French Count, the intrepid young clergyman illustrates his point with more force than elegance, just as a critic is sometimes obliged to do in his branch of social service. The preacher first arranges his fashionable audience for promoting loveless unions, then brings a girl of the streets into view for the sake of comparison—wherein is her sin greater than that of selling an innocent girl for a title or for social position. This form of logic, reasoning from analogy is of a kind usually unsound, and it does not stand close examination in the screen story. Mr. Warner makes all there is to be made out of his role, as does every member of his support so far as their roles are concerned, but the play is not convincing. Its chief merit lies in artistic treatment, many of the scenes displaying fine knowledge of picture composition and the whole a pleasing combination of craftsmanship and artistry.

"The Lion and the Girl."

"The Lion and the Girl" has much that has made Keystones highly amusing with a real story thrown in, rather an unusual thing in farce-comedy. Joe Jackson gets out of a tramp's clothes for once and is seen in what appears to be his proper person, though you never can tell. The story is lively and for a farce it has unusual features of characterization and a really artistic ending. It is a good addition to the program.

"Soul Mates"

Five-Reel American, in Which the Eternal Triangle Is Given Some Interesting Variations.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A VARIATION of "The Eternal Triangle," one in which the longing and affection of a childless married man plays the pretty part, "Soul Mates" principally involves the strife of two men for the wife of one of them with an able exhibition of the primary emotions, love jealousy and thirst for revenge aroused by the well-known situation. The injected complication is that of a watchful private secretary devoted to the interests of the unsuspecting husband. Upon this private secretary, who knows much of the guilty wife's past history, who sees that she is directing an intrigue with her husband's most intimate friend, himself a married man and the father of an interesting little boy, falls the onus of untangling matters. In his final discovery of the wife's guilt the private secretary is shot by mistake, the lover escaping, but he is not killed, and his confession brings retribution. Relief is offered in the strong attachment between the injured husband and the little son of the intimate friend. When the faithless wife is disposed of by divorce and the faithless friend by suicide, the boy brings his widowed mother and his "soul mate," the injured husband, together, and all ends well. The whole cast is good, and there are some beautiful exteriors shown, but the story needs trimming down after the climax.

"The Ordeal of Elizabeth"

Lillian Walker Featured in Five-Part Vitagraph Production for the Program of the V-L-S-E.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A MERRY opening is given this Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in the shape of a sleighing party of young people among whom is pretty Elizabeth Van Vorst, the leading feminine character of the play which is interpreted delightfully by Lillian Walker.

One of the charms of this production is the careful attention paid by director Wilfrid North to the smallest human details. He has been careful to provide atmosphere, and, furthermore, the psychology of the play rings true. The story takes rather an unusual turn when Elizabeth, an impetuous, affectionate sort of girl, agrees to marry Hallock, a profligate artist, with the provisor that he keep the marriage a secret and allow her to go to her home. He goes away to the city, and in the meantime she falls in love with Julian Gerard, a wealthy New York man whom she accidentally meets in the woods near her home, and afterward is formally introduced to in the home of a friend whom she is visiting in New York.

The big situation of the play arrives when the artist after harrassing his wife into pawning her jewelry for him, with a threat of disclosing their relations should she refuse, is found dead in his studio. Elizabeth is arrested for murder and is about to be convicted when Gerard who has gone abroad without leaving his address returns to verify her statement that she was with him in the Metropolitan Museum of Art at the hour of Hallock's death. A great deal of film has been taken up in presenting the details of the trial, but all are so thoroughly effective that it is a question whether elimination is necessary. Others of the cast are Evart Overton, Denton Vane, Ollie Walker, Mrs. M. Story, Kate Price, L. Rogers Lytton, Templer Saxe, R. M. S. Putnam, Karin Norman, and Walter McGrail.

"Pasquale"

Delightful Five-Reel Offering on Paramount Program—Beban Has Excellent Role and Is Ably Supported.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT is a picture to touch the heart, this five-reel offering, "Pasquale," with George Beban in the leading role. It is a Paramount release and was made by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company. Mr. Beban, with the help of Lawrence McCloskey, developed the story from a slight incident, one of those he has been telling in the Italian dialect, but it has been filled with unexpected and thoroughly delightful touches of human understanding and sympathy, bits often times of sheer inspiration. The best thing about the picture is that the chief characters affect you as real human beings; you can't resist them. The best of them, by all odds, are Pasquale, by Beban, and Margarita, by Helen Eddy, but all the others are good, too.

The main thread of the plot is slight, yet compact with emotion of the sincerest and broadest kind. To bolster this is a secondary plot, very melodramatic and fashioned to fit the taste of the day. These two are ably knit. The second helps the first to its happy ending and keeps it from being truthful. We will say no more of this secondary plot—it was written to fit the audience and will be acceptable. The first, baring the effect of the second upon it, is dignified, as worthy as the daylight is, and full of poetry. Pasquale, simple and lovable son of Italy, loves Margarita, and Columbo, his rose, that drags his fruit cart. He is thrifty and is succeeding with his store. Margarita loves Charlie and marries him. Pasquale goes away to the great war and leaves Margarita and Charlie in charge of Columbo and of the store and Margarita and Columbo are both roughly treated. Later Pasquale comes back. Things are pretty bad and he is about to clear out when the secondary plot comes to the rescue and Charlie, doing some more of his villain work, is killed.

W. D. Taylor directed the picture and we see an able hand at work in it. Jack Nelson plays Charlie and does it well. Nigel de Brullier plays an Italian banker, with Myrtle Stedman in the role of his wife. Bob Fulton plays her would-be paramour. The photoplay is excellent and the novel and artistic method of presenting the leaders is commendable. There are some scenes showing the great war in Europe, and they not only fit the story perfectly, but are as realistic as scenes cut from some recent topical. It is a good offering.

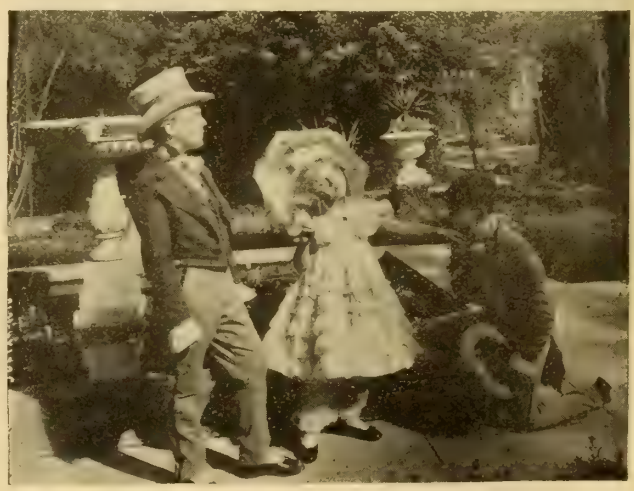
"Naked Hearts"

Five-Part Bluebird Photoplay Presenting an Artistically Staged Story Suggested by Tennyson's "Maud."

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WHAT attracts one most about this picture is the artistic manner in which it has been staged. It is not faultless by any means, but is quaint and dainty. Particularly impressive is the acting of the children who carry the first part of the production, by name Zoe Bech, Gordon Griffith and George Hupp. Zoe Bech representing the child Maud of the first period is especially charming in her quaint dresses and frilled pantalettes of more than half a century ago, while Francelia Billington as the older edition of the proud and beautiful maiden portrays with finish and delicate refinement the character suggested by the poem.



Scene from "Naked Hearts" (Bluebird).

In trying to preserve a romantic atmosphere the characters of the play in spite of the fact that the scenes are laid in the southern states are of the Roman Catholic faith, and convent scenes that suggest the older European countries, although exceedingly effective, seem scarcely in keeping with the period of the Americal civil war. Neither did the director think to to twenty years, and while none of these things are detrimental to the enjoyment of the picture, still a question as to consistency arises. Then again some of the characters age prematurely; for instance, the mother of Cecil, the sweetheart of Maud, appears in the second period with the makeup of a woman nearing her eightieth year.

Others of the cast are Rupert Julian, Douglas Gerrard, Benjamin Horning, Paul Weigle and Nannie Wright.

This production can be depended on to please both adults and children. In fact children would be delighted especially with the early period of the story. The atmosphere of the production is always wholesome and beautiful.

"The Feud Girl"

Hazel Dawn Finely Portrays Mountain Girl in Interesting Feud Story Produced by Famous Players.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

ONE of the officials of the Board of Review at the close of the special showing of "The Feud Girl" remarked to a representative of the Famous Players: "The members of the board who have just seen your picture seem to agree it is a fine subject." The official was going through a handful of formal reports, such as are made out by each member of the board after a review. The remark was of particular interest to this writer as he had observed one of the women members of the board turning her head during the showing of the fight between Irving Cummings and Arthur Morrison—it really was a hard scrap—and the aforesaid company representative moved uneasily in his seat, too, as if he scented a kick. Evidently it did not materialize.

Hazel Dawn has the role of a girl of the mountains who is selected by the head of her clan, her father, as the feminine contribution to a marriage which is to unite the Haddon and the Bassett feudists, to effect a reconciliation that will make possible the sale of the property the title of which is the bone of contention between the clans. Miss Dawn has a good role, and to its natural interest she adds by her portrayal. The story of Nell Haddon's marriage to the man who had been her childhood sweetheart is a pretty one.

"The Feud Girl" is from an original script. Fred Thomson has produced it. For his backgrounds he went into the mountains of Georgia, virgin soil indeed for the camera. To the good cast selected for the principal roles he has added many of the natives—not types, but actualities—and they are well marshalled. It is a picturesque country, with its hills, waterfalls, cabins. The photography, too, is excellent.

The story in the last half of the five reels develops real strength. There are situations, three of them especially, that make themselves felt. The atmosphere of the hills—of strong passions, of hate and of love—is present. Supporting Miss Dawn are Irving Cummings, Arthur Morrison, George Majeroni, Hardee Kirkland, Russell Simpson and Gertrude Norman.

"The Woman in Black"

Biograph Drama, Based on Stage Play, Produced Some Years Ago, to be Released in Five Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE stage play which inspired this five-part picture was successfully presented by Klaw & Erlanger before the day of screen entertainment. It is melodramatic in tone and susceptible to photoplay treatment, as is amply evidenced in the production made by Larry Marston, who gave a clear and altogether satisfactory version of a story replete with action and not lacking in an elementary appeal to the emotions. "The Woman in Black," while wanting in the qualities that contribute to a notable picture, will adequately fulfill the needs of an exhibitor who expects his programs to meet the average standard, but does not demand something extraordinary.

Rather familiar material is utilized in the plot, the kind of material that invariably reaches the sympathies when properly handled. There are four important characters; first, the daughter of "The Woman in Black," a Gypsy girl who succumbs to the ardent wooing of a man with more money than morals; next, the man who readily forgets his glib promises; then the high-spirited young woman he wishes to marry, and finally the deserving suitor with whom she is in love. According to a Gypsy custom, the Gypsy girl is flogged and driven from the camp when her disgrace is disclosed. Accompanied by her mother she sets out to find the cause of her misfortune.

Meanwhile the other thread of the story is being followed, with Crane using the hold he has on Stella's father in order to force a marriage, and Mansfield doing everything in his power to prevent the match. Mansfield has just defeated his rival in a congressional election and Stella is about to sacrifice herself to Crane for the sake of the family when the wandering Gypsies find their man and instead of a wedding there is a murder that entirely clears the situation.

The cast chosen for the interpretation of this drama is above the average, with Lionel Barrymore, always a reliable actor, in the role of Crane; Millicent Evans playing Stella, and Alan Hale as the heroic Mansfield. In the matters of settings and photography the production calls for no criticism.

"The Iron Hand"

Hobart Bosworth Featured in Five-Reel Red Feather Production, Combining Sociology and Ward Politics.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel production, adapted to the screen by F. McGrew Willis from a story by George E. Hall, presents a slightly different type of political narrative. Hobart Bosworth is featured as Big Tim Noland, a gang leader, in a tough ward. He comes into contact with Jerry, the ward boss, portrayed by Chas. H. Hickman.

The first three reels are entirely given up to the early career of Tim, all of the scenes being taken from low life and quite true to conditions as they exist in the average American city.

Tim's gang is in constant trouble with the ward boss, and as the result of a raid Tim and his chief lieutenant, Slim, are sent up to prison for a year. Slim has a wife and little boy and Tim arranges to have them looked after during their incarceration, he furnishing the funds.

They serve their term, after which Slim's wife dies of an illness, and Slim is shot in another raid. Big Tim then adopts the boy as his own. This introduces the sociological feature of the story. A certain doctor, who does not believe in heredity, desires to make a test in raising the son of a criminal under a good environment. Reluctantly Tim consents and gives up the boy.

The forepart of the story gets a natural development, free from any particular dramatic effects, but quite interesting because of the types and general character of the settings. After twenty years Tim is seen as political boss of the city. The boy, now grown to manhood, is in love with the daughter of a reformer named Winslow.

Winslow is after Big Tim's scalp and refuses consent to the marriage after the boy goes back to live with him. The boy charges Tim with being the cause of his troubles and leaves him. There is considerable pathos in the predicament of the boss when he finds himself deserted by the only one in the world he loves. Winslow defeats him in politics and he in turn saves Winslow from financial ruin in order to show that he "plays square."

The story as a whole is not one of intense interest, but it carries a study of considerable consequence and will hold the attention of the average observer on this account.

Wm. V. Mong, Maude George and Jack Curtis are also in the cast.

"The Missing Millionaire."

RICH or poor, high or low, it is all the same to Mona and Mary: a human being in trouble, is a human being to be helped. In the ninth installment of "The Social Pirates" a pair of unscrupulous stock manipulators find it expedient to have a certain benevolent millionaire confined in a lunatic asylum, while the two execute a "bear" raid on one of his railroad holdings. He has already promised to assist the two ladies in their self-imposed task of squaring accounts with evil-doers and when they learn of his predicament they at once set about effecting his release. Mary pretends to be a subject for the asylum and, once an inmate, she and Mona quickly have the man of wealth on the more desirable side of the asylum's front door. The two schemers are confronted with their victim just as they are about to cash in on their dishonest scheme, and the last scenes show a pleasant picture of Mona, Mary and the millionaire celebrating their victory with the aid of a bottle of champagne.

Although not the most original plot used for the George Bronson Howard serial, the different situations are staged with the thoroughness and skill displayed in the other eight numbers. Misses Sais and Kirby still exhibit the same keen relish for their roles; also their profound respect for the art of a talented modiste. Frank Jonasson, Thomas Lingham, Edward Clisbee and Paul Hurst complete the cast.

"The Artful Dodger."

Long before the birth of the moving picture a bit of slang that enjoyed great popularity was that succulent expression, "In the soup." The author of "The Artful Dodger," a one-reel comedy in which Ethel Teare has the leading part, does not immerse the young lady in the consomme, but the phrase "On the soup" may be properly applied to her picture. Before her marriage, she was an actress in burlesque, and sold the rights to her photograph, in a fetching costume, for use as a soup label. This fact must be kept from her husband's wealthy uncle, and, as a consequence, cans of the tabooed brand are popping out at her in the most unexpected places. This original and excellent comic motive is the work of Samuel J. Taylor. Ethel Teare, Gus Leonard, Jack MacDermott and Victor Rottman put the requisite amount of vivacity into the acting of the reel.

"Jackstraws"

Three-Reel Melodrama Written by Josephine McLaughlin and Produced by the Lubin Western Company Under the Supervision of Captain Wilbert Melville.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"JACKSTRAWS" is not an illuminative title for the three-reels written by Josephine McLaughlin. The story itself has considerable merit. It opens with directness, and rivets the attention with the first episode. A well-connected young girl elopes with a worthless fortune-hunter, and has her eyes opened before the honeymoon wains. The man is sent to prison for embezzlement and his wife obtains a divorce and goes back to her wealthy aunt, who casts her off at the time of her marriage. The girl then falls in love with the brother of her school chum, and the ex-husband turns up at just the right time to inject the necessary clash into the plot. The manner in which this is brought about is one of the best features of the story, the incidents leading up to the big moment when the divorced gentleman plays his big card and loses being reasonably plausible and always dramatic. The theme is not out of the ordinary and the character drawing is equally commonplace, but, with the material at hand the author has never lost sight of the golden rule of dramatic construction: progressive action that forces the interest of the spectator to keep pace with it, step by step. The "cutback" is used sparingly. The narrative form of fiction, that so often attempts to pass as drama in the motion picture, also occupies but little space in this photoplay.

The direction of "Jackstraws," by Melvin Mayo, is uniformly in keeping with the subject, and Lucy Payton, Adelaide Pronti, George Routh, Sicil Van Auker, Alan Forest and Evelyn Page measure up to the requirements of their individual roles.

Four Johnnie Ray Comedies

Four New Comedies by Johnnie and Emma Ray, Among Them Two That Will Serve Well as Part of a Program.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

TO those who have been following high class vaudeville the Rays, Johnnie and Emma, are by no means unknown —they have an army of friends. Four one-reel picture comedies made by the Rays in Cleveland, and with the help of amateur players, were recently shown to the trade and press at the Broadway theater in New York City. The same central character, "Casey," runs, with Mrs. Casey, through them all. They are uneven and are not built in the most effective way to be run in series since there is too much unexplainable change in the surrounding characters. For instance, in one picture the Caseys have six kids, while in the preceding and in the following pictures there are none in the Casey home. Such changes as that destroy the atmosphere of continuity that in a series that is well planned hooks one installment of a series to the others no matter how much changed are the backgrounds and circumstances of the characters.

In these pictures the work of Johnnie Ray is the most important thing, forgetting for the moment a good comedy plot. Most people know the quality of Mr. Ray's work and know that he surely is a laugh-maker and thoroughly amusing. In these pictures two have no real scenario behind them. The other two, "Casey's Servants," and "Casey, the White Wing," have an idea, it is the same in both cases, and have a plot. These two pictures will make offerings acceptable to patrons who have paid well to be amused. These two are as good, let me say, as the average farcical pictures. Johnnie Ray and Emma Ray are able comedians. The supporting cast was made up of amateurs; but they did very well. There is one who deserves to be noticed and she appeared in "Casey's Servants" as the waitress. She shows ability. The other two pictures, "Casey's Dream," and "Casey's Kids," are fair slapstickerings full of rough play and pokes; but without plot or cut comedy idea.

"Puppets of Fate."

IN THIS, the first of what promises to be one of the best series that has yet been placed on the market, the question under discussion is a serious one, and one of grave importance to the social institution of any country. The lack of restraint placed on members of the surgical profession in the matter of operating on members of their own immediate family is of no little consequence, and the example placed before the public in this production is an impressive one. It has been effectively staged by Lawrence B. McGill with Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore as the stars.

According to the story, a young doctor with his wife starts professional life in a small town. He is noticed by a wealthy widow who at once uses her arts of persuasion to lure him into her net. She has him appointed head of the hospital staff, and has almost succeeded in winning his affection away from his wife when the wife takes suddenly ill and insists that no one but her husband perform the operation on her head which is necessary. In his extreme nervousness the scalpel slips and she dies instantly. The close of the picture shows him living in a hovel, a victim of liquor.

It would be scarcely fair to pass this number over without a remark on the splendid work of Octavia Handworth as Sylvia, the wealthy widow. In this excellent exhibition of the picture art there seems not an inch of film too many; continuous action and consistent development are important factors.

"The Tight Rein."

"The Tight Rein," which, by the way, oversteps the first number in excellence of story, has been produced by Howell Hansel for the Arrow Film Corporation. In this instance the victims of circumstances are the son of a wealthy mill owner and a pretty young girl who works in the mills. The son, played by Tom Moore, works in his father's office, is paid no regular salary, and is supplied very sparingly with money. At a later date his father's action in discharging the girl he loves so incenses him that he takes money from the safe and goes away to the city in search of her, leaving a note for his father which states what he has done. After knocking about the city squandering the money, he happens on the girl in a restaurant where she is in company with a man who has ruined her; a fight ensues, and he flees with the girl to her apartment, where they are followed by the man, who shoots the girl and himself. An accusation is of course brought against the mill owner's son for murder.

The stories of both numbers have been written by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, and picturized by E. A. Bingham and Albert S. Levino.

"Social Pirates" Go Traveling

Director Horne and Company Make Two Round Trips to Seattle to Get Marine Views.

"WATER stuff" has a new meaning for Director Horne and the players engaged in the making of Kalem's series, "The Social Pirates," after completing two round trips on the boat between San Francisco and Seattle in order to get marine scenes needed for "In the Service of the State," a forthcoming episode.

"The weather man has no mercy on either the company's expense account or the feelings of the players," declared Director Horne at the completion of the second trip and on his arrival back in Los Angeles. When the party of twenty started it seemed that there would be no difficulty in securing all the scenes needed on the one round trip, it being the plan to stay over in Seattle for only a few days to secure scenes needed there and return on the same steamer.

But on the trip back to San Francisco the weather broke and the players were idle for practically the entire journey. There was nothing left to do but make one more trip to the Washington city and this became a round trip before the scenes were completed.

For the production of the "Social Pirates" episode Director Horne practically converted the boat into a studio. A full crew, including electricians and stage hands, were taken along and portable lights made possible the use of actual interiors in the boat. On the roster of the party were Marin Sais, Ollie Kirkby, Frank Jonasson, E. Forrest Taylor, R. E. Bradbury and R. L. Dell.

Unity Sales Corporation Organized.

One of the recent events in the film business is the formation of the Unity Sales Corporation, which may, without exaggeration, be said to mark a new ideal in the film industry.

The company is headed by Charles W. Allen, president and treasurer; Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager, and Arthur Rosenbach, secretary.

Briefly stated, the main purpose of the Unity Sales Corporation is to bring independent producers and independent exchanges together on a basis of general betterment.

The firm occupies a suite of offices in the Godfrey building, at Seventh avenue and Forty-ninth street, and are constructing a laboratory, which will be under the direct supervision of Messrs. Cobe and Rosenbach, who will personally examine every inch of film developed and carefully supervise every detail of the work, assuring exhibitors of an output of the highest standard.

The Unity Sales Corporation is now distributing "The Pursuing Vengeance," with Sheldon Lewis, based on the celebrated novel, "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," by Burton E. Stevenson. Another presentation of the new firm is Tom Terris in "My Country First," a Terris Film Corporation feature, a thrilling and realistic photoplay dealing with the present national crisis. Other productions in contemplation are "The Marathon Mystery," "The Gloved Hand," "The Destroyer," all by Burton E. Stevenson. Announcements will be made weekly of new productions. Trade showings will be given in the exhibition room of the executive offices of the company every Tuesday morning.

Three Coming Lubin Subjects.

"Otto the Hero," a new roar in the Davy Don series of one-reel comedies, is to be released May 22 by the Lubin Company through the General Film Company. The story as written by Jack O'Neill and screened under the direction of Edwin McKim devises new ways of making Mr. Don suffer on the screen for the entertainment of audiences. The supporting cast includes Patsy DeForest, Florence Williams, George Egan and Bernard Siegel.

"Prisoners of Conscience," three-act drama, directed for the Lubin Company, will be released May 25, through the General Film Company. The story is by L. V. Jefferson and Josephine McLaughlin, produced under the associate direction of Melvin Mayo. A young minister is thrown into love's crucible and is assayed pure gold. A physician errs through carelessness and death ensues. The act includes: Adda Gleason, Lucy Payton, Evelyn Page, Alan Forrest, Cecil Van Auker, George Routh and Ben Hopkins.

"Oh You Uncle," written by Bide Dudley and produced in one act by Clay M. Greene, will be released by the Lubin Company May 27, through the General Film Company. A festive bachelor with a sportive nephew seeks to conceal their proclivities from each other with a gay soubrette taking an active hand in the game. The cast includes: June Daye, Lenore Peacock, Edithe Peirce, Francis Joyner and Kempton Greene.

DURING THE ROUND UP (Biograph), May 8.—Lillian Gish and Henry B. Walthall head the cast in this one-reel D. W. Griffith reissue. The picture has the quick action and stirring episodes that gave these early Griffith productions their vogue.

SKIRTS AND CINDERS (Lubin), May 8.—D. L. Don again disguises himself in female apparel during the action of this one-reel farce, written by Rex Taylor. He becomes a sweet young thing and has a number of amusing adventures in a girl's seminary. Florence Williams, Patsy De Forest, Francis Joyner and George Egan help on the fun making.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 37, 1916 (Selig), May 8.—Opening of racing season at Hewlett Bay Park, L. I.; Flower Carnival, San Antonio; trial of power boats, Boston; Athletic Carnival on Franklin Field, Philadelphia; U. S. Troops in Mexico; Boat race, Annapolis, Md.; conference at Juraez, Mexico, between Obregon and Funston; Generals Scott and Funston, El Paso; President Wilson at Woman's League camp, Chevy Chase, Md.

THE DOUBLE-DOUBLE CROSS (Vitagraph), May 8.—Frank Currier is the author and producer of this one-reel comedy, and William Dangman has the star role. As Harold Hopeful he secures a situation in an office and helps to trap the dishonest confidential clerk. The offering is of average merit. Lucille Crane, Winthrop Mendell, Jessie Miller and William Lyttel, Jr., complete a competent cast.

THE TANK TOWN TROUPE (Kalem), May 9.—It is a bit odd to find two such excellent actors as Ham and Bud forced to become tank town troupers. But such is the positions they occupy in this one-reel farce. The further fact that their mishap will beguile more laughter than tears from the average spectator is a great point in the picture's favor. Norma Nicholls impersonates a stage-struck young woman who joins the same troupe, and is speedily cured of her desire to act.

NOT WHAT THE DOCTOR ORDERED (Kalem), May 10.—In this one-reel comedy, Ethel Teare plays the part of a nurse. She is not the one the doctor ordered for his patient, and has a most disquieting effect upon the young man's heart. The picture is amusing. Victor Rottman, Jack MacDermott, Gus Leonard and Myrta Sterling have the remaining roles.

A MIX-UP IN BLACK (Edison) May 10.—A young man who takes part in an amateur minstrel performance and is obliged to keep on his disguise after the show, supplies the motif in this one-reel farce. The complications are amusing and are handled deftly by Raymond McKee, Sally Crute, Gladys Gane, Mabel Dwight and Guido Colucci.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 38, 1916 (Selig), May 11.—Strikers parade, New York; open-air dancing, Portland, Ore.; dreadnaught Oklahoma goes into commission, Philadelphia; English women in munition factory; fire at El Paso; flood, Muscatine, Ia.; boat race between British middies, Portsmouth, Eng.; hospital scenes, El Paso; May Day parade, San Francisco; U. S. Troops in Mexico; scenes at Fort Bliss, Tex.

THE WATER CURE (Vim), May 11.—Plump and Runt attempt to deceive their wives in this one-reel farce in order to take a vacation at the seashore. The two worthies start a flirtation on the sands that leads to numerous comic mishaps. The regulation Vim speed is maintained throughout the picture.

A LUNCH ROOM LEGACY (Kalem), May 12.—Sis Hopkins tries her hand at running a restaurant in this one-reel comedy and hands out more laughs than properly-served orders. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of May 13, page 1179.

OUT AG'IN, IN AG'IN (Vitagraph), May 12.—John T Kelly, Kate Price, Jewell Hunt, Hughey Mack and Donald McBride make up the cast of this one-reel farce from the typewriter of George McManus. The situations are laugh-provoking and full justice is done to them by the company.

THE BRIDGE OF DANGER (No. 79 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Kalem), May 13.—Thanks to the nerve and skill of the road's star operator, another attempt at crime comes to naught. Helen Gibson seems capable of performing any hazard that the scenario writers devise in this case, a real thriller. She also shows steady improvement in her acting ability. Ray Watson, P. Pemberton and G. A. Williams are members of the cast. James Davis directed the picture.

JENKIN'S JINKS (Lubin), May 13.—Dave Reed, the author of this one-reel comedy, has built a neat story on the old superstition of a peacock feather bringing hard luck. The reel is full of diversified incidents, and is well acted by Francis Joyner, June Daye, Margaret Moore, John Shermer, Adelaide Hayes and Kempton Greene.

THE SHERIFF'S DUTY (Selig), May 13.—A Western drama written and produced by Tom Mix, this one-reel photoplay has the truthful picture of life in the open that is generally to be found in this release of Selig's. Joe Ryan, Pat Christman, Betty Keller and Sid Jordan comprise a well selected cast.

THE PRETENDERS (Vim), May 12.—Pokes and Jabs play the gentlemen referred to in the title of this one-reel farce. They steal an aerial torpedo from an aged inventor and try to sell it to the representative of a foreign government. The torpedo proves their Nemesis and blows them up. A quick moving farce that contains amusing situations.

General Film Company Specials.

THE ROGUE'S NEMESIS (No. 7 of "The Social Pirates"—Kalem), May 8.—A review of this picture was printed in the issue of May 13, page 1179. Marin Sais disguises herself very cleverly as a man and plays a jealous husband, to the undoing of a real husband, who is trying to prove false to a faithful wife. An excellent instalment of the George Bronson Howard serial.

A STRANGER IN NEW YORK (Selig), May 8.—Otis Harlan is the star of this three-reel farce founded on the play of the same name by Charles Hoyt. Mr. Harlan impersonates a breezy book agent, who comes to New York and gets Broadway to forsake its regular tipple for prune juice—a humorous conceit in itself. The fun is all as extravagant, and the comedian, who was the original stranger, moves smilingly through the picture, meeting every situation with easy audacity. Robert Bolder, John Charles, Emma Glenwood and Grace Darmond fill out the cast.

MERRY MARY (Biograph), May 9.—This three-reel comedy-drama starts off in the quiet atmosphere of Professor Noggs' home, an aged bookworm with a pretty young ward. The usual love story is introduced, also an escaped lunatic, who furnishes considerable of the fun as well as the excitement. The picture is a good representative of its class, the acting of Jack Drumeir, Vola Smith, Jose Rubin, Claire McDowell and Adelaide Wood being adequate.

CELESTE OF THE AMBULANCE CORPS (Edison), May 9.—While the battle scenes in this three-reel photoplay in which the heroine takes part are fictitious, they give an excellent idea of what the real thing is like. The story tells how a society butterfly is transformed into a noble woman through her experience as a Red Cross nurse. This timely subject is acted skillfully by Leonie Flugrath, Charles S. Sutton, Pat O'Malley, Paul Bliss, Harry Linson and Julian Reed.

A RETURN TO YOUTH—AND TROUBLE (Essanay), May 9.—The moral to this two-reel comedy-drama points out that one should grow old gracefully and not disgracefully, by leaving the straight and narrow path. The humor of the situations is as wholesome as the moral, and the entire play reflects a truth to life that makes it of real value. Harry Dunkinson, Lillian Drew, Edward Arnold and Frances Raymond are a quartet of experienced and talented actors, and have little difficulty in bringing out the points of the picture.

THE WHEAT AND THE CHAFF (Lubin), May 11.—Two brothers, one of whom shields the other from a charge of murder, are the leading characters in this three-reel drama of which Josephine McLaughlin is the author. The picture is a melodrama of modern life. A review of the play was printed in the issue of May 20, Page 1353.

THE JESTER (Essanay), May 13.—The hero of this three-reel photoplay is a wealthy young chap who thinks life is always a jest until a lady reporter writes him up and brings him to a realization of his worthlessness. He then starts at the bottom of the ladder in his father's steel works, helps the elder Blair beat the trust, and wins the love of the lady reporter. The picture has many entertaining qualities and the leading characters are well acted by John Junior, Gertrude Glover and William Burke.

THE ACCUSING VOICE (Vitagraph), May 13.—The interior workings of a newspaper office is shown in this three-reel drama by Ross D. Whytock. The reporter-hero uncovers a celebrated criminal case and secures a big "scoop" for his paper. A dictaphone contains the accusing voice. The picture is always interesting, and the excellent cast contains the names of Harry T. Morey, Belle Bruce, Robert Gaillard, Thomas R. Mills and Harry Davenport.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

NAKED HEARTS (May 29).—A five-part production suggested by Tennyson's "Maud." This picture will be found entertaining and especially pleasing to the eye because of the artistic manner in which it has been staged. Little Zoe Beeb, Gordon Griffith and George Hupp, all exceedingly talented children, hold the attention of the spectator during the first part of the production. Francelia Billington, playing the role of Maud in the later stages of the story, is very charming. A full review of this production will be found on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE ETERNAL SAPHO (May 7.—A five-reel offering with Theda Bara is a Sapho story that exploits the grip of passion on man and woman. It is not a wholesome story for screen use and we do not commend it as a good offering.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 71 (May 10).—Some interesting items of this number are the National Guard of New York opening a campaign for 3,000 new recruits, the opening of the racing season at Bluegrass track, Lexington, Ky.; Generals Scott and Funston conferring on the Mexicon situation; the annual Battle of Roses at San Antonio, Tex.

REEL LIFE (Gaumont), May 14.—This number includes excellent views of the Blackfeet Indians at Glacier National Park, in dancing and various native ceremonies. Also close-up studies of cuttlefish and ants. This is entertaining and has a strong educational value.

THE MAN WITH THE HOD (Vogue), May 16.—A farce comedy in which a young wife, bent on earning laurels in the art of painting, goes to the streets in search of a model. She finds an inspiration in the person of a hod carrier. Her husband coming home to find a strange man in his wife's private apartments, causes a rough house. This is only moderately entertaining.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN'S FIANCE (Beauty), May 17.=A pleasing comedy number, by Al Santell, featuring John Steppling, Carol Halloway, John Sheehan and others. This is full of bright, attractive scenes. The plot if anything, is a little too complicated; this, with the long subtitles, keeps the observer pretty busy. As a whole this is somewhat overcrowded, but superior to the average comedy in numerous respects.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (Gaumont), May 17.—No. 36 of the series. This pictures the great Mariposa grove in Yosemite National Park, where the trees are sufficiently famous as to have names. Also fine views of the Marced River rapids, Mirror lake and the Water Wheel falls. A splendid out-door scenic number.

NOSEY NED (Gaumont), May 17.—This, on same reel with above, is an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer. It pictures Nosey Ned's adventures at a baseball game. The expressions of the baseball crowd are funny and the action amusing.

STEPHEN'S SWEET SISTERS (Falstaff), May 20.—In this farce comedy Stephen has three pretty sisters, all of whom have beaus, much to the disgust of Bachelor Stephen. There comes a time, however, when Stephen changes his ideas on the subject of matrimony and decides to take a wife at any cost, in order that he may qualify for an inheritance which he will be obliged to share with whichever of his sisters marry first. This is fairly entertaining.

TWENTY MINUTES IN MAGIC (Beauty), May 21.—An Orral Humphrey production and a good one. Out of a position, a man goes to apply at the headquarters of a magician. What happened when he gained possession of a certain magical box is very amusing. This will be found to be an excellent farce comedy number.

THE CHINATOWN VILLAINS (Vogue), May 21.—A farce comedy of the usual sort. Considerable of the action takes place in an opium den where the young woman of the play is brought by an angry suitor and left bound hand and foot. Some good slapstick comedy is contained in this film, and many audiences would enjoy it.

THE POLITICKERS (Falstaff), May 22.—An amusing comedy, in which a rivalry between three middle-aged men for the office of mayor of the town proves beneficial to a pair of young lovers. One of these men is the father of the pretty maiden of the story, and is desirous that she marry a man of fifty. She has her own ideas on the subject, however, and wins her point when Dad believes that he has been elected.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE GULF BETWEEN (Mustang), May 12.—A two-part drama featuring Queenie Rosson and Perry Banks. The story of this picture contains a great deal of human interest, and treats of the trials of the daughter of a maker of counterfeit money. The girl, persecuted by her father's partner, marries the man she loves when her father and the partner flee their cabin for fear of a revenue officer, is discovered later by the partner, and pursued across country until she gives up in fatigue. She is rescued by a lone hillsman, and proceeds to tell her story. This will be found interesting.

THE JUNGLE OUTCASTS (Centaur), May 13.—Margaret Gibson, Wm. Clifford and others appear in this adventure story. The burning of the vessel at sea and casting off of the wife and child on a raft is realistically handled. Later they land on a desert island and the natives worship the mother as a White Spirit. The husband heads a rescue party and saves the mother and child from being devoured by wild animals. The Bostock animals make a good showing in this. The number is a very entertaining one of the kind.

THE PRETENDER (American), May 15.—An interesting two-part drama with Robert Klein, Lizette Thorne, Edward Coxen and George Field in the cast. The story centers about an attempt to ruin one of the big men of the wheat pit through persuading his daughter, on whose advices he relies that a certain business transaction would be of large benefit to him. This is done by means of a fake clairvoyant to whom the daughter is directed for advice. The scheme is detected just in time to prevent the transaction being carried out.

THE FLOOR-WALKER (Mutual—Chaplin), May 15.—This first two-reel offering, featuring Charlie Chaplin in his new affiliation, is very successful. He invades a department store and sets in motion at the very beginning some diverting small business, such as taking a shave at the counter, fitting a young lady with shoes, colliding with shoplifters, etc. The attempt to run down the escalator at the close, pursued by the angry manager, brings out shouts of laughter. The number will add to Chaplin's fame as an entertainer.

THE ISLE OF LOVE (Mutual Masterpiece de Luxe), May 15.—A five-part Gaumont production, the story of which was written by Paul M. Bryan and produced by Director Middleton, who has made considerable out of a not altogether healthy theme. Gertrude McCoy is the star of the production and plays fairly well a role to which she is not well suited, that of an actress of rather unstable character, who goes to the seashore to learn to play the part of a fisher lass, and cruelly lures into her net a young inventor and yachtsman. Some daring scenes have been interpolated here where the actress goes in swimming and upon emerging finds her clothes gone. Others of the cast are James Levering, Iva Shepard, John Clugston, E. O. Schenck, etc. Some of the scenes take place on a barren island where the actress is forced into marriage by the half insane lover.

THE ANSWER (Thanhouser), May 16.—An unusual two-reel subject, by Emmet Mixx, featuring Robert Whittier, George Marlo, the Fairbanks twins and others. The father of the twins is a fake spiritualist, who uses both girls to good advantage in carrying out his deceptions. While one is tied in a chair the other walks in the audience, being presumably an astral body. The first reel of this is exceedingly interesting. The second reel, while not so strong, serves to bring the story to a satisfying conclusion. A novel and entertaining subject.

FOUR MONTHS (American), May 18.—A strong three-reel subject, by Karl Coolidge, featuring Alfred Vosburgh, Vivian Rich and others. The wealthy young idler is informed by his physician that he has only four months to live. He employes his time in efforts at doing charitable work, stumbles into a nest of white slavers, and saves a girl from their toils. The scenes are true to life and carry conviction. The plot is complicated, but well-rounded and nicely worked out.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE, NO. 3 (Mutual Special Feature).—May 22.—In this chapter of the new serial Cleo Burke's scream upon finding her father dead is heard on the street by Gerald Morton, who enters and ministers to the unconscious girl. An attempt to incriminate Lieutenant Morton is made but is frustrated by Barbanacle, who removes the false clue before the authorities arrive. A sale of books belonging to the inventor is used to establish an intense situation in which, among others, a book containing the inventor's formula is sold. His daughter, in a mad chase hoping to arrive in time to prevent the sale of the book, treats the audience to a thrill in the shape of an automobile leap over a broken bridge.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE INNOCENT LIE (Famous Players), April 20.—In this five-part subject Miss Valentine Grant makes her debut in Famous Players subjects and creditably acquits herself. The story is rich in the atmosphere of old Ireland, from which the locale shifts to New York. The picture is reviewed on page 1349 of the issue of May 20.

THE POLICE DOG IN THE PARK (Paramount—Bray Cartoons), May 14.—C. T. Anderson's animated drawing, made at the Bray Studios, has laughable moments, though it does not equal some of the recent Paramount releases. Concluding the reel is a marked novelty in Ashley Miller's "Plastiques," a comedy study in plaster figures that move.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), May 14.—Preparedness again is given a prominent place in Paramount's screen magazine, the need for effective artillery being the point emphasized this time. Character building in children is admirably illustrated in the Better Babies Department. Good editorial judgment is being shown in the preparation of the Pictographs.

AMONG THE HEAD-HUNTERS OF LUZON (Paramount—Burton Holmes Travel Picture), May 15.—The photography in this number of the travel series is better than that in several of the preceding issues, whereas the material is continuously interesting. Instruction and entertainment are well combined in these pictures.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 36, 1916 (Pathe), April 26.—The May Day Labor parade in New York; the Chevy Chase camp, Washington, where women are training in the interests of preparedness; several views of athletic sports at the different universities, and the remainder of the regiment that held off the Germans at Verdun are interesting items of this number.

LUKE AND THE BOMB THROWERS (Phunphilms), May 8.—The scenes of this farce comedy take place for the most part in the rooms of a secret order of bomb throwers. Luke, by accident, gets into the place and is held bound, and eventually released by a brave comedy citizen who holds at bay the members of the order, who are forced to give up their firearms and proceed to the street, where they are handled by the authorities.

THE ASCENT OF MOUNT RANIER (Pathe), May 8.—A complete and exceptionally beautiful series of views of the beauties and difficulties encountered by tourists in ascending the beautiful Mount Ranier in the State of Washington. On the same reel with "Beautiful Lake Chuzenji."

BEAUTIFUL LAKE CHUZENJI (Pathe), May 8.—This subject consists of several beautiful views of a lake in Japan. It is on the same reel with the above.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 11 (Feature Film Corporation), May 8.—"The Saving of Dan O'Mara" is the title of this episode in which Dan O'Mara, a wood worker in a certain factory, feels himself forced to wrong doing because of the necessity of providing for a sick wife, figures. His daughter at work in the factory when Margery Golden comes to investigate as a means of diversion, saves Margery from being killed when Legar, who, for some reason or other, has gone to work in the factory, manipulates the machinery in such a manner that instant death might have been Margery's fate. The Laughing Mask, of course, takes a hand.

WHO'S GUILTY, NO. 1 (Arrow), May 8.—The first of this new series is entitled "Puppets of Fate," and deals with the problem of whether or not a doctor should be allowed under, any circumstances to operate on his own wife or any member of his immediate family. Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore are featured in this and in all of the complete stories comprising the series. Octavia Handworth also appears in the cast of this first number, and will attract considerable attention by the splendid manner in which she handles the role of Sylvia, a wealthy widow, in love with Dr. Bullard. A full review of this number will be found on another page.

THE GIRL WITH THE GREEN EYES (Gold Rooster Play), May 15.—This adaptation of the Clyde Fitch melodrama will be found exceptionally entertaining. Katharine Kaelred in the title role is truly delightful, while Julian L'Estrange and Edith Lyle and others of the cast also acquit themselves well. The story treats of how a wife became jealous of her husband's secretive attentions to another woman whom she is not aware is an unfortunate sister of his. The wife tries to poison herself and afterwards a reconciliation brings about a happy ending. Reviewed on another page of this issue.

WHO'S GUILTY, NO. 2 (Arrow), May 15.—The second of the series is entitled "The Tight Rein," and points out in a clear and consistent manner how innocent parties become the victims of circumstances. In this instance a poor girl is turned out of one position after another because a mill owner objects to his son keeping company with the girl. The girl becomes the victim later of one of the wolves of society, and is shot later by the man who also shoots himself, when she is about to be rescued by her former sweetheart. The mill owner's son flees in fear, and is later accused of the murder. An excellent number, of which a full review will be found on another page. Anna Nelsson and Tom Moore are the stars of the production. Reviewed on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corp.

THE LION AND THE GIRL (Keystone), April 30.—A lively story showing Joe Jackson in an entirely new role. In many respects out of the common.

GROUCHES AND SMILES (May 18).—This picture was originally scheduled for release on April 9 under the title of "Bill's Wife." It was later decided to withhold the release until a future date and to change its title to "Grouches and Smiles." A synopsis of the picture was published on page 317 of the April 8 issue, under the old title of "Bill's Wife."

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

CLAUDIA (Imp), May 21.—A comedy number, featuring Sydell Dowling, Stanley Walpole, Edith Roberts and Paul Kelly. Two couples get their love affairs mixed. The cast is pleasing and the settings are attractive, but the situations are not clearly set forth. A fair number.

LOVE'S TRIUMPH (Rex), May 21.—A good number, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and Joseph Girard. The sales girl borrows a gown from her employer to wear to a social affair. The close has something of a surprise in it. This is pleasing.

THE CELLULOID HERO (Nestor), May 22.—A comedy number, by Robert MacGowan, featuring Eddie Lyons, Betty Compson, Ethel Lynn and Lee Moran. The moving picture hero impersonates a crook. The real crook shows up and some amusing complications follow. A well-handled comedy of the farcical type.

MR. FULLER PEP (Powers), May 25.—A very amusing half reel presenting a new style of animated drawings, by F. M. Follet. Cutouts are employed in carrying out the action. Mr. Pep's swimming adventures are very funny.

HER HUSBAND'S WIFE (Nestor), May 26.—A comedy number, by Al E. Christie, featuring Harry Rattenberry, Neal Burns, Billie Rhodes, Ray Gallegher and Gus Alexander. The policeman and his son call on the commissioner's daughter and hired girl. The son is mistaken for a burglar. This is quite amusing and makes a pleasing number of the farcical type.

HARMONY IN A FLAT (Rex), May 26.—A comedy number, by Wm. Addison Lathrop, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and Charles Ogle. It pictures the experiences of two newlyweds in an apartment house; they are constantly annoyed by the noisy janitor, the iceman and others. This contains a good deal of quiet, effective humor.

THE STAGE VILLIAN (Joker), May 27.—An unusually funny burlesque number, featuring Gale Henry, Wm Franey, Lillian Peacock and others. The experience of the ham actors at the Pruneville boarding house and later in the burlesque melodrama, will bring much laughter from an audience.

WHERE ARE MY CHILDREN? (Universal Special), May.—An unusual five-part drama dealing with birth control and its abuse. The picture is bound to arouse interest and to excite comment. The Smalleys directed the production with Tyrone Power giving a forceful performance in the leading role. A review may be found on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

PEG O' THE RING (Universal Special), May 15.—This third episode opens with Peg and Dr. Lund, Jr., in the lion's den, where they have been cast by the Hindu and his gang. She is overcome by her abnormal obsession to tear things at twelve o'clock. Later the gang abducts her and imprisons Lund in a box car. He escapes and leaps to the passenger train, at considerable risk. The lions are released in the sleeping car and create a panic among the circus people. Peg is carried away by the Hindu and thrown into the den again and Lund in dropped through a trap door into the water below. The number is full of action and quite exciting, though it does not greatly advance the plot.

HALF A ROGUE (Red Feather), May 22.—An enjoyable five-reel screen adaptation of the famous "best seller" by Harold McGrath, featuring King Baggot, Edna Hunter, Clara Beyers and Joseph Castellaneous. Henry Otto adapted and directed the story and has provided numerous humorous touches and some very attractive scenes. The story itself is an interesting one, getting a very good start when the hero meets an actress in a Broadway restaurant. Her marriage to another later and the averted scandal growing out of this chance acquaintance constitute the main events. The political campaign is well handled, and certain amusing incidents save it from becoming too conventional. An entertaining feature.

THE HEALTH ROAD (Imp), May 23.—This features Bernard MacFadden, the physical culture expert, and Sanford Bennett, who is advertised as younger at 76 than he was at 50. There is a slight story, which finishes rather abruptly. The chief interest is in the two individuals mentioned. Something of a novelty.

THE LIMOUSINE MYSTERY (Victor), May 24.—A two-reel mystery offering, by Capt. Leslie T. Peacock, featuring Mary Fuller, Joseph Gerard, Tony Merla, Wm. J. Welsh and H. A. Busby. A woman is driven up to an apartment house in an automobile. She is taken out in a dying condition, as the result of a stabbing. The mystery is carefully worked out, and while the solution will perhaps occur to the average observer before the close, it compels interest just the same. An entertaining story of the type.

THE WEDDING GUEST (Bison), May 27.—A two-reel number with Mexican settings, featuring Harry D. Carey, Olive Fuller Golden, Joe Rickson and Peggy Coudray. The sheriff and another are rivals for the girl's hand. Jose wins her and the sheriff goes to intercept the wedding and arrest Jose. He arrives after the ceremony and spares the bridegroom. A pretty story of the romantic type, well pictured and abounding in good scenic effects.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 37, 1916 (Vitagraph), May 9.—Playgrounds on roof of Wanamaker's store, Philadelphia; dog show, San Francisco; launch of oil burning boat, Bath, Maine; U. S. troops in Mexico; university boat race, Oakland, Cal.; Mayor Mitchel rewards N. Y. fireman; President Wilson at Woman's Navy League camp; Raisin Day, Fresno, Cal.; artillery drill at Fort Sill, Okla.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 38, 1916 (Vitagraph), May 12.—Push ball at Troy, N. Y., school; Japanese in California; balloon ascension at moving picture show, New York; May Day, San Francisco (Mayor Rolph crowns the May Queen); ceremony at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York; Shakespearian fete, San Diego; pleasure boats carry guns, Milwaukee; Obregon at El Paso; war scenes in Mexico.

THE ORDEAL OF ELIZABETH (Vitagraph), May 15.—An exeeptionally attractive five-reel production featuring Lillian Walker, with a strong supporting cast of Vitagraph players. The story centers about a young woman who marries unknown to her people, and lives at home while her husband goes to the city to study. She afterwards falls in love with another man, who, learning from her of her former marriage, goes hurriedly abroad. In the meantime the husband is found dead in his studio, and she is accused of murdering him. The second man in the case arrives in New York just in time to save her from being convicted of murder. A very good story and well produced by Wilfrid North. Reviewed on another page of this issue.

World-Equitable.

SUDDEN RICHES (Peerless), May 15.—In every respect an excellent drama, showing that the inheritance of great wealth may be the ruination of a previously happy family. E. Richard Schayer wrote the story, which was directed by Emile Chautard and acted in the leading roles by Robert Warwick, Gerda Holmes, Clara Whipple and Madge Evans. A review appears on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA (International), May 8.—The third episode of the serial by Hereward Carrington and Charles W. Goddard fulfills the promise of the opening installments. The production is finely calculated to create an atmosphere of mystery. A review may be found on another page.

THE END OF THE WORLD (Great Northern), May.—A spectacular six-part picture based on the assumption that a comet collides with the earth, causing wholesale devastation. There is a first rate story, capably acted, and in the last two reels the happenings are highly sensational.

Director Robert Leonard has finished the filming of the five-reel comedy-drama "The Miracle of Ambrosia," in which Ella Hall is featured and supported by Adele Farrington, Betty Schade and Harry Depp. Leonard wrote the story especially for Ella Hall.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THAT SORT" (Essanay).

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, announces "That Sort," a five act photodrama taken from the play of Basil McDonald Hastings as Essanay's first feature release for June.

This is an unusually subtle drama for the screen, depending more for its interest on the clash of characters over internal emotions, rather than on external action.

Not that action is lacking, but it is the action of individuals under great stress of emotion and not violent physical clashes.

"That Sort" deals with a young woman of the stage, who has kept herself pure amid the temptations that beset her path. Finally she falls in love, to find that the man is not so serious in his intentions. He is young, capricious, of the wealthy class, and finding he can win her in no other way, marries her.

Scene from "That Sort" (Essanay).

He tires of his bargain; she is spoiled with petting and is wilful. He taunts her with buying her, so she hurls his jewels in his face and leaves him and her daughter.

Then comes the temptation through a man who has befriended her. She yields. The first step leads to others until she has become a notorious character. Finally she awakens to her ways. In remorse she tried to better her life and finally seeks her daughter. But her first husband will have none of her, and she, knowing the shame her life will bring her daughter, finally gives her up to save her from her own shame, though it breaks her heart.

The intensely emotional scenes are well carried out by Warda Howard, noted for her portrayal of emotional parts. She is ably supported by Duncan McRae, of the speaking stage, Ernest Maupain and John Lorenz.

The scenes are exceptionally beautiful, showing the cliffs of Dover, an English fox hunt, scenes on the Spa, along the Riviera, Monte Carlo, and the Imperator in mid-ocean and docking in New York, as well as scenes in London and Paris. These were taken by Director Charles J. Brabin before the outbreak of the European war and are worked into the picture with wonderful effect, fitting in perfectly with the play, a large number of the scenes of which take place in Great Britain and on the continent.

NIGHT PHOTOGRAPHY FOR "HAZARD."

For two full nights Helen Gibson and the company of players in the "Hazards of Helen" worked clear through to dawn at the Kalem depot-studio on what is probably the most extensive use of night photography ever employed for a short production. Kalem officials declare that the scenes secured are the best ever attained by night photography. "They are photographically perfect," declared an executive, "and certainly do provide a weird and effective background for the story."

Radium flares were the means used by Director Davis in taking the scenes, which were for the production of "The Capture of Red Stanley," a "Hazard" scheduled for release on May 27. Helen, night operator at the Lone Point station, sees suspicious characters running about in the dense darkness outside the station. Before she can secure help they have broken into the station and in a minute she is bound.

One of the most effective of the night scenes that follow shows a train approaching, the headlight of the locomotive alone piercing the darkness and growing in size until the engine has stopped alongside the camera. Some of the most daring riding she has yet shown on the screen is also included in Helen's contributions to this "Hazard."

FRANK MAYO IN DUAL ROLE.

"Shadows," the three reel Knickerbocker Star Feature scheduled for release on June 2, features Frank Mayo and Lillian West in one of the most absorbing dramas ever presented under the Knickerbocker brand. Mr. Mayo plays a dual role, the drama centering largely about the resemblance between a noted novelist and an unknown writer.

The picture is remarkable not only for its unusual story and the remarkable acting of the entire cast, but also for the scenes in which Mr. Mayo meets himself and changes identities with the clerk. The double exposures in these scenes have been most artistically made, and are pronounced by all who have seem them to be the finest examples of this difficult photographic feat. George Rizard is responsible for the exceptional camera work. Reaves Eason directed the production, which is from the Horkheimer studios at Long Beach, California.

"THE EYE OF GOD" (Bluebird).

Tyrone Power makes his second appearance in the Bluebird program as co-star with Lois Weber in a psychological drama of crime, entitled "The Eye of God," set for release June 5. It is a five-reeler and carries an intensely interesting story, devised by Lois Weber, and made from Miss Weber's scenario. Aside from contributing the literary factors, and acting in co-prominence with Mr. Power, the Smalleys made the production, thus giving Miss Weber a superabundance of credit for the feature.

While the play in no manner resembles "John Needham's Double," which brought such great credit to Mr. Power, earlier in the Bluebird program, "The Eye of God" carries the same atmosphere of psychic crime, plus mystery in connection with the actual perpetration of the deed.

There is originality in the method of presenting the story. The murderer is disclosed, at the outset, confined in his cell awaiting the foot-falls of his executioners. Then follows a series of pictorial revelations of the man's life and includes scenes showing the crime—but it is not revealed until the final passages just exactly how the murder was done.

While the story is intensely interesting and the details of cold-blooded murder for sordid gain are outlined in minute exactness, there is nothing repellant about it—just a fascinating story, told in an unusual manner and acted to the extreme of artistry by Mr. Power, Miss Weber, Chas. Gunn and Ethel Weber.

"THE LIGHTS OF NEW YORK" COMING.

The Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature announced for Monday, May 29th, is entitled "The Lights of New York." The story comes from the pen of Charles L. Gaskill and deals with life in New York's slums. Later we are taken into the society circles and given an idea of the manners and customs of the "Upper Ten."

Walter McGrail supports Leah Baird in the leading role. He is seen as a gangster who tires of his half sister, a trusting young girl, and decides to fit himself to enter society that he may be in a better position to carry on his dishonest purposes. He wins the love of a prominent society girl who, against her mother's wish, is about to marry the gangster, thinking him a man of honor. She is saved from this fate at the altar by the little girl he had deserted.

Adele De Garde plays the role of the sister. Arthur Cozine and Don Cameron are also seen in good parts and give good accounts of themselves.

"THE TEST OF CHIVALRY" (Selig).

"The Test of Chivalry" released Monday May 22, is a Selig Diamond Special produced by Wm. Robert Daly from the story written by Elizabeth R. Carpenter. This is one of the best Selig multiple reel dramas released through General Film Service. This is saying a great deal for the unusual excellence of Selig pictureplays in General Film Service has been noted and commended by exhibitors and film critics. Wm. N. Selig following his policy of having his leading and most versatile stars appear not only in spectacular feature productions, but in the Selig regular General Film program, cast for "The Test of Chivalry," such popular players as Fritzi Brunnette, Vivian Reed, Lillian Hayward, Edw. J. Piel, James Bradbury, Wm. Scott and Frank Clark.

Jack Ashton, in love with Pauline Grey, sacrifices that love when Pauline's parents tell him his position in life is not high enough. Jack becomes a mining engineer in the West. Robert Morris, aged and wealthy suitor, wins Pauline's hand. Eve Wilson, the unfortunate wife of a cruel husband, leaves the man and flies to Ashton for refuge. Through pity, Ashton takes the girl into his home as housekeeper, and so, unconsciously, wins her love.

Morris speculates in stocks and loses his entire fortune, and with the loss of his money, takes his own life. Pauline has never forgotten Jack Ashton and on the death of her husband, she writes him, telling him that she is waiting for him to return. Jack replies that he has won the love of Eve Wilson and that he cannot desert her. Suddenly summoned by a mine explosion, Jack leaves the letter and Eve reads it. She resolves that she will not stand between Jack and the woman of his choice. She writes him telling him that her husband has sought a reconciliation, and Eve then wanders homeless out into the world, while Ashton freed, joins Pauline.

TWO HOURS FROM EVENT TO THEATER SCREEN.

Manager Langsfeld of the Broadway theater, New York, recently wrote a letter of appreciation to Editor Mayell of the Pathe News for a remarkable bit of enterprise. On May 6 the annual police parade of the city of New York was held and only two hours after the parade a print of the Pathe News containing the event was being shown on the screen at the Broadway.

"BOBBIE OF THE BALLET" (Bluebird).

Louise Lovely, now fixed as a popular star on the Bluebird program, will make her regular appearance, on June 12, playing in "Bobbie of the Ballet," a role exactly suited to her charming personality, and one in which her abilities as an actress, along distinctive lines, will increase her vogue with followers of the films.

"Bobbie of the Ballet" deals, to a considerable degree, as its title suggests, with theatrical and stage life, but there is a counter element in the story that discloses the methods employed by idle-rich self-appointed humanitarians, pursuing their faddish mission of "social settlement work," with more harm than good resulting.

As a third and equally interesting element in the plot the simple and human side of a police-hunted criminal is disclosed in his direct application of the actual practice of humanitarianism in contrast and in opposition to the theories of the faddists.

Scene from "Bobbie of the Ballet" (Bluebird).

And running all through the five acts of the feature there is a strong moral lesson in the victorious struggles of a chorus girl who combats the wiles and intrigues that are directed to her undoing by her evil associates.

While it first serves its logical purpose as excellent entertainment, with thrills aplenty and exciting scenes galore, "Bobbie of the Ballet" has a good, wholesome lesson to convey to many elements that combine to form the various stratas of every day existence in every community.

"THE BEGGAR KNIGHT" (Lubin).

Apart from the worthy indigent who unfortunately are always a problem in larger cities, the existence of an organized association of beggars confronts municipal authorities as an underworld phase that flourishes under the eyes of the officials in spite of strenuous efforts to abolish systematized mendicacy.

There is always a leader who furnishes the brains and who maintains sway over the beggars' organizations by his ability to assist the members who are backed up by the police. Invariably this king of the beggars waxes wealthy on the tribute paid by his subjects and, in at least one big city, he is known by a select few as a prominent member of the business community.

The obvious possibilities presented by the subject for a screen scenario has been grasped by Captain Wilbert Melville, who has written and directed for the Lubin Company a two-act photodrama, "The Beggar King," in which the light is turned on one of the most curious departments of the great underworld.

John Cossar appears in the latest two-act Essanay offering with Joyce Fair, the 11-year-old leading lady. "Orphan Joyce" is the title.

VILLA CAPTURED IN PARAMOUNT-BRAY ANIMATED CARTOONS.

Through the intricacies of a controversy on "Preparedness" carried on between Colonel Roosevelt and William Jennings Bryan, Colonel Heeza Liar plunges straight into the heart of the Mexican situation and single-handed captures Villa, the bandit leader, in the twenty-first release of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons.

Dissatisfied over the attitude shown throughout the United States toward the question of armament Heeza Liar determines to secure information at first hand. To clear up the situation and become thoroughly informed as to the merits of both sides of the argument, he interviews first Colonel Roosevelt and later William Jennings Bryan. The former gives him a brusque and fiery interview on the necessity of preparing for war and Bryan weeps on his shoulder in a plea for peace.

Finding himself in practically the same state of mind in which he started out and unconvinced in either direction, Heeza Liar starts for the Mexican border to see the United States in pursuit of Villa. Five hundred dollars a minute, the Colonel learns, is spent by the United States government to maintain its army in Mexico. He immediately decides to serve his country by inventing a gasoline mule and a preparation from which to make gasoline at two cents a gallon. This done, he starts for the Mexican border carrying a bottle of the precious fluid in his pocket and finally capturing Villa.

MEXICAN AND GERMAN PICTURES PACK HOUSES.

One of the greatest demonstrations of drawing power of pictures, was that of "Across the Mexican Border," a two reel picture now playing the Marcus Loew circuit around New York. After contracting these pictures for 60 days, and realizing the exceptional pulling power this picture has, Mr. Loew immediately booked the picture for 40 days more in his Boston, Washington and Baltimore houses. These pictures are the only authentic ones taken since the recent invasion of American soldiers on Mexican soil. They show Villa, Carranza, Colonel Dodd and the American troops in action. Every foot of the picture is sensational, and interesting, and not a foot of it is gruesome.

These pictures were booked by Samuel Cummins, and are now being shown under the direction of the Beacon Film Co., of 220 West 42nd street, who have taken over this picture, and will book same in the future.

"Fighting the Allies," which is also one of the exceptional German war pictures, also being exploited by Samuel Cummins, is reported to be doing exceptional business in the middle west. Mr. Cummins intends to state right these pictures very shortly, as there has been a considerable demand for them all over the country.

"ARMADALE" (Gaumont).

Picturization of Wilkie Collins' famous novel "Armadale" which is to be released by the Mutual as a three-part feature, would be incomplete without the thrilling scene in which the false Allan Armdale locks the rightful bearer of that name in a stateroom of a sinking steamer and leaves him to his fate.

Under the able direction of Richard Garrick of the Gaumont-Mutual studios, these water scenes have been carried out with exceptional realism, despite the fact none of them were taken within a mile of a ship of any kind. All that Garrick did was to place the scenery necessary for the photographing of the scenes in the river near the shore and wait for the rising tide to come in and furnish the necessary realism.

Of course the players and the director, as well as the camera man had to work in water up to their shoulders, but any damage to their clothes, was quickly repaired by the tailor and the bills settled by the Gaumont-Mutual studios.

"A TEMPERANCE TOWN" (Selig).

"A Temperance Town," one of the late Charles Hoyt's best comedies with Otis Harlan in the role of "Mink Jones," will be released by the Selig Company through General Film Service on Monday, June 5. "A Temperance Town" will cause a riot of merriment the story hitting off as it does the rivalry between the "Wet" and the "Dry" factions in a small town. There is the village prescription writer, the village drug store, the members of the "vice investigating committee" and other types. There is a love story running through the plot. Mr. Harlan has been furnished with a strong supporting cast of players and the scenic effects in "A Temperance Town" are all that could be desired.

"THE CONDEMNATION" (Essanay).

This is a stirring drama of metropolitan life of today, with the lures of the cabaret and the danger to young married couples who make of life a mad whirl of pleasure. It is the story of two young people madly in love with each other, of a wife somewhat indiscreet and wilful and a husband with an overweening jealousy.

The couple live the life of the gay set. The wife still loves the flattering attentions of other men in a frivolous but not serious way, while the husband sulks over her popularity. Butterfly like, his jealousy pleases her vanity, and partly by her own actions and partly through the course of circumstance she is led into a seemingly compromising position.

Mad with jealousy the husband is about to commit an act that would have wrecked four lives, when he discovers his mistake. The wife is thoroughly frightened and awakens to her shortcomings as the man does to his foolish jealousy. Both learn their lesson.

Darwin Karr as the man and Nel Craig as the woman bring out the dramatic parts with great force.

"TWO ORPHANS" (Selig).

The Selig Polyscope Company announces the revival in three elaborate reels of Kate Claxton's "The Two Orphans." This production will be released through General Film Company's regular service on Monday, June 12. One of the most notable casts ever assembled in one motion picture production will enact the various characters which have made the play of "The Two Orphans" famous. The players include Kathlyn Williams, Winnifred Greenwood, Myrtle Stedman, Thomas J. Carrigan, Charles Clary, Adrienne Kroll, Lillian Brown Leighton, Frank Weed, James O'Burrell and others. Despite the fact that "The Two Orphans" is an unusual and expensive feature production, the play is to be released through General Film following the plan of William N. Selig to make Selig releases through General Film service, second to none in points of excellence.

"THE FIREMAN," SECOND CHAPLIN-MUTUAL.

Work on "The Fireman," second of the Chaplin-Mutual comedies, which goes to the public June 12, is rapidly nearing completion at the Los Angeles studios. With but one or two exceptions, all the exterior scenes have been taken. The film, it is expected, will be ready for the cutting room within the next two weeks.

Departing from his usual mode of procedure, Chaplin has worked into this production a number of unusually sensational scenes, which have been filmed on an elaborate scale. These scenes depict the burning of two houses, both of which had been condemned by the Los Angeles fire department. They were purchased outright by the management of the Chaplin-Mutual studios and destroyed by fire. For the filming of "The Fireman," the Mutual's comedian temporarily abandoned his usual screen make-up and in practically all of the scenes he appears in the garb of a fireman.

In the photographing of the scenes depicting the burning of the houses, as well as the numerous ones which take place inside a fire house, Chaplin had the assistance of several members of the Los Angeles fire department to help him out. One of the fire stations is located but a short distance from the Chaplin-Mutual studio and in it many of the scenes were filmed. Chaplin's antics on the fire pole, used by the firemen in sliding from the dormitory to the main floor at the alarm signal, furnish an avalanche of laughs.

Chaplin's entire company of players, engaged to appear in his support when he was signed by the Mutual, appears with him in his production. Edna Purviance, his charming young leading woman, has been cast for an interesting and highly important role, which she handles with her usual ability.

Eric Campbell, the "heavy" of Chaplin-Mutual comedies; Charlotte Minneau, Lloyd Bacon, Leo White and the others add materially to the laughable situations. In addition, about 200 "extras" were brought into play for the filming of the fire scenes, adding considerably to the realism of the production.

"FLAMES OF VENGEANCE" (Gaumont).

Miss Gertrude Robinson has always been known as a demure little screen star who has had parts fitted to her personality. Her ambition has asserted itself, however, and now her histrionic ability is being tested in more strenuous roles. The Gaumont company is just finishing a photoplay which offers Miss Robinson many chances to show her skill as an emotional actress. This is "Flames of Vengeance," a three-reel drama with melodramatic situations. Just as in some famous stage plays the heroine does not appear in the first act, Miss Robinson does not reach the screen until the second reel of "Flames of Vengeance."

The first reel gives the center of the stage to Miss Iva Shepard, who later is seen as the mother of the heroine. The story is that of a woman who breaks her engagement on her wedding day to marry the man she loves. She is disowned by her parents. Miss Robinson plays the daughter of this union. The man her mother jilted comes into her life in an unexpected manner. He is now a wealthy mill owner. When trouble arises at the mill the girl repays the man for the injustice her mother did him. She saves his life from infuriated strikers. It is in this episode of the drama that Miss Robinson rides atop a limousine going at a furious pace. The factory owner is played by Sydney Mason. He is co-star with her in this production.

Scene from "Flames of Vengeance" (Gaumont).

A fine Gaumont cast interprets "Flames of Vengeance" under the direction of Edwin Middleton. Among the principal players—in addition to those already mentioned—are John Reinhard, Miss Birsha Shepard, John Mackin, Albert Macklin, James Levering, Charles W. Travis and Miss Mathilde Baring. The photoplay will be released June 8.

"GOING STRAIGHT" (Fine Arts).

When the new Norma Talmadge picture is released by the Triangle in a few weeks it will be called "Going Straight." The working title, "Playmates," so given because of the presence of half a dozen Fine Arts kiddies in the cast, does not express the theme of the drama, which aims to solve the problem confronting a man of respectability who has a criminal past to live down. Miss Talmadge is the wife of the man, played by Ralph Lewis, and Eugene Pallette is a crook who lives by blackmailing his former pal. The Franklins, as is customary in all Triangle pictures in which the Griffith studio youngsters appear, are responsible for the "Going Straight" production.

Bernard McConville, the author, has provided a scenario that indicates great dramatic strength. His crook, Jimmy Briggs, recognizes in John Remington his former pal in many a dangerous and profitable job. Remington's wife was also a member of the gang but both are going straight when Jimmy comes into their life again. Cut backs emphasize the contrast between the old life of the Remingtons and the new. The element of suspense is said to be well developed in the action.

"Going Straight" is the fourth picture Miss Talmadge has completed since she went to the coast to join the Triangle players. "The Missing Links," "Martha's Vindication" and "The Children in the House" were the earlier releases.

"YELLOW AND WHITE" (Bluebird).

Rex Ingram has directed Violet Mersereau in another of his own scenarios. "Yellow and White" is the title, and the feature will be released on the Bluebird program within a few weeks. Miss Mersereau is declared to be better suited in the star role of "Yellow and White" than ever before in her screen career. The story deals with episodes transpiring in China and New York City, and carries some lavish scenes of Oriental splendors that make the picture rich in its environment.

"A WOMAN WILLS" (Sun).

From the way in which state rights buyers are purchasing the Sun Photoplay Co.'s latest release, "A Woman Wills," in which Elsie LeClaire is presented in the feature role, this picture seems to have made a decided hit from the start. A large number of the far western states have been disposed of and negotiations are on for many of the groups in the middle and eastern territories. Exceptionally favorable were the comments of the critics of the various moving picture publications when they reviewed it recently.

CROWDS FLOCK TO SEE BILLIE BURKE.

After finishing the "count-up" of the day's receipts at the close of the day's business on Monday, May 8th, the manager of every theater fortunate enough to have arranged for a preservice showing of the new George Kleine motion picture novel, Scene from "A Perilous Love" (Kleine).

"Gloria's Romance," in which Billie Burke is the featured star, sighed happily and tucked away a deposit slip in his bankbook that has seldom been equaled. That magic name of Billie Burke, in electric lights over the theaters in Chicago, Denver, Minneapolis, San Francisco, Kansas City, St. Louis, Washington, D. C., and Salt Lake City running "Gloria's Romance," proved even more potent than astute managers thought possible and a number of houses broke their highest previous record for a single day's takings.

Though advertised not to open until 11 o'clock, Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Studebaker theater, in Chicago, was besieged by a throng of several hundred eager motion picture fans as early as ten o'clock. A waiting line stood in front of the box office all day and during the early hours of the evening the jam extended clear out on to the sidewalk on Michigan avenue. A tremendous business was done by the Arcadia in Philadelphia all day long, and similar reports was received from the Isis in Denver, the Tivoli in San Francisco, the American in Salt Lake City and the New Palace in Minneapolis. The Garden in Washington, D. C., had top-heavy business from the hour of opening until late at night, and a waiting line formed before both Kings and the Columbia in St. Louis, while the Willis Wood in Kansas City came dangerously close to breaking all previous records for a single day's admissions to that theater.

Though the manufacturer had all along proclaimed that "Gloria's Romance" would differ from all previously motion picture novels in being sane and rational in every scene, with no dependence on the spectacular or sensational to draw the crowds, happy, satisfied audiences went away from the theaters in every city, loud in their praise of the picture as a whole, undoubtedly interested in the adventure that had already befallen Billie Burke as Gloria, and anxious to see how she would escape from the Everglades in the next chapter of the story.

BURGER ENTOUR.

J. K. Burger, manager of exchanges, of the International Film Service, Inc., left on Monday, May 15, for a week's trip to Pittsburgh, Chicago and St. Louis, where he is called on business matters in connection with the unprecedented booking of the "Mysteries of Myra" feature series. On a recent trip to Boston Mr. Burger booked additional business to the amount of thirty-nine thousand dollars.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

MARGUERITE CLAYTON, Essanay leading lady, has undertaken her first venture in light comedy. "Putting It Over," a two-act piece built on several laughs is her introduction to this type of screen play. Harry Beaumont plays opposite her, it also being the first time these two popular Essanay leads have played in the same piece. Miss Clayton started her motion picture career in plays with western themes at the Essanay California studios. She then came to the Chicago studios and played leads in straight dramas, among them numerous features.

Mitchell Lewis, who will be remembered by theatergoers for his excellent characterization of the big Indian in "The Squaw Man," in which William Faversham played the title role, has been engaged by Metro for a similar role in "The Flower of No Man's Land," in which Viola Dana is starred. Mr. Lewis was associated with Miss Dana's sister, Leonie Flugrath, in "The Squaw Man," it being her first appearance upon the speaking stage.

* * *

Active work has been started on "The Valiants of Virginia" under direction of T. N. Heffron, of the Selig company. This is a picturization of the popular novel of the same name by Hallie Erminie Rives. The film will follow the novel closely. A strong cast has been selected headed by Kathlyn Williams. Arthur Shirley will enact the role of John Valiant, the young scion of wealth who sacrifices his fortune to save the family name from dishonor. Other important roles will be enacted by Edward J. Peil, Edith Johnson, James Bradbury and Al W. Filson. For the first time in over thirty years James Bradbury will don black-face make-up, when he enacts the role of "Jeff," the old negro servant in "The Valiants of Virginia."

Grace Wilson, the little star of the Fine Arts studio, in Los Angeles, has become a Mutualite, having been secured for important parts in Horsley-Mutual productions. Her first appearance will be in a two-reel drama now being prepared for the screen by Theodosia Harris, of the Horsley-Mutual scenario department.

* * *

Director William Worthington is filming "They Wouldn't Take Him Seriously," a two-reel comedy-drama featuring Herbert Rawlinson, with Agnes Vernon opposite. Others in the cast are Jean Hathaway, Betty Schade and Charles Gunn. The story is by Ben Cohn of the Universal scenario staff and is written particularly for Rawlinson. It will be another week before the production is completed.

* * *

E. H. Calvert, Essanay heavy, who has not appeared in pictures since "Vultures of Society" and "Beyond the Law," both issued more than two months ago, will be seen again in "According to the Code," a five-act feature, which he directed. Lewis S. Stone and Marguerite Clayton play the leads.

A Mayor on Censorship

Mayor of Plainfield, N. J., Leighton Calkins, Officially in His Message to the City's Common Council Depreciates the Cry for Local Censorship—Points Out Its Uselessness and Its Harm—Other News Items.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Special Correspondent, 51 Strand Theater Bldg., Newark, N. J.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.—Mayor Leighton Calkins, in his message to the Common Council of Plainfield, has this to say in regard to censorship of the motion pictures:

"It is my belief that it would not be to the interest of the proprietors of show houses or of the public to have municipal censorship. Logically, this leads to censorship of everything written, published or presented, including art generally. I do not think the people are yet prepared to choose censors to decide what they may see and what they may read."

The mayor admits, however, that there are many objectionable exhibitions at the Plainfield amusement resorts, and in a letter to the proprietors of the theaters and motion picture houses, he asks the moving picture owners to cut out all the indecent and suggestive pictures. He further warns the theater managers that if the practice of showing objectionable pictures continues, he may be called upon to revoke some licenses.

Proctor's in Patriotic Service.

Newark, N. J.—F. F. Proctor donated the use of his magnificent Palace theater, 116 Market street, to the Committee of 100 on May 1, when exercises in connection with the opening of the city's anniversary celebration were held. The theater was donated free of all charge, although it was necessary to do away with the regular Monday matinee. The men in charge of the local Proctor house are Lewis R. Golding, manager, and R. J. O'Crowley, Jr., assistant manager.

Censors Reject Pictures.

Bloomfield, N. J.—The Bloomfield Board of Censors has made a complete statement of the work done since its organization March 1. It has examined 98 feature films, of which 63 have passed, 19 have been questioned, and 16 totally rejected.

The pictures in a majority of cases have been shown to the board at special performances. In one of the theaters, four pictures were rejected in one week, and seven in another in two weeks. In every case but one the theater managers have not shown rejected pictures. The Town Council has notified the owners of the theater which ignored the board's ruling that if the orders are not obeyed, punishment will be meted out to the offenders.

Law Enforcement Asked.

Jersey City, N. J.—Supreme Court Justice Francis J. Swayze has laid the matter of admitting children under sixteen years of age in the motion picture theaters of Hudson county before the grand jury. The report was made by Commissioner of Public Safety Frank Hague.

Mutual Office Enlarged.

Newark, N. J.—The Newark branch of the Mutual Film, at 25 Branford place, have entirely renovated and improved the place, as well as considerably enlarged it. The business of the exchange, under the capable management of Lynn S. Card, has improved tremendously, and the increased quarters are due to Mr. Card's efforts.

Mr. Card reports that advance bookings on the "Secret of the Submarine" augurs well for that serial. Private showings of the film have been given at the Goodwin, Newark; Orpheum theater, Jersey City; Regent theater, Paterson; and one last week at the Paramount theater, Newark. Mr. Card also reports exceptional business on the Chaplin-Mutual releases.

Unicorn Opens Office.

Newark, N. J.—The Newark branch of the Unicorn Film has opened at 55 Strand theater building. The manager of the latest addition to the film exchanges of Newark is C. J. Straehle, formerly manager of the Star theater, 650 Bergen street. Mr. Straehle reports good business for the initial week.

Gerstein with Universal.

Newark, N. J.—Harry Gerstein, who comes here from the Comique theater, New Bedford, Mass., has joined the Universal Film, at 286 Market street. Mr. Gerstein assumes an inside job.

Olympia Reopened.

Newark, N. J.—The Olympia theater, Norfolk and South Orange avenue, has been reopened as a motion picture house by Mr. I. Spitz. General program is given.

Fire at Walnut.

Newark, N. J.—A recent fire at the Walnut theater, 214 Walnut street, did $150 damage to the box-office. The manager of the house, Max L. LeBow, stated that the cause of the fire is unknown.

Lyceum Dream Closed.

Newark, N. J.—The Lyceum Dream, at 385 Springfield avenue, has closed down. The place was under the management of Bruce Smith.

Weizel Builds House.

New Brunswick, N. J.—Charles Weizel, the present owner of the Grand theater, Perth Amboy, N. J., is building a new motion picture house on Albany street.

Dreamland Is Closed.

Newark, N. J.—The Dreamland theater, Prince street and South Orange avenue, has closed down. A new brick structure is being erected in its place.

ALBANY TO HAVE NEW THEATER

Messrs. Suckno Have Purchased Property on South Pearl Street.

ALBANY is to have one and possibly two new theaters. Samuel and Moses Suckno, proprietor and manager respectively of the White Way moving picture house at 158 South Pearl and the Park theater at 453 Madison avenue, have purchased the property at 116 South Pearl street, a few doors south of Van Zandt street, on the east side of the street, and adjacent property in the rear, and will build here an up-to-date moving picture house, capable of seating almost 1,000 persons. It will extend from South Pearl street through to Mosher street.

Looking for Theater Site.

Marcus Loew has had an agent in Albany for the past several days, according to information in theatrical circles, who has been looking over possible sites for one of the Loew theaters.

After studying the amusement situation in Albany the agent of the Loew enterprise is said to have been favorably impressed with conditions here.

Plan Two Troy Theaters.

Troy, N. Y.—A new first-class theater not far from Franklin square.

A new first-class moving picture house in the same locality.

The sale of the Cohoes opera house lease by Proctor interests to William Beattie.

The above is a summary of the activities in the amusement enterprises about here this week. The Cohoes opera house has been showing pictures and it is understood will continue to do so. Louis Buettner is the new manager.

L. M. Hall, manager of the Novelty theater, and interests represented by him, have a project under way for the building of a new and enlarged theater on the site of the Novelty on River street.

L. A. Beuttner Coming to the Fore.

Cohoes, N. Y.—L. A. Beuttner, manager of the Majestic theater, Cohoes, N. Y., has finally received the reward which is his due. With financial assistance he purchased the lease and property of Cohoes Amusement Company, operating the Majestic theater, and also the lease of the Cohoes opera house, formerly held by Mr. D. Corr. Mr. Beuttner is vice-president of the New York State organization M. P. E. L., also president of Troy Local No. 71. All of his friends are hoping that his success will be doubled in the future.

New Manager at Kieth's Theater.

Troy, N. Y.—Chester Fenyvessy, for the past four years manager of Keith's theater in this city, concluded his duties tonight and will leave for Jamestown, N. Y. in a few days, where he will manage the Lyric theater. Mr. Fenyvessy has many friends in Troy who regret his departure and wish him success in his new position. Mr. Fenyvessy's successor at Keith's is W. J. Melarkey, a young man of pleasing personality. He has had considerable experience in the moving picture business and comes to Troy from New York, where he was assistant manager of the Academy of Music. Mr. Melarkey has also been connected with houses in Rochester, N. Y., and Sayre, Pa.

Proctor's Discontinues Vaudeville.

Schenectady, N. Y.—Proctor's theater, Schenectady, is now devoted to straight picture policy, vaudeville being discontinued. It is rumored that Proctor's New theater, Troy, N. Y., will also change its policy to straight pictures in the near future.

Philadelphia Notes

Out-of-Door Exhibitors Hereabouts Hoping for Good, Dry Airdome Summer—Wilmington, Del., Exhibitors Relieved from Quarantine—Summer Films at Philadelphia's Casino—Other Local Notes of Interest.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The majority of Philadelphia's pleasure parks, such as Willow Grove, Woodside and Point Breeze, have been opened to the public during the past week and the most satisfactory conditions are reported as having been experienced, due largely to the splendid weather which has prevailed of recent date. Critics the country over seem to be unanimous in declaring that this summer season should prove a banner one for recreation centers, and the proprietors of moving picture theaters within the park zone are preparing for a successful season. Considerable new equipment has been installed and the exteriors and interiors of the theaters have been painted and otherwise made pleasing to the eye, until a maximum of perfection has been attained.

Quarantine Raised.

Wilmington, Del.—Proprietors of moving picture theaters located in the city of Wilmington, Del., were recently much delighted when they received word from the municipal authorities that the quarantine which had been placed upon all places of public amusement was declared void. An epidemic of smallpox had created such a reign of terror and was spreading with such rapidity that it became absolutely necessary to take some definite action toward protecting the community. The result was the quarantine of all places of amusement, the moving picture theaters being forced to close their doors for several weeks.

Summer Films at Casino.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Moving pictures will be inaugurated at the Casino theater, Philadelphia's famous burlesque house, Eighth and Walnut streets, during the summer season, commencing Monday, May 15. Films on preparedness will be exhibited for some time and prominent speakers will add to the entertainment and education of those who attend.

Will Enlarge the Coliseum.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Bids are being received for the building of an addition to the Coliseum theater, Fifty-ninth and Market streets, and for the making of many alterations. The Hoffman Company are the architects and Frank G. Stewart and Ketcham & McQuade are estimating.

L. A. Farrel Prospers.

Carbondale, Pa.—L. A. Farrel, well-known exhibitor of Carbondale, Pa., announces having experienced a large increase in patronage of recent date and declares that it is his intention to make extensive alterations and improvements to his theater. With this object in mind he recently purchased considerable new equipment from the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street.

The Bio Reopens.

Jersey Shore, Pa.—The Bio theater, Jersey Shore, Pa., recently reopened after having been closed for several months during extensive alterations and improvements. New upholstered seats were installed, a new floor covering put down, a latest model screen installed and two new projecting machines erected in the operating room. J. E. Dorey, the proprietor, has contracted for a line of new releases.

Jack Greenberg Hustling.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Film interests in Philadelphia may be pleased to know that Jack Greenberg, a well-known member of Local No. 307, has been experiencing considerable success while on the road with "The Christian" and "The Avenging Conscience."

CALIFORNIA NOTES.

By T. A. Church.

Progressive Doings.

San Francisco, Cal.—Herman Wobber, who has charge of the interests of the Progressive Motion Picture Company in the eleven far western states, returned recently from a trip to the Pacific Northwest.

J. W. Allen recently made a flying trip to Humboldt County and succeeded in securing a number of contracts for Paramount service. J. Vansant, Jr., of the Empire theater at Eureka, signed a contract for one year's service.

F. S. Fountain, manager of the Seattle branch of the Progressixe exchange, was a recent visitor here, making a short stay.

Imperial Features Anita King.

San Francisco, Cal.—Anita King, "The Paramount Girl," arrived here from Los Angeles a short time ago and has been appearing on the stage of the Imperial theater in connection with the film production in which she is being featured, entitled "The Race." While here she will speak before several women's clubs on the subject of local consorship and will also labor to induce young girls not to go to southern California to seek work in the studios unless they are fitted for the work and have ample funds.

San Francisco Newslets.

The Grand Theater Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $20,000 by R. A. Floodberg, C. R. Wright and R. M. Tapscott to conduct the Grand theater in the Mission District as a moving picture house, this theater having been taken over recently.

Edward H. Kemp has furnished a Motiograph outfit to the H. Liebes interests which will shortly send a fur trading vessel to the Arctic.

W. R. McArthur, general sales manager of the American Photo Player Company, is expected home shortly from a business trip to New York.

Louis Hyman, of the booking department of the All Star Feature Distributors, has returned from a trip along the Northern California coast.

Features and Programs in Baltimore.

The management of the Eureka theater, 400-4 S. Front street, has arranged a program made up entirely of features for the whole week beginning May 8th.

Manager Guy L. Wonders of the Wilson theater, Baltimore and Gay streets, has booked a return engagement of "The "Yellow Passport," featuring Clara Kimball Young, for Saturday, May 13th.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

The Mutual Chaplin release entitled "The Floorwalker" has been booked for the same week by Loew's Hippodrome, Pearce and Sheck's Victoria and Lubin's theater.

Manager J. J. Hartlove of the Crescent, 1110-12 South Charles street, entertained 300 boy scouts on Monday, May 8th, at the matinee. The subject shown was "The Battle Cry of Peace."

The management of the Great Wizard theater, 30 West Lexington street, has booked the big Mutual continued film, entitled "The Secret of the Submarine."

Maryland Licenses

State Comptroller Hugh McMullen Has Drafted New Set of Revenue Laws of Interest to Theaters—Annual License Fees Increased—Rates Set by Seating Capacity—Performers Also Taxed.

By J. M. Shellman, Special Correspondent, 1982 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—State Comptroller Hugh A. McMullen of Maryland has drafted a new set of revenue laws which will become effective June 1st. By this new set of laws theaters of all descriptions, actors, vaudeville performers, circus riders, etc., will be subjected to the tax, as will many other lines of business. Approximately $300,000, it is estimated, each year will be added to the state treasury.

The provisions in the new laws are as follows:

Moving picture theaters (per annum fees), seating capacity less than 200, $15; seating capacity of more than 200 and less than 300, $30. This tax is on the ascending scale, the highest tax being $100 for theaters having a seating capacity of 1,000. In cases in which the exhibitions do not exceed three each week, the fee shall be one-half that for theaters giving a performance each week day. In cases in which the exhibitions are given in conjunction with the sale of patent medicines the license fee is $50 per week.

Any person or company of stage players, ventriloquists, sleght-of-hand performers, rope dancers, tumblers and wire dancers, $50 per annum, or $2 for each exhibition in each county.

Circus riders or equestrian performers, $50 per annum in each county.

Animal shows or natural or artificial curiosities, $20 per annum in each county.

Each theater in Baltimore, $200 per annum, issued ratably, or $5 for each night of performance, for license to exhibit as ventriloquists, etc.; for circus or equestrian performers, $100 per annum; to exhibit animals, curiosities, etc., $50 per annum.

Premier Organ Recital.

Baltimore, Md.—The premier recital on the first and only Kimball orchestral organ in Baltimore, which has just been installed in the Mt. Royal theater, 617 West North avenue, took place on Monday, May 8. Frederick W. Wolf, who is the dean of organists of Baltimore, and who for 25 years has played at Grace and St. Peter's churches, of this city, was engaged by the management to render the initial concert. When asked later as to his opinion of the organ Mr. Wolf stated that the instrument is a superb, modern, up-to-date organ for motion pictures and the compositions of the master musicians could be rendered with great facility upon it. Mr. Wolf is not connected with any organ firm.

Organ for Rialto Theater.

Baltimore, Md.—Myer Fox, president of the Mt. Royal and Linden Amusement companies, announces that they expect to install a Kimball orchestral organ in their new theater, the Rialto, which is now under construction.

Plum Hunters See Governor.

Baltimore, Md.—Three people are to be appointed to the Board of Moving Picture Censors. The term of office is to be three years and the salary $2,400 a year each, paid by fees.

Also there are to be three Examiners of Moving Picture Operators, paid by fees. And as one Baltimore paper aptly puts it, they "should know a moving picture from a hayrake."

Orpheum Theater Eentertains.

Baltimore, Md.—Manager Schaeffer of the Orpheum theater, East Baltimore St., at The Fallsway, entertained 1,600 boys and girls at a special performance on Thursday afternoon, May 4th. The program included moving pictures and vaudeville. The children were from the Betsy Levering Sheltering Home and the Talmud Torah Free School.

Baseball Park Airdome Opens.

Baltimore, Md.—On Friday, May 12th, a motion picture airdrome will open to the public at Oriole Park, which was formerly Federal League Park. The new airdrome will be under the management of S. B. Cook, who states that he has arranged to show his patrons best features that can be obtained. Metro and World Film features will be included in his program. The time of the performances will be 7.45 P. M. until 11 P. M. Rain will not be an annoyance on account of the covered grandstands, and smoking will be permitted. New machines have been installed and the screen has been built just back of the home plate.

Richmond Va. Council Has Censor Ordinance

Alderman Paul Introduces New Measure to Provide a Censor Board for City—Mayor Said to Oppose It.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington, D. C.

RICHMOND, VA.—The exhibitors here are watching with a great deal of interest the new ordinance providing for the censorship of motion picture films which was last week introduced at the session of the ordinance committee of the council, and which will receive consideration at the next meeting.

This new ordinance provides that the board of censors shall have a membership of three commissioners to be residents of the city and one of them is to be a woman. All must have suffcient education and experience and they are to be appointed by the judge of the Hustings Court for a term of three years and at a salary of $1,200 a year.

No film may be exhibited unless the same shall have first received the approval of the board, which approval is to be shown in printed letters upon the screen at each show. A fee of fifty cents is to be charged for every reel passed upon by the board.

The board is to make annual reports to the City Council, giving the details of its work for the year. The commissioners are each to give the usual oath and furnish bond in the sum of $1,000. They are to be allowed the sum of $300 annually for expenses.

An appeal may be taken to the judge of Hustings Court in the event of a difference of opinion arising between one of the members of the board and the manager of a theater. Failure to display the sign of approval of a film given it by the board will subject the offending exhibitor to a fine of from $5 to $10 and for the presentation of an unapproved film the justice of the police court may impose a fine ranging from $50 to $100 for each offense.

Mayor Ainslee of Richmond, looking at the matter in the proper light, is not inclined to favor this legislation, feeling as he does that the police have sufficient power to censor such films as may need such supervision. He was invited to attend the hearings; but was unable to do so, sending, however, a letter in which he declared it to be his belief that the original measure was impracticable and saying that he did not think that additional legislation for the control of motion pictures in this city was necessary.

Alderman Paul is sponsor for the measure. It is said that the whole proposition is the result of a newspaper attack on the pictures resulting from a disagreement.

Corbin Shield to Manage the Strand.

Richmond, Va.—The Strand theater was reopened last week under the direction of Jake Wells with the Paramount program. The Little theater, which adjoins the Strand, and which is also one of the Wells Houses, has been reopened with General Film program. During the period that these houses were closed they were redecorated and put into excellent shape.

Corbin Sheild, reported last week as having accepted the position of manager of the Peabody theater, in Baltimore, Md., has returned to Richmond as manager of the Strand theater. He had actually gone to Baltimore and had entered upon his new duties when the offer of the position as manager of the Strand came to him.

Local Theater Notes.

Richmond, Va.—Of interest to motion picture exhibitors and exchangemen doing business with Hopewell, Va., is the new service of the Southern Express Company which was put into operation last week. A through train now runs between Richmond and Hopewell, leaving the former place at 1:15 p. m. daily.

Roanoke, Va.—Mr. and Mrs. Elmore D. Heins announce the recent arrival of Miss Gretchen Heins. Mr. Heins is the motion picture king of Roanoke.

Danville, Va.—The Strand theater here, operated by Pryor Bros., was closed last month.

Newport News, Va.—E. T. Craal, who operates the Imperial theater here, recently observed the spring clean-up week by redecorating his house. This was the first theater in this section of the South to install a modern ventilating system. The house is about a year and a half old.

Hit at "Nation" Film

An Attempt to Have Congress Prohibit "The Birth of a Nation" Not Only in the Capital City but Throughout the Country—Resolution Offered by a Congressman from Ohio and One by a Congressman from Pennsylvania.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Every possible effort is being made to have Congress enact legislation which would prohibit the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation" anywhere in the United States, but particularly in the City of Washington, where it has enjoyed a very successful run covering a number of weeks. One resolution was by Congressman Henry I. Emerson, of Cleveland, Ohio, who offered to the House of Representatives last week a House Joint Resolution No. 221, "To instruct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to forbid the display of 'The Birth of a Nation' in the District of Columbia," which reads as follows:

Whereas, The picture known and styled "The Birth of a Nation" has a tendency to, and does engender prejudice against colored people; and

Whereas, It is best that prejudices between the colored and white races should be eliminated as far as possible; therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be instructed to issue orders forbidding the display in any show house of the District of Columbia of the picture known as "The Birth of a Nation."

Another resolution was by Congressman Benjamin K. Focht, of the Seventeenth Pennsylvania District, who takes exception to the picture because, as he puts it, it "maligns and monstrously libels and traduces the memory of one of the Nation's greatest statesmen and patriots, former Congressman Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania. This resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Congress of the United States that the picture exhibition entitled the "Birth of a Nation," now being presented in Washington, is largely immoral and untrue to history, and maligns and monstrously libels and traduces the memory of one of the Nation's greatest statesmen and patriots, former Congressman Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania. In response to a common demand the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are therefore called upon to suppress the invidious portrayal in which the immortal Lincoln and Grant are introduced as a mask and palliation of the evident real purpose of the picture, believing that a further exhibition can only tend to arouse and perpetuate the sectional hatred so unhappily born of civil strife, and which all true Americans hope to see buried in the love of a reunited country with all animosities forgotten and former enmities forgiven. We the Congress of the United States, further voice the sentiments contained in an editorial written by Howard E. Butz, and published in Huntingdon, Pa., Globe, of May 4th, 1916, which reads as follows:

"We witnessed the production of the play, 'The Birth of a Nation.' It is a stupendous production, one of the biggest things ever put on the American stage, but the blight it puts upon the life of Thaddeous Stevens is rank, outrageous, and as black as hell. We do not wonder that the people of Lancaster, headed by Congressman Griest, prevented the production of the play in that city, where the great Commoner and the founder of the public school system of Pennsylvania spent so many years of his great and useful life."

The calendar of Congress is already badly overcrowded with all sorts of legislaion so that there is very little possibility of either of these resolutions ever receiving even the slightest attention at this session.

NEW INTERNATIONAL OFFICE.

Manager Wathne in Bright Quarters—Has Lively Corps of Assistants.

Washington, D. C.—The International Film Service, Inc., is now well established at 712 street, Northwest, where the entire second floor of the building is occupied as the home of "The Mysteries of Myra," and the distributing point of the Powers and McManus cartoons.

This is one of the best equipped exchanges in the city. It is well illuminated, for there is a wide expanse of glass both at the front and at the rear of the floor. There are two entrances to the exchange. The one leads to a reception room where Manager Fritz B. Wathne and his secretary hold forth. Beyond this and occupying the other half of the front is the private office. These two are separated from each other and from the balance of the place by a wood and glass partition.

Manager Fritz B. Wathne.

The next section is subdivided by a low fencing, and one half is utilized by the booking department, the other by the bookkeeping and correspondence departments. These, with the manager's office and the reception room, are equipped with attractive quartered oak furnishings and everything is spic and span and up to the minute.

These spaces occupy about one-half of the floor. The balance is occupied by the shipping and poster room, while some little space is fenced off at the rear for the inspection and rewinding room. This is a very bright place, for there are a number of windows there. In the main part, the walls are covered with racks for the storage of paper. At one end there is a good sectional rack for the storage of slides. At the other corner is a table upon which incoming shipments can be placed for at this point is the second entrance to the establishment from the outer hall.

The exchange is well lighted artificially by means of high power electric lamps suspended from the white art metal ceiling by massive brass chains. There are two of these over the front office, two for the second section, four for the shipping room and two for the inspection department. The walls are rough coated and cream colored, giving a tone of richness to the place.

Fritz B. Wathne, manager of this exchange, prior to accepting this charge, was for six years with Pathe, Inc. At one time he was manager of the studios at Jersey City and later was sent out on the road with "Neal of the Navy," it being his duty to place the story of this serial with the newspapers. He next opened the New Orleans office of the concern, and during the last four months of his employment with Pathe he was in charge of the office which he opened for them in Charlotte, N. C., and he gave up that place to come to Washington with the International.

A Live-Wire Bunch.

Mr. Wathne has surrounded himself with what he calls a live-wire bunch. In addition to a very capable office force, he has four roadmen who are doing good work in placing "The Mysteries of Myra." With the exception of Charles Manning, these men are well known in this city and the surrounding territory. Mr. Manning was formerly a Pathe man, traveling out of both Atlanta, Ga., and Charlotte, S. C., for that company. Prior to that he was manager of the Charlotte office of the Mutual Film Company, and is well known in that section of the South. Such being the case he was accordingly assigned to the State of South Carolina.

Guy Brandt, who will cover Maryland and handle particularly the city of Baltimore, was formely with the General Film Company in this city. Earle E. Reese was one of the organizers of the Exhibitors' Co-Operative Booking Agency and was with Metro for a short time. The fourth man is Frank R. Hunter, who was also connected with the General Film Company's Staff here as roadmen with "The Social Pirates."

Although in existence but a short time, the exchange is doing a very satisfactory business and, according to Mr. Wathne, the future is looming up bright.

Nat Glaser With Local V. L. S. E.

Washington, D. C.—Nat Glaser has returned to Washington after an absence of nearly half a year and has accepted a position as roadman with the V-L-S-E exchange in this city. Mr. Glaser was manager of the Leader theater on Ninth street, Northwest, for six years, severing his connection with Miller Bros. to go to Philadelphia as manager of the Great Northern theater for the Stanley Company, A desire to return to this city and also to get into the sales end of the game led him to seek his new position. He will cover Baltimore and the surrounding territory in Maryland, relieving Mr. Mayer of that field. Mr. Mayer will give particular attention to the business in this city and in addition will look after Northern Virginia and a part of West Virginia.

ATLANTA NEWS LETTER.

By A. M. Beatty, Special Correspondent, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta.

Sig Samuels Buys the Alpha.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Alpha theater, on Whitehall street, between Hunter and Mitchell, Wednesday has been purchased by Sig Samuels, theatrical promoter, from Alpha Fowler, head of the Fowler Amusement Corporation.

Alpha Fowler in North.

Atlanta, Ga.—Alpha Fowler, former manager of the Alpha theater, is now in New York, attending the motion picture convention. He will visit Chicago and other northern cities before he returns to Atlanta. Last week Mr. Fowler sold out his Atlanta interests to a local amusement concern.

Mr. Fowler is very popular in Atlanta and it is hoped that he will return to this city and re-enter the film business.

Waycross Censors.

Waycross, Ga.—Because its citizens have declared that they have no desire to see photoplays that are immoral or suggestive, a board of censors has been created in Waycross to pass on all photoplay productions booked by the film theaters.

All screen features bordering on the risque will be barred, according to the announcement of the censors. J. W. Strickland, C. A. Miller and C. Fort Andrews compose the censorship board.

Cameramen of several film companies are in Rome, Ga., to make films of the Knights Templers' parade, at the State Conclave. These films will be used in "Weeklies" over the country.

"The Boob Weekly" by Goldberg was given a private showing at the Strand theater, Saturday, by Manager Lee Smith, to a party of newspaper men and friends.

CLEVELAND NEWS LETTER.

Gets Injunction Against V-L-S-E.

CLEVELAND, O.—Judge Leighley, of the Court of Common Pleas, has just issued a temporary injunction restraining the V-L-S-E Company, film lessors, from permitting theaters other than the Globe theater, 5217 Woodland avenue, to exhibit the "Battle Cry of Peace" film in the Woodland avenue neighborhood. The injunction suit was started by Manager Israel of the Globe, who alleged he held a contract by which the film lessors agreed to have his house show the film in that neighborhood first.

Cyrus Wechsler Buys the Savoy.

Cleveland, O.—The Savoy theater, 10225 St. Clair avenue, has just been sold to Cyrus Wechsler by Herman Garfield and the Rose Hermann Amusement Company. Mr. Wechsler plans to show high-class feature films.

And the Bright Rays Were There.

Cleveland, O.—May 4 was "Ray night" at the Alhambra theater. Johnny and Emma Ray of the Reserve Photo Plays Company were there in dual personality. They appeared on the screen in "Casey the Fireman," and sat in a box to see Anna Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," Mayor Davis and other city officials occupied a box.

Charles A. Megown Back.

Cleveland, O.—Charles A. Megown, special respresentative of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and proprietor of the Cameraphone theater, has just returned from New York, where he attended the exhibitors' exposition. He was also in New York on business connected with the League and booked some features for his theater.

Will Film Cleveland Babies.

Cleveland, O.—Babies are to be the "stars" in a five-hundred-foot film the Cleveland exhibitors have agreed to present in the near future in aid of a campaign to raise funds for the Babies' Dispensary & Hospital. The film is to be made at cost by The Reserve Photo Plays Company, and scores of babies and mothers from the dispensary will be shown.

Charles H. Weston, director general of the Reserve Company, recently visited the dispensary to get the "atmosphere" for the scenario he is preparing.

IN PITTSBURGH.

Feature Film's Projection Room.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—A projection room has been installed by the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, in the new film exchange building, 938-940 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, to be used for showing the various releases of this company and to be rented out to other exchanges. The equipment is up to date in every particular and the room will prove of great convenience to both exchanges and exhibitors, who are thereby enabled to secure a screen demonstration without delay.

Last Week in Pittsburgh

Supreme Feature Film Service Has Established a Local Headquarters Here with Harry F. Grelle as General Manager—Campaign Committee of Screen Club Lets Go Shot No. 5—Local Theater Notes of Interest.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Supreme Feature Film Service, the organization of which was announced in these columns last week, has established itself in this city, with Harry F. Grelle as general manager. The new concern will maintain offices in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia and will handle only the highest grade film productions. Among their subjects is the Pavlowa Universal production, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," which has just completed its third phenomenal week at the Pitt theater, and which is the first release of the new company. They control the Pennsylvania and New Jersey state-rights thereon. The Supreme Service has also purchased "The Unwritten Law," featuring Beatrice Michelena, for the same territory, and "Where Are My Children?" for New Jersey. Mr. Grelle was formerly head of the Grelle Feature Film Company in Pittsburgh and is recognized as one of the leading film men in this part of the country. The Grelle Company has disposed of all its films and is now out of existence. The only subject taken over by the new company is "Les Miserables." The main office of the Supreme Feature Film Service will be at 121 Fourth avenue, and is to be opened for business as soon as Mr. Grelle returns from a business trip to New York.

IN MEMORIAM.

Shot No. 5 in the Anti-Censorship Campaign Out.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Campaign Committee of the Pittsburgh Screen Club mailed to the members of the moving picture industry throughout the country a black-bordered memorial card bearing these words:

"In Memoriam. The Liberty of the Motion Picture Screen. Died May 15, 1916, with the enaction of the law instituting the Pennsylvania Board of Censors. National Tribute Day, May 15, 1916. All Pennsylvania Exhibitors now unwilling to pay tribute to the Board of Censors.

"Campaign Committee
"Pittsburgh Screen Club."

This forceful reminder is Shot No. 5 in a series of indictments against censorship which have been published and distributed recently by the Committee. At the last meeting of the Screen Club, John McAleer, who has been directing the anti-censorship fight for some time, was retained as head of the Campaign Committee. Mr. McAleer had tendered his resignation as chairman of the committee and as a member of the Board of Governors since he had, for personal reasons, decided to remove to New York. The resignation was not accepted by the club, as Mr. McAleer is deemed the one man most qualified to lead the campaign. He was therefore employed under salary to carry on the work which he has so successfully begun.

Improving Rowland & Clark Houses.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Rowland & Clark are extensively redecorating and generally adding to the attractiveness of several of their theaters, including the Regent, Penn and Highland avenues, and the Arsenal, at Butler and Main streets, Pittsburgh. The Regent, which is said to be this city's finest motion picture theater, is undergoing a house-cleaning process that promises to leave both exterior and interior prettier than ever. The Arsenal is being more extensively renovated, the work of alteration having been placed in the hands of Architect Henry S. Bair, who designed and erected the Rowland & Clark theaters. Besides changing the arrangement of the theater somewhat, new lighting fixtures are being installed throughout, beautiful floor-covering laid and other improvements are under way.

R. & C. Camp.

Manager George Vogenberger, manager of the Belmar, another of the Rowland & Clark theaters, is assisting his staff of workers in arranging a summer camp, to be held within the next month. J. B. Clark has donated the materials for the erection of the shelters, same procured from the buildings now being removed to make way for the new Rowland & Clark theater in Bloomfield. The summer retreat is to be known as the R. & C. Camp and will be visited by the many employes of the firm.

Flags Out on May 15.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—In keeping with National Tribute Day, May 15, exhibitors throughout the Pittsburgh territory decorated their theaters in an attractive and very appropriate manner. Besides showing a commendable spirit toward the Actors' Fund, the brightness of the displays attracted a nice increase in business it is stated by a number of managers. The Screen Club and many of the film exchanges were also decked out in gala attire for the occasion.

Poster Against the Censors.

McKeesport, Pa.—An instance of how Pennsylvania exhibitors are showing their resentment at the infringement of their rights by the state board of censors, and at the same time making the best of the situation, is the clever stunt recently pulled off by I. Victor, of the Avenue theater, McKeesport, Pa. Mr. Victor ran "Unto Those Who Sin," on which the one, three and 24-sheet posters had been condemned by the censors, the six-sheet only having been passed. He therefore displayed a banner, the size of the 24-sheet, painted with the title of the picture at the top, followed by the words in large lettering: "The Posters on this Picture Were Condemned by the Pennsylvania Board of Censors." This poster drew much attention and comment, and incidentally the resultant business was more than satisfactory.

John Houser Building Theater.

Erie, Pa.—A modern photoplay theater is being erected on West Eighteenth street, Erie, by John Hauser. The building is to be of fireproof construction, with a seating capacity of 600, and the specifications call for most attractive and up-to-date equipment throughout. The cost of the building will be about $18,000. It is planned to rush the work to completion, so as to be ready for opening the new theater about the middle of August.

More Space Needed by the Weiland.

The Weiland Film Company, 113 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, is remodeling its quarters so as to afford nearly double the space heretofore occupied. Steady expansion in business has necessitated the enlargement of the offices.

Manager Lyon Gets Loving Cup.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Manager B. G. Lyon, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the International Film Service, 938-940 Penn avenue, has been awarded a handsome silver loving cup in the contest between the various branch managers for bookings on "The Mysteries of Myra." The honor is gratifying to Mr. Lyon and his staff, as the territory reached by the local branch is comparatively small.

Want Sunday Shows

Chattanooga People Are Not in Favor of Closing the Picture Shows on Sabbaths—Other Innocent Amusements Flourish on That Day—Social Workers and Labor Leaders Who Favor Open Shows.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—That the people of Chattanooga are not generally in favor of the closed picture houses on Sunday has been shown in a number of published interviews with some of the leading labor and social workers of the city. Attention has been called to the fact that the picture shows have been condemned on the ground that they were nuisances, but that baseball games are permitted in three Tennessee cities supporting Southern League teams. Attention is also called to the fact that the soft drink stands are all open on Sundays, and that there is more noise and confusion at soft drink stands and baseball games than ever at the moving picture theaters.

Mrs. H. Goodman, one of the social leaders and a worker for the tubercular movement and certain charitable organizations, in a recent interview stated that she strongly hoped that some way would be found to again open the theaters on Sundays as it afforded innocent amusement, and aided in supplying funds with which to keep up charitable work. She called attention to the fact that Sunday crowds at the moving picture theater were of the orderly kind, and as quiet as the crowds at the library, which is open on Sunday.

W. E. Eckenrod, vice-president of the Central Labor Union, and Matt Gerlach, secretary of the organization, have stronly endorsed open Sunday. Both men have announced their intention to work for Sunday pictures and Sunday baseball.

The theater managers have endeavored to make arrangements to operate between the hours of 1 o'clock in the afternoon until 7 o'clock if the present nuisance law can be changed. There will probably be several Sunday closing bills introduced in the next legislature.

G. N. Shorey Gets the Gay Theater.

Knoxville, Tenn.—Announcement has been made of a deal whereby George N. Shorey, manager and owner of the Queen theater, has obtained the controlling interest of the Gay theater, has assumed personal charge of both concerns, and hereafter will direct the destinies of both houses, which are the leading moving picture concerns of the district.

Frank Rogers, formerly manager of the Gay theater, reports that he has several offers from film concerns, and will probably close a deal shortly. Mr. Rogers took on the Triangle Film at the Gay about five months ago, and has built up a nice business for the popular playhouse.

Mr. Shorey recently announced that he did not plan any radical changes in the policy of either theater, but that he expected to change the program at the Gay so that four changes would be made weekly instead of three, and that Keystone comedies would be run on Wednesdays and Saturday only. A uniform price of ten cents will apply to all seats in the theater.

At the Queen, Mr. Shorey says, the Paramount pictures will continue to be the features, while the Triangle pictures will lead the shows at the Gay.

Sunday Shows in Memphis.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Sunday agitation concerning the moving picture theaters, which arose following the decision of the Court of Appeals in connection with the Chattanooga test case, has apparently died down, and while the local authorities at first took a rather drastic view of the matter, there is at present very little being said. The theaters continue to advertise Sunday shows which are run off on regular schedules.

"Ne'er-Do-Well" at Majestic No. 2.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Majestic Amusement Company recently wound up a four-day run at Majestic No. 2, of the ten-reel feature, "The Ne'er-Do-Well." Prices were raised to twenty-five cents for adults and ten cents for children. The company was liberal in use of advertising space and obtained considerable publicity through the reading columns.

New Lyric Theater at Dyersburg.

Dyersburg, Tenn.—Joe Baker has awarded a contract to Boone Brothers, of Dyersburg, for the erection of the new Lyric theater, to be erected at a cost of about $20,000.

Memphis, Tenn.—Prices were advanced to twenty-five cents for adults and ten cents for children during a showing at the Lyceum theater, of a six-reel European picture entitled "At the Front With the Allies." A special program was arranged by the Lyceum orchestra.

KENTUCKY NEWS LETTER.

By George D. Crain, Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

Children's Film Board Elects.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The Louisville Board of Censorship of Children's Moving Picture Shows, has held its annual election, at which Mrs. Fred Levy was re-elected president. Other officers elected were Mrs. Helm Bruce, vice-president; Miss Annie S. Waters, recording secretary; Miss Bernice Bell, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Robert Moors, treasurer, and Mrs. J. B. Arbegust, chairman of the publicity committee. The last of the season's children's shows was given at the Mary Anderson theater on May 13. It was announced at this meeting that "The Flag," a fairy tale in pictures, would be the first production of the Society for the Promotion of Films for Children, recently organized at Alameda, Cal. The local board strongly endorsed the plan of J. T. Edwards, of the Premium Scientific and Educational Film Co., of Alameda, Cal., founder of the new society. Mrs. Levy read a letter from Mr. Edwards which outlined a plan to produce about twelve children's pictures a year to be handled through a society of 500 members paying $24 a year into the treasury.

Cameramen at the Derby.

Louisville, Ky.—It is understood that there will not be any exclusive privileges granted to moving picture men this year to take pictures of the Kentucky Derby and it is said that there will be a large number of camera men present. The Universal, according to A. C. Farrel, manager of the local Central Film Service office, is bringing in a special camera man from Cincinnati, O., to make pictures of the Derby, for the Universal Weekly. It is reported that a number of local free lance camera men will also be on the job.

Fire from Cigarette.

Louisville, Ky.—Fire thought to have started from a cigarette thrown in a barrel of waste paper threatened recently the film stock room of the Mutual, located directly over the Rex theater. Employes in an adjoining building discovered the fire, and the firemen quickly put out the blaze, which had communicated to the walls. The loss was trivial.

Changes in Keith Circuit.

Louisville, Ky.—News was recently received from Cincinnati, O., to the effect that Ned Hastings, formerly manager of the Indianapolis Keith house, who for a few weeks has been in charge of the Louisville house, was to be transferred to Cincinnati, and that John F. Royal, manager of the Cincinnati house, would go to the Cleveland Keith house. Mr. Hastings announced that he had not been notified of the change, but said that since his coming to Louisville to succeed James L. Weed, a few weeks ago, there had been so many managerial changes in the circuit, that no one knows what change will be made next. Mr. Hastings has gone to Indianapolis to settle up some personal affairs.

Among Louisville Exhibitors.

William C. Miller and J. G. Conners of the Mutual office at Indianapolis, Ind., were recently in Louisville, doing some special work on feature productions.

A local photoplay paper known as the "Moto-Photo Weekly," put up in newspaper form, recently made its first appearance. This paper will be delivered by carrier to residents.

The Rex theater has announced that it will shortly show the new "Pavlowa" picture.

The weather became so warm in Louisville that the Highland theater opened its airdome and transferred the shows from the winter headquarters on May 8. This theater operates an airdome almost directly across the street from the closed theater and transfers the shows backward and forward in accordance with weather conditions.

Kentucky Theater Notes.

Frankfort, Ky.—J. Law Siple, a well-known moving picture man, and Mrs. Jane Ecker, of New York, a moving picture actress, were recently married in Frankfort, Ky., while present for the pageant picture flag put on by the Red Men at the Grand Council meeting.

Eddyville, Ky.—A new moving picture theater has just been opened in this city by F. B. Evans.

Mt. Sterling, Ky.—E. B. Taul and N. A. Wilkerson have just opened a new moving picture show house for colored people.

Scottsville, Ky.—The Sugg theater has just been opened as a moving picture theater.

Winchester, Ky.—Clarence Bloomfield has sold his interest in the Pastime theater to Fonda Minor, who will continue operating the moving picture playhouse.

Madisonville, Ky.—Manager Barnett, of the Garrick theater, has taken over the Princess theater.

IN OKLAHOMA STATE.

Novel Advertising Stunt.

Cushing, Okla.—"Happy" Meininger, manager of the Dixie theater at Cushing, Okla., is a great believer in novel advertising stunts. One of his most effective methods is the cutting out of pictures of girls from posters, pasting on mirrors, and decoration with borders and art work. The decoration is done by an artist, and is attractive as well as striking. "Happy" took charge of the Dixie theater last November, when it was a losing proposition. He had had extensive show experience, from carnivals "up"; he is new to the town, but is a mixer, and they all know him now. His application of experience and his acquaintance and popularity are two causes for his success.

Enid, Okla.—W. S. Billings, who recently opened the American theater at Enid, Okla., with pictures, says that he is through with "legitimate" attractions forever. His success in the picture field has been phenomenal. He is using Bluebird, Big Four, Fox, Triangle and Pathe.

CINCINNATI NEWS LETTER.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Special Correspondent, 610 Nat. Bank, Cincinnati, O.

Ironton May Have Sunday Opening.

IRONTON, O.—A fight is on in this city which may result in open moving picture theaters on Sunday, although there is opposition to the plan on the part of the ministers of the city. Mayor Hannon has recommended tentatively to the city council that the picture houses be permitted to show on Sunday, and unless ample cause against carrying out this recommendation appear, it is believed the ordinance against it will be repealed, or that an ordinance specifically excepting moving picture theaters will be enacted.

Western College Girls Win Right to See Films.

Oxford, O.—Two hundred girl students at Western College, an old and well-established institution here, struck for several privileges not formerly granted them, including, first and foremost, the right to attend picture shows at least once a week. After mature consideration, the faculty decided that the demands made should be granted, and Oxford exhibitors and girls are mutually pleased over the victory.

Harry L. O'Rear's Office Busy Corner.

Harry L. O'Rear, who recently took charge of the Cincinnati office of the General Film Co. as manager, has been making things hum since he took hold. The unusually good stuff being released under the General program of late, and Mr. O'Rear's firm personal conviction that the well-handled program of one and two-reel subjects is "coming back" strong, have proved a winning combination with exhibitors. Among recent callers at the General office were the following exhibitors: Ed. Paul, Mrs. J. C. Murray and C. E. Helmer, Springfield, O.; W. H. Thompson, William Corson and E. J. Alexander, Dayton, O.; A. C. White, Zanesville, O.; Charles McCune, Middletown, O.; C. J. Michler, Frankfort, Ky.; Bank & Goodman, Williamson, W. Va.; O. A. Smittle, Portsmouth, O.; J. E. Smith, Washington C. H., O.; J. H. Meyer, Chillicothe, O., and C. E. McIntyre and J. E. Fletcher, Aurora, Ind. Several private views of the regular releases, for the benefit of visiting exhibitors and the sales force, have been very useful in proving the kind of matter which the General is turning out.

Shorter Notes of Interest.

Youngstown, O.—"The Life of Shakespeare," a six-part production, by the Trans-Oceanic Film Co., of New York, was shown here recently with much success at the public library, as a part of the celebration of Shakespeare week, in connection with the Shakespearean tercentenary.

Cincinnati, O.—The first of the several pictures in which the appearance of De Wolf Hopper is announced under the Triangle mark, "Sunshine Dad," was seen recently at the Family theater, where the first run of the Triangle program is seen in Cincinnati. The popular comedian drew heavily.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager C. E. Holah, of the V-L-S-E exchange, gave to A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the company, a hearty welcome on the latter's recent visit to Cincinnati, being in a position to show him some business worth talking about in this territory.

Cincinnati, O.—It has been announced that the new Kleine serial, featuring Billie Burke, "Gloria's Romance," will be run at the Family theater, Manager I. Libson's Vince street house, which has for some time handled features exclusively.

An Ably Run Circuit

World Correspondent Visits the Gilligham and Smith Theaters in Grand Rapids, Mich., and Finds Much to Commend—Up-to-Date Methods in Management and the Best of Projection at All Houses.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The writer spent several days of the past week at Grand Rapids visiting the houses of Gilligham & Smith. Great praise and credit is certainly due Charles Seaman, general manager of the Gilligham & Smith interests and the theaters, who gives them the closest attention at all times. Every night Mr. Seaman makes several times an inspection of the theaters and all of the Gilligham & Smith houses—no matter how small—are run along metropolitan lines, are kept up-to-date in every particular.

Praise for the Projection.

Right here the writer wants to pay another compliment to the Gilligham & Smith houses on projection. It could hardly be improved at any of the theaters. This is something that Mr. Seaman watches especially, as he believes good projection is the important factor in giving service. It is just as important to give good projection as it is to give good pictures—that are entertaining and that are suitable for the clientele of each particular house. Mr. Seaman is extremely well known among Michigan exhibitors, having for years been asociated with A. J. Gilligham and the General Film Co., in Detroit.

The Majestic.

The finest house in Grand Rapids is the Majestic—it belongs to the Gilligham & Smith interests and is a beauty. It ranks with any of the modern type of houses in any of the big cities and is extremely popular with the best element in Grand Rapids. The Strand stands second best of the theaters in Grand Rapids and is also one of the chain. Both are devoted to pictures exclusively.

Detroit exhibitors will be glad to learn that Arthur Hoganson is asociated with the Gilligham & Smith theaters, and also acts as assistant to Mr. Seaman and assistant in the management of the Majestic. He is in good health and says that Grand Rapids climate seems to thoroughly agree with him.

The Orpheum.

The Orpheum theater, which has been playing a combination of vaudeville and pictures all season, will play motion pictures exclusively, starting May 21. The first photoplay will be "The Ne'er-Do-Well," which will run an entire week.

A. J. Gilligham, president of the Gilligham & Smith theaters, resides in Detroit, where he is manager of the General Film Co. branch, in addition to owning the Empire theater and various other Detroit interests.

Port Huron Theaters.

An exhibitor writes us from Port Huron, Mich., to the effect that there are four theaters in that city devoted to motion pictures: the Family, American, Bijou and Maxine, all of which are doing a good business. Harry Wienberg has resigned tthe managemen of the American theater, 234 Huron avenue, and has been succeeded by William Wallace, formerly operator.

To Build Theater in Flint, Mich.

The World is also in receipt of a communication announcing that Col. W. S. Butterfield has secured a long lease on a downtown location in Flint, Mich. (one of the most prosperous and fastest growing citties in he world right now), and that he will erect thereon a theater costing $80,000, to be devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures. It will seat 1,500 and should be open by Thanksgiving Day. It will be a link in the Butterfield chain of houses. Col. Butterfield already controls the Majestic and Garden theaters in that city.

Summer Films at the Majestic.

Ann Arbor, Mich.—The Majestic theater, in Ann Arbor, has discontinued vaudeville and for the summer months will play motion pictures exclusively. Frank J. O'Donnell, manager, writes the World that he will be glad to get in touch with exchanges having "pictures that will get the money." (Frank, we'll try and keep you posted.)

New Theater on Mack Avenue.

Detroit, Mich.—The Del Amusement Company, Detroit, has capitalized for $75,000 to build a theater on Mack avenue. Of this amount $18,000 has been paid in in cash. There are four stockholders, each holding 950 shares of stock, par value $10 each—Fred Deladder, Daniel C. Milleville, Peter J. Ervinck and Joseph Michels.

H. I. Garson Heads New Corporation.

Detroit, Mich.—A $200,000 corporation to act as the Michigan selling agency for the pictures by the Clara Kimball Young Corporation, has been organized with Harry I. Garson, manager of the Broadway Strand theater and the Broadway Feature Film Co., Detroit, and Lewis J. Selznick, as the principal stockholders. This means that Mr. Garson will practically have control of the selling rights of the new Clara Kimball Young pictures. The first-run of these photoplays will be at the Broadway-Strand theater.

W. D. Ward at Head of Unicorn.

Detroit, Mich.—W. D. Ward is now manager of the Unicorn Film exchange, which has been opened at 183 East Jefferson avenue. Mr. Ward is popular with Michigan exhibitors having been former manager of the Universal branch in Detroit as well as in the film exchange business for himself.

New Triangle Office.

Detroit, Mich.—The Triangle Film Company has given up its original plans to locate at 318 Woodward avenue, and instead has leased an entire floor of the building at 73 Broadway, which will be fitted up at once for the transaction of business. Manager Foster says he will be operating by another week.

The Metro's Projection Room.

Detroit, Mich.—We must certainly commend the Michigan Metro exchange, of 159 West Jefferson avenue, for its fine projection room, which is elegantly fitted up for looking at pictures in addition to holding meetings, etc. Several dozen wicker chairs, with tapestry coverings on seat and back, add considerably to the appearance of the room and make it more cosy and comfortable.

Congratulations for Joe Wood.

Detroit, Mich.—Congratulations for Joe Wood, now manager of the Garden theater, and for many years manager of the Empress. Reason is that on May 5th the stork brought to the Wood home a fine 8½-pound baby boy who has been christened Russell Joseph. Both mother and baby are doing splendidly, and of course Joe is passing the cigars.

Co-operative Theater

In Neighborhood Section of Indianapolis Residents Subscribe Together and Start Their Own Picture Theater—Find Man to Build the House and Rent it to Them at a Nominal Figure.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Plans are complete for the first co-operative moving picture house in this city. Out in the northern section of the city, in what is now a high class residence district of great promise, a number of citizens banded themselves together to obtain a moving picture show. The druggist—it's a small neighborhood and there is only one of them—became interested in the plan and made a survey of the situation, mailing letters to the head of every family in the territory.

The enthusiasm soon spread.

A company was organized and incorporated with the capital stock placed at $1,500. In a week the stock was sold, entirely within the neighborhood, at $10 per share. A man was found who will build a $12,000 building on leased ground and lease the building to the company at a nominal rent.

It is figured that with a five-cent show the company can operate at a fair profit and it is likely that the price of admission will be made 10 cents. If the venture proves successful it may be that the idea will spread and that Indianapolis will have several co-operative moving picture houses. Sentiment indicating this move is already apparent.

Theatorium's Tin Can Stunt.

Portland, Ind.—What has become known as the "tin can stunt" of the Theatorium moving picture house of this city proved a big success. The Theatorium offered free admission to each youngster who appeared during an evening and presented ten tin cans, securely tied together, at the door. The cans piled up so rapidly in front of the house that the day following it was almost impossible to see the theater. The management obtained permission to leave the cans in place for a day and the result was the best piece of advertising which the theater has had since it opened. All of Portland turned out to see the "tin can stunt."

Tippecanoe Recaptured.

Lafayette, Ind.—The historic Battle of the Tippecanoe has been re-enacted and filmed. The film company making pictures for the big eight-reel historic production, "Historic Indiana," to be used in the centennial celebration, had a big company on the ground ready to renact the scenes, when rain came along and chased them out. The company and paraphernalia, however, remained nearby for the first clear day and then made the picture. It is one of a number of historic scenes which will be made but is pernaps the biggest the company will attempt.

Report Operators Not Satisfied.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Unrest among various labor organizations identified with the Central Labor Union of this city has spread to the motion picture machine operator's union and from Labor Temple have been heard threats of picketing. A. C. Zaring, secretary of the Indianapolis Exhibitors' League, said recently that he had heard nothing of the contemplated action of the operator's union and said that whatever was done would not prove serious. There are less than a half-dozen exhibitors of the city who do not employ union labor.

There is always a possibility, however, that labor trouble of any kind will develop complications. Recently there has been a great deal of such trouble in Indianapolis, including two big strikes within a year, and the least sign of trouble is cause for alarm. The popular method of picketing in Indianapolis is the use of sandwich men who parade up and down in front of the boycotted houses carrying signs designed to hurt the business.

The Wells-Bijou Turns to Films.

Evansville, Ind.—Within two weeks this city will have seen the last of the Well's Bijou theater as a legitimate house. Gus Millhausen, the live theater manager of this city is now transforming the big theater into one of the best moving picture houses in this district and that means something, for there are a number that rank right up with the best of them. Millhausen is now dickering with the Mutual agency for the masterpicture series.

New House in Calumet.

Calumet, Ind.—Mrs. Sophia Freedman, of this city, will erect a $10,000 theater building for the showing of moving pictures.

Theater Has Its Own Board.

Brazil, Ind.—The Brazil Theaters Company has asked local women to pass upon pictures which will be shown to them and used later, if satisfactory, at a "children's hour" show. The pictures will be shown at the Colonial.

Bijou Theater Sold.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Perhaps the most important change is the sale of the Bijou theater, a downtown house, to Edward G. Sourbier, owner of a string of theaters in the city. Bowlby and Cook made the sale. They opened the house several years ago and have been very successful in the operation of the theater.

Frank Green Opens South Side House.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Frank Green, one of the "old time" managers and a well known figure in the exhibitors world of Indianapolis, has opened a new house on the South Side. Green is an experienced manager and in this time of arguments as to whether or not the business is good or bad in Indianapolis, Green shows his faith by opening a new house. Green has an excellent location, away from great competition and says business is good.

Generals Begin Baseball.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The General Film Company branch here has organized a baseball team and will go after the amateur championship of the city. The team has been practicing regularly and is awaiting the opening of the city league games with eagerness. The team is under the management of M. L. Aker.

Muskegon Picture Men Win Better Rates

Excessive Yearly License Fees Were Proposed; but Stiff Protest Results in Substantial Reductions.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MUSKEGON, MICH.—Muskegon moving picture men won their fight to keep down the license fees, the rates being cut materially before the city council adopted the ordinance. Instead of $50 a year for houses seating 350 or less the proprietors will pay only $40 a year. Those up to 600 capacity saved $25 a year and will pay only $50. The bigger houses, those holding more than 600, were to be asked for $100 a year, but after the protest this was cut to $50.

Picture Shows for Employes.

Jackson, Mich.—Daily moving picture shows in the factory dining room at noon will be furnished employes of the Sparks-Withington Company. Free shows also will be given in the same quarters on Saturday afternoons to families of the employes if they so desire.

Industrial Films in Niles.

Niles, Mich.—The Strand theater operated by Robert L. Codd and the high school are co-operating in the exhibition of industrial films. Manager Codd loans his theater for the shows on Saturdays. The films for one program were loaned by a shoe company, an auto factory and a cereal maker. Efforts will be made to continue the series.

Michigan Theater Changes.

Port Austin, Mich.—The new Majestic theater has been opened here.

Mt. Pleasant, Mich.—James McCabe of the Vaudette theater and L. Bohls of the Isabella County bank have formed a partnership and will operate the Mt. Pleasant opera house.

Manistee, Mich.—The Lyric theater will install a new pipe organ.

Drama League Drops Censor Propaganda.

DECATUR, ILL.—Enthusiasm of local censorship advocates was dampened by Miss Rose Elliott upon her return from St. Louis, where she attended a meeting of the Drama League. At that meeting the subject of endorsing state censorship was brought up and a majority of the delegates voiced their opinions that the league had enough work to do without attempting to regulate the moving pictures.

Think They Must Clean Up.

Elgin, Ill.—The first work of the Mission Union in Elgin is to clean up the moving picture shows, Mrs. W. R. Watson, president, told the members of the Civic League at a get together meeting of various woman's organizations. She declared the city administration is in complete sympathy with her plans.

The Pictures Do Some Cleaning.

Decatur, Ill.—Industries which have been classed as sweatshops were "shown up" by moving picture films on May 20 when organized labor from all over Central Illinois had a big celebration here.

New American Novelty Mfg. Co. of Chicago.

Springfield, Ill.—Secretary of State Stevenson has issued a certificate of incorporation to the American Novelty Manufacturing Company of 16 South Market street, Chicago. The concern which is authorized to have capital stock of $1,000, manufacture and deal in motion pictures and moving pictures, including films and photographs. The incorporators are Edwin L. Oppenheimer, Harry L. Hoenigsberger and Thomas C. Lyons.

New Theaters and Changes in Illinois.

Monmouth, Ill.—The Air Dome on South Main street has been leased, it is reported, by Rock Island parties who will operate a string of eight or ten open air theaters in this part of the state.

Wood River, Ill.—A new moving picture theater will be erected across the street from the Antler's theater.

Byron, Ill.—Harold Kings of Kings has purchased the interest of Emerson Chamberlain, senior partner of the firm of Chamberlain and Bain, which operates the Rose theater.

Kincaid, Ill.—Patrick Coady, 68 years old, owner of the theater here, was killed by a Chicago & Illinois Midland railroad train.

Springfield, Ill.—The Savoy theater, which was damaged by fire when the Boston store was destroyed last winter, has been re-opened. It has been thoroughly remodeled.

Dundee, Ill.—The Crystal theater was given for a day to the Boy Scouts for the showing of their scout film.

WISCONSIN NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Wisconsin Trade Notes.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—Hugo Heller, an exhibitor at Third street and North avenue was fined $1 in the district court for showing a poster which exploited a murderous attack.

Eau Claire, Wis.—The Rex theater has closed.

Stoughton, Wis.—Charles Guelson has purchased the Lyric theater from Jacob Moelk, who has operated the house for nearly nine years.

Janesville, Wis.—The new Beverly theater has been opened. Billy Burke in "Peggy" was the initial attraction. A Wurlitzer pipe organ is a feature of the house.

Portage, Wis.—Metro, Fox, Paramount and Mutual, with perhaps a sprinkling of other pictures will be the offering in the future at the Gem theater in Portage, Wis., which has been taken over by William Helmann, proprietor of the Majestic theater in the same city. Mr. Helmann will close the Majestic, however, since he has seating accommodations for fifty more persons in the Gem than at his former place.

Portage, Wis.—Local picture houses are helping the good roads movement. The Home theater showed Kathlyn Williams in "The Black Orchid," and talks on better highways were made. The Majestic theater is planning a similar evening of boosting.

Cascade, Wis.—The Pastime theater used "The Passion Play" as an appropriate feature for the last week of Lent.

Mansfield, Wis.—The Adler theater was closed for redecorating, reopening on Easter Sunday,

Eau Claire, Wis.—A party of local trout fishers took a moving picture camera with them to Bolin. The Unique theater here showed the films. Was the film convincing?

Whitewater, Wis.—"Graustark" was used by the White theater for a special matinee on Easter Monday.

Chippewa Falls, Wis.—Eli Nelson has purchased a tent moving picture show outfit and planned to start a tour of Michigan with the Dietz "Cameron Dam" films about May 1.

Prairie-du-Sac, Wis.—"The Rosary" was shown at the Metropolitan theater under the auspices of the High School Athletic Association.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

St. Louis Airdome Opens.

St. Louis, Mo.—The St. Louis airdome, Prairie and St. Louis avenues, has announced the opening date as May 13. This outdoor theater is one of the Warner Brothers' shows, of which there are half a dozen, most of them to be opened before the end of May. These airdomes are noted for having no overhead wires. The lights are arranged on posts, and in such a manner that no ungainly wires or cables are seen by the public. Charles H. Warner, manager for the firm, has a decided preference for beautiful and sightly places of amusement, and makes his airdomes veritable gardens of delight.

Begin Kingsland Theater

New St. Louis Theater to Seat 1,600 Persons Now Under Construction—H. W. Lohrum, Richard Zeppenfeld and Joseph Schneider, Sr., Are Behind It—Will Be a Strictly Moving Picture House.

By A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent, 236 Vanol Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Construction work has begun on the Kingsland theater, which is to be erected on South Grand avenue, at Meramac street, by the Kingsland Theater and Realty Company, organized by Harry W. Lohrum, Richard Zeppenfeld and Joseph Schneider, Sr. The theater is to be strictly a moving picture house with a seating capacity of 1,600, and is to be fireproof.

The walls will have large swinging sashes, extending from floor to ceiling, which can be opened and closed, according to weather conditions. A cooled air ventilating system will be installed to permit the operation of the theater in the warmest weather. The building, which will cost $35,000, will have two stores and two modern apartments of four rooms each on the upper floor, besides the theater proper. The location is on a very busy corner on Grand avenue, in a fast developing district of the city. The theater will be managed by Harry W. Lohrum, who managed the Hippodrome and Gem seven years for Frank L. Talbot.

CORNELIUS BUYS THE RITZ.

Theater on Sixth and Olive Will be Called the Royal.

St. Louis, Mo.—J. W. Cornelius, proprietor and manager of the two Lyric theaters and the Lyric Skydome, has added another theater to his string of amusement houses. The Ritz, on Sixth near Olive street, has just passed into the Cornelius management, and opened on Sunday, May 7. The name of the theater has been changed to Royal, and will be known as the downtown home of Paramount pictures, with the price of admission ten and twenty cents.

The house, which is practically new, has been closed for the past two weeks, undergoing a general brightening up with paint and decorations, and some attractive hangings. One of the finest orchestras in the city, composed of seven pieces with harp and organ accompaniment furnishes the music for the entertainment. The same brand of efficiency prevails at the Royal that has made the Lyric theaters noted for the high quality of their programs, and the excellent deportment of the attendants.

All the houses under the Cornelius management run with a smoothness and watchful care of detail that speaks for a high degree of study and thought on the business on operating a theater. Mr. Cornelius was one of the first exhibitors in St. Louis to put on high class films in his theaters, and to cater to the better class of patrons. All his houses enjoy a regular clientele of patrons who go to see each bill as it is put on, and the downtown Lyric, which changes program every day, has perhaps the greatest number of these regular patrons.

The O'Fallon Airdome Opens.

St. Louis, Mo.—The O'Fallon Park airdome, adjoining the O'Fallon Park theater, at 5353-57 Florissant avenue, opened on May 7, with the same program as has been showing in the house all winter. The O'Fallon shows Paramount pictures alternating with Triangle features and several serials.

Hamilton Skydome Open.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Hamilton Skydome, on Hamilton and Easton avenues, the largest airdome in the city, opened for the summer season on May 11. The Hamilton, which is not connected with any thetter, has enlarged the seating capacity from 4,000 to 7,000, which makes use of the ample space at both sides and at the front of the immense garden. Another feature at the Hamilton is the gradual rise of the seats toward the back from the screen and stage, just as in the most modern theater. The projection booth is enclosed in a very pretty little two-story Chinese pagoda, with little porticos running around it, and a rest room on the lower floor. The Hamilton has been entirely done over by painters and decorators and presents a striking appearance with its myriads of brightly colored lights. The program is mixed, photoplay features and vaudeville about equally divided on the bill, and Maurice Speyer, conductor of the orchestra at the Columbia theater, is in charge of the music. The admission is ten and twenty cents.

Showing Films at General Exchange.

St. Louis, Mo.—On Monday, May 8, H. P. Wolfberg, manager of the General Film Exchange, gave a showing of the first Knickerbocker Star Feature of five reels, starring Lois Meredith, in the newly installed projection room at the headquarters. The exchange is in Film Row on Olive street. Mr. Wolfberg says the exhibitors come in and have the privilege of looking at as many films as they care to see, and whether they book them that day or later, the notes made on the merits of the films are kept for future reference in regard to their programs. Wolfberg says that the plan has met with the hearty approval of all the theater managers who have availed themselves of the service.

W. O. Reeve Starts Airdome.

St. Louis, Mo.—William O. Reeve, proprietor of the Eighteenth Street theater, between Geyer and Lafayette avenues on Eighteenth street, has opened his airdome, which is just in the rear of the theater. Mr. Reeve has reserved the right to move back in the house on any cool or rainy night, but that will not be a hard task, as the two places are adjoining, and it is only a matter of a few minutes to move from one to the other. The airdome has a very pretty entrance at the left of the theater, and with the attractive plants and vines inside the airdome one would not think it is situated on a back lot in the center of a thickly populated neighborhood.

Films at the Columbia.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Columbia theater at Sixth and St. Charles streets, the leading vaudeville house of St. Louis, closed its regular season on May 7, but opened again the next day as a picture house, with the Billie Burke serial, "Gloria's Romance," as the chief attraction. The Columbia has specialized in big photoplay feature attractions during the vacation months through past seasons, running "The Spoilers," "The Nigger," and others, and there has been a rumor of the same plan being again put in effect this summer, but the only feature announced so far is the Kleine production.

Gets Lease of Union Theater.

The Union theater, at Union and Easton avenue, has been leased by Sam and Jacob Sigoloff, from the Union Theater and Airdome Company, for a term of more than four years. The Union is a large and well appointed theater, built several years ago by the Crawford interests, and at one time was known as the best dividend paying theater in the city. That was at a time when there were very few neighborhood theaters compared with the number now under operation. The program has not been announced by the new management.

Pickets Declared Legal

Kansas City Judge Decides That Picketing of Unfriendly Theater by Union Operators Is Within the Law If Done Without Threats or Violence—Notes Anent Local Picture Theaters and Film Men.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—J. E. Hughes, proprietor of the Eastern theater, at Ninth and Lister, refused to allow the local moving picture operators union to dictate to him and to employ a union operator in his booth. Two members of that body started to picket the place. For ten consecutive nights they kept their vigil—for a short time, as shortly after taking up their picketing they were arrested and haled into court the following morning. They were fined each time, the amount being increased at every appearance, but on each occasion they appealed. When the cases came up in the criminal court the pickets were freed and their fines remitted, Judge Latshaw deciding that picketing of an unfriendly picture theater by union men is within the law, if done without threats of force or violence.

Special Matinee for Farmers Only.

Frankfort, Kan.—Here's the newest small-town advertising stunt—a "Special Matinee for Farmers Only." This is an idea installed by R. L. Thompson, owner of a theater at Frankfort, Kan., at the suggestion of J. E. Foland, salesman for the Pathe. Mr. Thompson is a farmer. He owned the building and took over the lease, and the show, recently. And is running the house in a progressive way. Every Saturday afternoon is for the farmers alone, and no tickets are sold to city folks. The house is crowded—but few visiting farmers fail to gain admittance. Four or five salesmen have taken a particular interest in Mr. Thompson's success, and have assisted him in getting a good start. With the help of these he is putting on the "Battle Cry of Peace," which indicates his progressiveness.

Religious Night at the Picture Show.

Whiting, Kan.—Jess Higby, a local exhibitor has found it pleasant as well as profitable to co-operate with the religious people of the town, in respect to moving pictures. There is a growing tendency in the small towns to get up church entertainments in which a feature is moving pictures, religious subjects and cartoons being used. Mr. Higby has encouraged this tendency, and has provided the means. The co-operation started with Mr. Higby inviting the church people to hold an entertainment in his theater on one occasion. So satisfactory was this result, that they suggested more frequent events of the kind. And now a "religious night" is held every week, with a large attendance. Mr. Higby runs religious subjects and a Bray cartoon.

New Motion Picture Supply Company.

Kansas City, Mo.—H. G. Gill, an experienced man in the supply game, has opened an office at 317-318 Gloyd building, known as the Motion Picture Supply Company, with the purpose of handling supplies and accessories for moving picture houses. Mr. Gill is very well known to exhibitors and his new venture should be a success from the start.

Actors' Fund Committee.

Joplin, Mo.—Kansas City exhibitors are planning to do their share towards making Actors' Fund Day a success and to that end A. B. Flintom, president of the Kansas City Feature Film Company, who has charge of the arrangements in this city has appointed a committee of three exhibitors to look after the matter. They are as follows: Frank Newman of the Royal and Regent; F. I. Buckingham of the Apollo, and William Scoville, of tthe Idle Hour.

Little Thelma Smith Dies.

Kansas City, Mo.—Miss Thelma Smith, the eight-year-old daughter of L. M. Smith, proprietor of the Jitney theater in Kansas City, Kan., recently died from a throat infection. Every exchange in this city with which Mr. Smith had dealings knew the little brown-haired maiden well, and she was loved and petted by all.

Change at the New Empress.

Kansas City, Mo.—The New Empress theater here, through its president, Wilfrid Ledoux, filed a petition in voluntary bankruptcy on May 4, alleging liabilities of $15,992 and assets of $6,248. A sale was held a week later, when E. B. Kelly, owner of the theater, purchased the assets. Dan McCoy, who was manager of the house, when Sullivan and Considine owned the circuit, is back in his old position. He is a well known figure in the moving picture field.

Fan Breaks and Hurts Spectator.

Kansas City, Mo.—A piece of iron coming from a ventilating fan on the side of the Willis Wood theater struck a spectator on the head at that place recently, causing a severe fracture of the skull. The fan broke and the iron from it struck several others, but this woman was the only one injured. An operation was necessary and for some time the woman was between life and death.

Theater Changes.

Kansas City, Mo.—The old theater at 27th and Elmwood has been rebuilt and extensively remodeled and is now known as the Starlight. It recently re-opened under the the management of Mrs J. E. Hughes.

Kansas Sity, Mo.—The theater formerly known as the Ruby, at 39th and Prospect, has been taken over by Messrs. Lotz and Ellis, who have effected various changes in the construction of the house.

Butler, Mo.—Mrs. D. V. Riley, of Butler, has taken over the Glory theater, 39th and Troost avenue, one of the high class suburban houses, from L. I. Van Zandt, former proprietor. A. P. Walker, who has been acting as manager for Mr. Van Zandt, will continue in the same capacity under Mrs. Riley's direction.

Wheeling, Mo.—Messrs. Lowe and Smiley of Wheeling, are erecting an airdome at that place, which they will open about the middle of May. In addition to this an old building in that place will be remodeled in the fall for use as a moving picture theater.

Camden, Mo.—This town of but 600 inhabitants, has taken on an additional picture house, under the management of W. A. Berry. This makes two for the thriving little village.

Clyde, Kan.—L. L. Husselman, Clyde, has purchased the Wonderland moving picture theater at that place from R. A. Crumrine.

Parsons, Kan.—With the purchase of the Elks theater at Parsons, the Fees Brothers now control the two leading houses there, owning in addition to their new acquisition, the Best.

"Nation" Film Arrests in Des Moines, Ia.

Three Men Connected With Berchel Theater Arrested for Showing Film That Didn't Cause Promised Disturbance.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest New Service.

DES MOINES, IA.—After three of the men connected with the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Berchel theater had been arrested charged with showing a play calculated to incite a riot, Judge W. S. Ayres in the district court refused to grant an injunction asked for by the theater men to restrain the city officials from interfering with performances. The judge held that it was a matter for the criminal division of the municipal court to decide and not one for a court of equity. There was no disorder connected with the first showings of the film, upholding the contention of the theater men that the film did not come under the provisions of the ordinance upon which the ban was based.

E. A. Sherman, president of the Elliott-Sherman Film Company operated the machine after the arrest of the trio until an operator could be secured. The men arrested were Harold Cavanaugh, house manager of the Berchel; Floyd Bitting and Clarence E Hammer operators.

Sabbath Shows in Mason City.

Mason City, Ia.—Steps probably will be taken soon to find out what the people of Mason City think about the Sunday moving picture show. J E Williams, attorney for the theater managers who have been haled into court repeatedly announces that petitions will be circulated and that if a sufficient sentiment for the seventh day show is found, an attempt will be made to replace the present trouble-making ordinance.

P. C. Johnsen, of the People's Amusement Company, who paid one of the stock fines of $8.35, after one of the trials filed a demurrer, declaring the information which had been filed against him was based upon an ordinance which was unconstitutional.

Iowa Theater Changes.

Lyons, Ia.—W. H. Iverson of the Superba Theater has taken over the management of the Parkside Theater and has inaugurated a program of Triangle, Red Feather, Broadway Universal and V-L-S-E features. He will operate the Superba only two days a week, Tuesdays and Sundays, devoting it principally to serials. "The Iron Claw" follows "The Broken Coin" on the continued story menu.

Manson, Ia.—The "Cee Bee" theater is the new name of the I. M. P. theater which H. H. Ling sold to Coffin & Brown.

Harlan, Ia.—Hans Larson has taken over the two moving picture theaters here.

Norway, Ia.—The Ideal theater is the name under which the opera house here starts a moving picture career.

Mystic, Ia.—An addition to the Lyric building by O. V. Kennedy is preliminary to the operation of a moving picture theater.

Des Moines, Ia.—Harry Gottlieb has sold the Rex theater at Twentieth and Clark streets to R. I. Holcomb who has put in a new front and installed a new Powers machine.

Clinton, Ia.—Norman Samish and Louis Rosenfield of Creston have taken a five year lease on the A-muse-U theater here from C. H. and M. F. Henle and will operate it, retaining the name of the A-muse-U Theater Company. They control two houses in Creston and plan to acquire more Iowa houses, building up a chain which will make for efficient operation. Samish will be manager of the Clinton theater.

Brandon, Ia.—J. R. Schale has opened the new Pastime theater here and will give shows Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Council Bluffs, Ia.—A new moving picture theater in the West End of Council Bluffs is projected.

SOME FIRE INSPECTION.

Omaha Official Missed Fire Curtains in Picture Show.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

OMAHA, NEB.—"There certainly is need for motion picture theater inspection in Omaha," said Superintendent Schreiber of the Welfare board after he had found two photoplay houses sadly lacking in fire protection.

At one theater which he visited with a state inspector, he said, they tried the rear exits to determine just what the conditions would be in case of fire. They found it difficult to get through to the alley under ordinary conditions. Rubbish and boxes impeded the way from one exit door and six steps had to be mounted before going through the door leading to the alley. What would happen in a rush or panic is easily conjectured he continued. Neither theater had a fire curtain and the operating rooms were not in compliance with city ordinances.

What earthly use would a fire curtain be in a picture theater? Shall they censor fire scenes soon?

Bars Ad Films from Schools.

Lincoln, Neb.—Industrial films will be barred from the schools of Lincoln if they tend to advertise the products or service of any concern. This has been decided by the board of education after the matter was put up to them by Superintendent F. M. Hunter. Heretofore it has been the policy of the superintendent to use his own judgment, but it is said the insistence of the local sales agents of an automobile that their films and lecturer be allowed in the schools forced an issue.

Nebraska Theater Changes.

Lincoln, Neb.—The new Orpheum theater at Twelfth and P streets has been opened. It uses four acts of vaudeville and three reels of pictures.

Nebraska City, Neb.—The new Airdome at Eleventh and Central avenues was opened with "A Law Unto Himself." Manager Blakeslee will use five reels of pictures, but Thursday and Friday nights will add vaudeville.

Hooper, Neb.—Roy Bott and W. E. Sanders are now in control of the moving picture theater here.

Newcastle, Neb.—The Star theater is now under the management of Fred Cornell.

Dakota Theater Notes.

HIGHMORE, S. D.—Eighteen miles northeast of Highmore on what is known as the Reed farm the Reed family has opened a moving picture show. Doctor Reed conceived the idea of a community amusement hall and with his family erected a building 30x60 feet and equipped it with a good picture machine. The hall was dedicated with a photoplay show followed by a three-hour dance for which the music was furnished by a four-piece orchestra recruited from the Reed family. Similar entertainments will be given from time to time for residents of the neighborhood who are distant from other amusement places.

Leola, S. D.—P. L. Schuchardt, undertaker and embalmer, who took over the moving picture theater here two years ago, has made it a live proposition. This spring he will build a 30-foot addition to increase the seating capacity, install all now opera chairs and redecorate throughout. Then four shows a week will be given. The morgue and show room is located over the theater.

Canastota, N. D.—The Commercial club has purchased a site upon which an opera house will be erected this summer.

Aberdeen, S. D.—E. G. Anderson, proprietor of the Princess theater, who recently took over the Comic theater from James Koch, plans a number of improvements including decorating. Lyle Anderson and D. Harris are in charge for the new proprietor.

Confiscation Threatened

Bold and Unabashed Robbery Seems to Be Contemplated by Mayor and City Officials of Northfield, Minn.—Refuse Renewal of License to Exhibitor Boll of Gem Theater—May Start a Municipal Theater.

By Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NORTHFIELD, MINN.—F. W. Boll, proprietor of the Gem theater here, is facing a dilemma in the refusal of the mayor and city council to renew his license which has expired. Mr. Boll stands to lose his entire investment because the city has under consideration the establishment of a municipal monopoly on the film business. This would make it impossible for Mr. Boll to dispose of his property or any considerable part of it.

The whole question arose over the charge that he had shown some pictures which were not considered proper entertainment for children. This charge led to concerted action by the club women and church people of the city. The present plan is to have the city take over the film business of the municipality. Only one theater would be in use, that probably in the Auditorium. Some representative of the board of education would be placed in charge and only pictures which had passed a censorship of parents and school officials would be shown. It is claimed that the pictures thus carefully passed on would be entertainment as much as any films, while they would have the added advantage of being educative as well. In fact the theater would actually become a part of the Northfield school system.

The people here claim the National Board of Censorship is in no sense a national body with absolute powers for keeping the films clean, but is made up of persons on th e payroll of producing companies, which we know is not the case as the committees give their services and are often women of wealth and leisure.

OPENING OF THE NEW ASTER.

Ruben and Finkelstein New Sixth Street House Seats 1,200.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ruben and Finkelstein have announced that their new theater at Sixth street and Hennepin avenue, which will be open to the public this month, will be named the New Aster, after the flower which blooms so profusely in Minneapolis in gardens in the late summer. The idea of the flower is to be carried throughout in the decorations, the first intimation to the visitor being in the canopy outside, which is in the shape of an inverted aster.

The lobby and stairways have a deep wainscoting of marble, with panels made by black lines. In the interior the chief color scheme is canary and black. Through the side windows are garden scenes; behind have been reproduced elaborate gardens of foliage and blossoms, asters predominating, that seem to stretch far into the distance. Along the balcony ledge are translucent glass squares of art glass portraying dramatic and comic faces and behind these lights are shining

The theater is to have one of the largest pipe organs in the city and will have a seating capacity of 1,200. An elaborate and convenient rest room has been provided for the ladies, where they may await their friends, seeing all who enter yet themselves invisible to the crowding public. The theater will be an exclusive film house.

J. Woodhouse Goes to R. & F. Circuit.

Minneapolis, Minn.—James Woodhouse, press agent for James Keogh's theater, where he has been located in the service of the Saxe Brothers, has resigned to be general press representative for Ruben and Finkelstein, who own and control several theaters in Minneapolis and St. Paul. Several of their theaters are in course of construction. Work on them is being delayed owing to the strike of master painters and decorators.

Buy Rex Theater.

St. Paul, Minn.—Gilosky and Kelly, already pretty much in the running with a "string" of picture houses in St. Paul, have taken over the Rex theater.

Royal Theater Leased.

Elk River, Minn.—The Youngerwood Bros. have given up their work at Morris, Minn., and have taken over the Royal theater at Elk River, Minn.

Lobby Like Tent for "Peg o' the Ring."

Minneapolis, Minn.—The New Garden theater looks like a circus tent from the front these days. The public enters the house through the "flaps" and seems to be enjoying the novelty. The circus front is all part of Manager D. C. McClellan's scheme for advertising "Peg O' the Ring."

After all, there is only one moving picture paper that you really need, and this is IT, conducted by the largest and most experienced staff of editors and correspondents.

Princess Changes Hands.

Minneapolis, Minn.—L. J. Blumberg has disposed of his interest in the Princess theater to Hitchcock and True.

New Garrick Dolled Up.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Calvert has "dolled-up" the New Garrick theater. The whole garb, however, consists of a new illuminating system. Amber is the prevailing color in the auditorium and the lobby. The entrance is lighted by three globes of amber-hued glass. The stage has a background illumination of green, but objects in the foreground are distinguished by crimson rays. The scheme makes the New Garrick look homey.

75 Local Screeners Now.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Twin City Screen Club, although a youngster of only a few weeks, is developing wonderfully precocious traits. Starting with a mere handful, the club now has a membership of about seventy-five. The prospects are for a rush season of memberships. Perhaps the most notable member of the club so far is Carle Laemmle, who joined while at the convention recently. The convention enabled the boys to draw in a lot of out-of-town memberships.

Wabasha, Minn.—The theater at Wabasha has been remodeled. Manager Burkhardt reports a good run of business.

Northfield, Minn.—The Lyric theater and the opera house at Northfield have been leased and taken over for moving picture purposes by L. C. Lunde, of Lake City, Minn. Mr. Lunde's son will be in charge at both houses.

The Favorite Feature Films took advantage of the large number of visiting exhibitors in town during the convention recently and gave a private showing of Pavlowa's "The Dumb Girl of Portici." Many availed themselves of the opportunity to see the film.

Work of Dallas Censors

Annual Report of Dallas, Texas, Board of Public Welfare Shows That Censors Last Year Condemned 19 Picture and and Made 799 Eliminations—Board's Attitude Toward a Legitimate Enterprise.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Special Correspondent, 618 Comal St., Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—The annual report of the board of public welfare of the City of Dallas was made public May 2. This includes the work of the moving picture censor for the year ending April 1. The present censor law has only been in effect part of that time, but the report includes work under the old law. The censor in each case was the same—Mrs. J. Reed Finley. Elmer L. Scott is director of the board

During the year Mrs. Finley considered 3,656 pictures, viewing 1,177 of them personally. Of the list 19 were condemned entirely and 799 eliminations were made. She also made 3,025 theater inspections and considered 460 vaudeville acts. Fourteen pictures were appealed to the board of appeals, but there is no record of the board reversing the judgment of the censor save in the case of "The Miracle of Life," which was shown to ladies only after being condemned.

One paragraph in the report claims that "the situation as regards moving picture censorship in Dallas is not unworthy of commendation. It is conducted with precision and undertakes to recognize the full rights of the proprietors of legitimate commercialized amusements and at the same time protect the public." This statement is perhaps true, although it is doubtful just how much protection the public needs in this line. As a general thing the public is pretty well able to protect itself first hand.

However, a consideration of the weekly bulletins issued by the department shows that with few exceptions the pictures condemned have been of the extreme type of sex problem plays and of the elimination the axe has fallen most heavily on cheap, vulgar comedies rather than on pictures with a moral. And seldom is an elimination made if the scene desired to be cut out was essential to the story .

As a general thing the censor has adhered closely to the lines laid down by the National Board of Review, in fact, all preliminary action is based upon the reports of that body. If censorship in its entirety was a logical proposition, then the censorship situation in Dallas might almost be called ideal. But it still remains to be proven that censorship is at all necessary.

Hippodrome Theater Sold.

Dallas, Texas.—The Hippodrome theater of Dallas, Texas, was bought under hammer at a trustee's sale, May 2, by W. H. Atwell, attorney, for $12,000. Several parties were interested with him in the purchase thereof. The theater has been in the hands of a receiver and had a long list of creditors.

Alamo Theater Burns.

Waco, Texas.—The Alamo theater of Waco, Texas, suffered a loss by fire May 4 resulting in $5,000 damages, on which $2,500 insurance was carried. J. W. Terry, proprietor, has rooms over the theater, and Mrs. Terry, with her sister, Miss Cora Terry, and Miss Mildred Ikard, narrowly escaped. Mr. Terry was in Houston at the time of the fire.

Fire in Theater.

Dallas, Texas.—Quite a little excitement was caused in the Queen theater, Dallas, Texas, May 5, when a film caught fire in the operating booth. But for the cool headedness of the organist, Miss Lorena Fairbanks, a panic would have occurred. Miss Fairbanks played on as if nothing unusual was happening, and while several left hurriedly the larger proportion remained in their seats. As the film was in a fireproof box, slight damage was done. The second reel of "Big Jim Garrity" was ruined.

F. M. Sanford Returns.

Dallas, Texas.—F. M. Sanford, who has been in California for the past year, where he went to go into the producing business, is back in Dallas. Mr. Sanford opened the World Film offices in Dallas, and managed same for a year and a half prior to going to California. As yet he has not announced his new plans.

Returns to Program Service.

Fort Worth, Texas.—The Victor Amusement Company, operating the Healy theater at Forth Worth, Texas, who have been running features for over a year, have decided that too much attention is paid to features, and not enough to program, which pleases the transient business. Beginning May 18 they will run regular program service.

Airdome at Collinsville.

Collinsville, Texas.—Collinsville, Texas is to have an air dome at once. It will be the first show to be operated in Collinsville since D. A. P. Hoffaker's theater was destroyed in the conflagration in January, when half of the business section of town was burned. The new air dome will be managed by Mr. Hoffaker.

An Interesting Woman.

Miss Betty Fairchild, manager of the Lyric theater, Sherman, Texas, was in Dallas April 28 on a business trip, and the World representative had the pleasure of quite a long conversation with her.

Miss Betty is a very interesting talker and withal a very interesting woman. She is, from a business standpoint, the oldest exhibitor in Sherman, having started the theater she still manages as the first in that town. And she has had some great experiences.

She is heart, soul, body and voice against censorship and loves to describe some of the set-tos she has had with the "purity" element in Sherman. At one time she had it hot and heavy, but she tamed them and made them eat out of her hand—that is, serve lunches in the theater lobby. At one time she advised members of the civic association if they wanted to start a censorship, they had best start in their own parlors. There is no censor law in Sherman as a result of Miss Betty's work, the police department seeming to have plenty of authority as it is.

Bickel Now a House Manager.

Waco, Tex.—Leroy Bickel, for some time past Dallas manager of the Blue Birds, and previously manager of the Paramount offices, has gone back into the exhibition end of the game and secured control of the Rex theater at Waco, Texas.

Consolidated Establishes Branch.

Houston, Tex.—The Consolidated Film and Supply Company, the southern branch of the Universal, has established a branch in Houston, Texas, subsidiary to the Dallas office. Charles D. Touchon, for many years with the Mutual and J. D. Wheelan, and more recently manager of the Newport theater, Dallas, is in charge of the Houston branch.

Since the resignation of Leroy Bickel, as special agent for Blue Birds, the regular consolidated organization has handled these features, and probably will continue to do so.

Dallas Territory Notes.

Clifton, Tex.—Fred Nelson, who is running pictures at the Clifton opera house, a second-floor auditorium, will in the near future open a ground floor house in a building that is being renovated for him.

Fort Worth, Tex.—The Star theater, the negro house which has been closed for the past three months, reopened May 1 under the management of J. H. Jones.

Blum, Tex.—Ellis Taylor has opened a picture house at this place, name not yet announced.

Meridian, Tex.—The Cozy theater at this place, under the management of Preston Hornbuckle, has been completely remodeled, making it an up-to-date house.

Gatesville, Tex.—C. H. Reesing & Co., of the Royal theater, have taken over the Queen, which gives them control of the theater business here.

Dallas, Tex.—Free moving pictures will be shown periodically in the auditorium of the city hall for the orphans in the different institutions of the city. Elmer L. Scott, director of the board of public welfare, is father of the scheme, and the different exchanges will loan films that are not in use.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

W. T. Henry Heads Local Exchange.

DENVER, COLO.—A rapid fire change in the management of the General Film exchange in Denver was made recently. W. H. Cree, who has been in charge of the office for almost a year, received a wire on Friday and left Saturday to become manager of the Los Angeles exchange. W. T. Henry, Salt Lake manager, arrived the day following Cree's departure and is now in command at the Denver exchange.

Mr. Henry is well known in this territory. He formerly was traveling auditor for the Mutual and gained a wide acquaintance among the exchange men. Henry broke into the moving picture industry with the General and after four and a half years' service took charge of the World office in Kansas City. Later he served two years with the Mutual and last January became manager of the Salt Lake exchange. Under his regime business in the Salt Lake office is said to have been doubled.

Highlands Changes Hands.

Denver, Colo.—Sam Berger has sold the Highlands theater to Mrs. E. G. Mowry, who will continue to operate it as a photoplay house. Mrs. Mowry was recently widowed.

Opens Theater Exchange.

Denver, Colo.—Bradley Fish, former Denver exhibitor, and later employed by the General Film as a road man in this territory, has opened a theater exchange in Denver for the buying and selling of moving picture houses.

Crist-Israel.

Denver, Colo.—Robert Crist, one of W. S. Rand's assistants in the local Triangle exchange, slipped one over on his friends last week by eloping. He married Miss Hazel Israel, a prominent young Denver girl. Mr. Crist and his bride were married at the time a party was being held at the bride's home. They were expected to be present, but instead they sent a record by messenger with orders that it be played on the Victrola. The record was of the song, "Good-bye Everybody, for I Got Married Today."

Submarine Mystery Comes.

Denver, Colo.—The first showing of the Submarine Mystery, the latest Mutual serial, was held in Denver last week. Manager Ward E. Scott had two score exhibitors of Denver and surrounding towns as his guest at the Baby Grand theater, while six reels or the first three episodes of the picture were shown.

Local Theater Changes.

Leadville, Colo.—Mandy & Belz, owners of the New Grand, began work May 1 on remodeling their house so as to accommodate 150 more persons. They will have 600 seats when the changes are completed.

Delta, Colo.—W. R. Teufel will increase the seating capacity of the Colonial theater from 400 to 600 and will install a number of Loge seats.

Buena Vista, Colo.—G. M. Pyle has begun the work of enlarging and improving the Orpheum. He will add 150 seats and increase the comfort of his patrons.

Hugo, Colo.—A deal has been closed here whereby W. S. Root of the Empress will become owner of the Empress at Sharon Springs, Kansas, and Mrs. E. L. Pope of Sharon Springs will get control of the local house. Both are first class moving picture theaters.

Lyons, Colo.—R. M. Owen has reopened the moving picture theater here.

Gunnison, Colo.—Benn & Hetherington have closed their theater at Gunnison.

Denver, Colo.—R. J. Miles of Elizabeth, Colo., called at the Mutual exchange and made arrangements for a traveling outfit and film service. He proposes to give two shows a week at Elizabeth, Kiowa and Elbert. Neither of these towns now has a theater.

Glenwood Springs, Colo.—O. W. Robertson, formerly a artner of Charlie Hughes in the Orpheum theater here, has reopened the Odeon and will show first-class moving pictures.

San Francisco Censors

City's Police Committee Will Recommend New Censor Ordinance to Board of Supervisors—Petitions Against It Have Been Circulated in Leading Theaters —May Try Referendum If It Passes.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—After hearings and deliberations which have extended over a period of several months the Police Committee of the Board of Supervisors has rendered a decision on the question of censorship and will recommend to the Board of Supervisors that the ordinance drawn up at the instance of members of the California Club and negro organizations, providing for a Board of Censors consisting of nine members and a strict regulation of the film industry be passed. To those who have followed this matter closely this decision did not come as a surprise, as it has been realized for some time that further argument was useless and that the real fight would have to be made before the Board of Supervisors.

Circulating Petitions.

Two plans of action are now open to exhibitors and exchange men and one of these is received their immediate attention. Petitions have been circulated for more than a week past in the leading theaters of the city and thousands of signatures have been secured against the passage of any censorship ordinance. The number of these will be greatly increased before the next meeting of the Board of Supervisors and it is hoped that the showing will be such that this body will decline to take action. In case, however, the petitions are disregarded and the objectionable ordinance passed plans are under way to invoke the referendum and there seems to be but little doubt but that the ordinance would be defeated by a tremendous majority when voted upon by the people at large. Such a step as this might be of real benefit to the industry in ascertaining the real wishes of the people on the question of the censorship of moving picture films.

Magnificent New Mission Theater Opens

Kahn and Greenfield House Officially Opened—Social and Political Leaders Present—Manager Is Robert Abraham.

San Francisco, Cal.—The New Mission theater erected for the Kahn and Greenfield Circuit on Mission street, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second, was formally dedicated on the evening of May 4 with a brilliant assemblage of men and women prominent in civic, social and business life in attendance. The opening was in charge of the Mission Merchants' Association and was participated in by Mayor Rolph and other members of the municipal family.

Manager Robert F. Abraham.

The evening's entertainment began with an organ recital on the magnificent instrument installed by the American Photo Player Company, the program consisting of the William Tell Overture, Aloha and The Rosary to demonstrate the possibilities of the organ. At the conclusion of this Mayor James Rolph, Jr., was escorted to his loge at the side of the auditorium by Manager Robert F. Abraham to the strains of the Star Spangled Banner and amid the applause of his neighbors in the Mission District. Mr. Abraham then appeared upon the stage and after a short talk introduced Joseph Levin, manager of the New Fillmore theater, and one of the owners of the circuit. Mr. Levin extended his thanks for the splendid manner in which the Mission people had responded on the opening night and outlined the policy of the house, which he said would be to show the best motion pictures obtainable at a uniform price of 10 cents for any seat. He called attention to the organ which had been installed at a cost of $25,000 and which was of local manufacture. He was followed by Mr. Kiel of Kiel Bros., owners of the property.

A surprise was then sprung by Mr. Levin, who introduced Miss Anita King, "The Paramount Girl," who was here for a week to appear at the Imperial where "The Race" is being shown. The president of the Mission Merchants' Association, J. J. Chick, made a short address and introduced Mayor James Rolph, Jr. The Mayor stated that he had been a resident of the Mission District for more than forty years and had seen this section develop from a cow pasture to one of the most thriving parts of the city. He extolled the beauty of the house and led three cheers for the success of the enterprise. Upon his leaving the stage the presentation of moving pictures commenced, the first one shown being scenes taken at the opening of the magnificent new City Hall in the grandest Civic Center in America.

Turner & Dahnken Activities.

San Francisco, Cal.—The management of the Turner & Dahnken circuit is making great preparations for the opening of its new house at Portland, Ore., on May 14, as notice of last week in Moving Picture World's Portland letter.

Fred Dahnken, Jr., of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, left recently for a month's stay at Los Angeles and San Diego, where he will combine business with pleasure. He made the trip by auto, going by way of Fresno.

FILM INTERESTS ON TRIAL.

Matter of Carrying Films by Passengers May Be Taken Up by Legislature.

San Francisco, Cal.—At a joint conference of members of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, members of the Alameda County Exhibitors' League, individual suburban exhibitors, representatives of local transportation systems and the United States Bureau of Explosives, held here a short time ago, the matter of allowing films to be carried on passenger trains and ferry boats as hand baggage was gone into again. An understanding was reached on the matter and it was agreed that if no more than six infringements of the present rules were discovered prior to the hearing before the Railroad Commission late in May no effort would be made to deprive exhibitors of their present privileges. The present rules are simply that the prescribed film cases be used, that they are properly labeled and that none are opened in transit. Film exchange interests are urging extreme caution and are insisting that films be properly packed and marked before being taken from their places of business. It was proposed at this conference that the matter be taken up in the Legislature at its next session to secure the passage of a law covering the question.

Heads Local World Film.

San Francisco, Cal.—M. E. Cory, owner of the Cory theater, and one of the best-known men in the film business on the Pacific Coast, has accepted the position of manager of the local branch of the World Film Corporation, succeeding H. W. Stubbins, who filled this post for a time following the resignation of Ralph Clark. Mr. Cory has long been a hard worker for the betterment of conditions in the film business, having been president of the local Exhibitors' League and a vice-president in the National body. He is also familiar with the producing and marketing end of the business, having had charge of the operations of the Sunset Motion Picture Company with headquarters in this city. His wide acquaintance in the trade and knowledge of the needs of exhibitors bespeaks success for him in his new connection.

Look Out for Stolen Film.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. H. Emmick, of the Peerless Film Service, is warning exhibitors and exchange men to be on the lookout for a copy of the Mutt & Jeff comedy, "In the Trenches," which disappeared recently from this office and is believed to have been stolen. The film was used last at the Verdi theater and the management of this house is positive that it was delivered to the exchange.

Photoville in Circuit

S. Morton Cohen Forms Association That Will Control Big Theaters in Pacific Northwest—Picture Program Rounded Out With Music and Vaudeville Becomes Popular—New Houses Open.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—S. Morton Cohen, pioneer in the moving picture field in this city, has completed the organization of a company which has taken over a chain of theaters in the Pacific Northwest, consummating one of the biggest deals effecting picture theaters made in this territory for a long time. The theaters are known as "photoville" theaters and the new company is called the Pacific Photoville Circuit. Mr. Cohen is president and will maintain his headquarters in Portland.

The term "photoville" was first applied to the class of entertainment shown at the Strand where photoplays are featured and vaudeville and musical acts are used to round out the show. The photoville houses on the new circuit are the Strand theater at Portland; Oak, at Seattle; Strand, at Spokane, which opened May 4, and the Tacoma theater, Tacoma, which will open May 14. The smallest of these theaters has a seating capacity of 1,300.

G. A. Metzger, Pacific Northwest manager for the Film Supply Company, handling Universal in this territory, closed a contract with the Pacific Photoville Circuit whereby films of the Bluebird and Red Feather brands and Universal comedies will be the feature attractions at its theaters.

LID ON SNUG.

Censors Have Now Got It Down All Around.

Portland, Ore.—A decade or so ago Sheriff Word of this city polished his star and went forth among the lights of crimson hue and declared that from that time the whir of the roulette wheel should ever be stilled and the shuffle of the faro deck should cease. So the lid was put on the town.

But the censor board has recently discovered that the lid was not clamped tight enough and that upon the screens of Portland's moving picture theaters the cowboys and the miners are wont to journey in from Red Dog or Crimson Gulch to the dance halls and squander their stage money at the games of chance. The censor board has therefore tightened the lid on the town and from recent rulings it is indicated that it will bar any gaming scene where money changes hands.

"Under Azure Skies," a three-reel Mustang western was recently subjected to the censor board's ruling and a gambling scene was eliminated, said Manager Reed of the Mutual office. He said there was no apparent reason why the scene should have been cut except that it was a gambling scene.

A month ago the board voted to adopt standards, but a protest against this action came from the exhibitors with the result that the board intimated that no set rules would be made. Among the proposed rules, the one eliminating gambling scenes was discussed. Evidently the viewers had this rule in mind when they viewed Mr. Reed's picture.

Sapho Picture Is Passed.

Portland, Ore.—The William Fox picture, "The Eternal Sapho," was shown at the Majestic recently after being subjected to two careful viewings by the censor board. The first time the film was shown to one of the viewers who passed it. Mrs. Colwell, secretary of the board, demanded a reviewing, however, which was had. After being scrutinized by two other viewers, the picture was passed with but two minor eliminations. "Sapho" was the cause of a disturbance with the censor board about two years ago before the passage of the present ordinance, when the picture was shown to the grand jury which saw nothing wrong with it and failed to take action. It was then that the emergency censorship ordinance was passed, said Edwin James, manager of the Majestic, commenting on the history of "Sapho" in films.

Metro Leaves Portland.

Following the visit of J. J. Unger, special representative of Metro with offices in San Francisco, and C. J. Kerr, of Seattle, supervisor of Northwest offices, it was announced that the Portland Metro office would be consolidated with that in Seattle and that Portland territory would be handled from the Sound City. The reason for the change, Mr. Unger said, was that the entire Pacific Northwest territory could be handled from Seattle. The change was effective May 14. Mr. Unger stated that A. S. Kirkpatrick, manager of the Portland branch, would be retained with the company and that the office force in Seattle would be increased to take care of the additional business. The withdrawal of the Metro exchange from the city came as a surprise to the Portland exhibitors who had looked upon it as a permanent institution on Film Row.

Columbia Dons Summer Garb.

Portland, Ore.—The Columbia theater has been refitted with cretonne draperies of blue and old rose and the walls and ceilings have been tinted to match the color scheme. An Italian garden set is in the making which promises to be a surprise to Portland screen fans. Manager Myrick now appears on the floor arrayed in a white tuxedo and all the members of the staff have been outfitted in white.

Local Theater Changes.

Gold Hill, Ore.—K. B. Wesleder, who operates a theater at Glendale, has leased the Comus, at Gold Hill from R. C. Kelsey.

Springfield, Ore.—Raudruff Bros. have sold the Bell theater here to W. J. White.

Marshfield, Ore.—Robert Marsden, Jr., who runs the Noble theater here, was a recent visitor in Portland booking service. Mr. Marsden is a popular exhibitor in the Coos Bay country and arranges bookings for several theaters there.

Portland, Ore.—Wm. Graeper, owner of the Union Avenue theater, Portland, was a recent visitor in Seattle.

Portland, Ore.—Mary Edgett Baker, daughter of Commissioner Baker of Portland, and who played in stock at the Baker theater until the season closed recently, has gone to California to appear in pictures.

Yamhill, Ore.—C. P. Lytton has purchased the Casino theater.

Vale, Ore.—J. B. Quinsberry has sold the Rex theater.

Boise, Idaho.—Jack Mitchell has opened the old Kaiser theater at Boise and renamed it the Liberty.

Portland, Ore.—I. Rosenthal, manager of the Sun Photoplay Company, in San Francisco, was a recent visitor in Portland.

STRAND OPENS WITH ECLAT.

Fireworks on Roof, a Band Playing on Street and a Parade Start Theater.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—A fireworks display on the roof, a band concert on the street in front and a street parade headed by a brass band, marked the re-opening of the Strand theater which was closed for several days after being opened for a short time by C. S. Crews.

It was opened as a part of the Pacific Photoville circuit, incorporated, which S. Morton Cohn, Portland, is organizing. It will show vaudeville attractions and Bluebird and other feature photoplays, with a straight policy of 10 cents admission, for any seat in the house. Programs ordinarily will change Sunday and Wednesday.

Mr. Cohn personally directed the reopening of the Strand theater, and his personal representative, W. B. Armstrong, will be resident manager for the time being. C. S. Crews has withdrawn from Spokane and has returned to Walla Walla, where he will continue to operate his two theaters. The opening program, was a Bluebird photoplay in six reels entitled "Elusive Isabel," with Florence Lawrence in the lead.

First avenue was crowded with people and automobiles during the concert and other exhibition. Mr. Cohn has organized the Strand Theater Company to operate the local house, the Pacific Photoville circuit being the holding corporation for all the theaters in the chain.

Reopening of Portland Lyric.

Just thoroughly remodeled and with some new features installed, the Lyric theater is now a modern motion picture house. A new front has been constructed, the theater is redecorated throughout and a new operating room installed with two new simplex machines. This latter feature will do away with the waits between pictures.

A modern ventilating system has also been installed under which the air is completely changed every three minutes. New tungsten lamps have been placed in the house and other minor changes made.

The program there will include Mutual masterpieces for two shows of the week with shorter subjects on other days. Cartoon comedies, Chaplin films and a travelogue will frequently be introduced.

B. W. Copeland, manager of the Rex theater, Spokane, was the first to show the Al Smith pictures of a mountain lion hunt by H. H. Bakker and his wife, and the capturing of the lion recently taken in Montana. The chase, as shown on the screen, is interesting.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Bakker and three of their mountain lion hunting dogs as well as one of the large mountain lions in a cage were on exhibition in front of the theater.

Vancouver Items.

Nanaimo, B. C.—Through the courtesy of Manager George Beattie a very successful benefit for the Nanaimo Hospital was given at the Dominion theater on a recent evening, and a substantial amount was raised for this worthy institution. In addition to a pleasing program of pictures, numbers were contributed not only by local people, but also by some who came from Vancouver especially to assist. Two performances were given, under the auspices of the ladies' auxiliary of the hospital association, with Mrs. G. B. Brown in charge.

Business Notes and Personals

Victoria, B. C.—Previous to the initial showing of Triangle productions at the Columbia theater, Manager N. B. Maysmith took a page ad. in a local paper, including in the ad. a coupon for admission to the theater. A very liberal ruling was made in respect to this, as the coupon could be used at any time within the first two weeks. Admission price at the Columbia has been set at ten cents for all seats.

Vancouver, B. C.—L. J. Quagliotti, proprietor of the Variety, Romano and Empress theaters in Victoria, B. C., spent a few days in Vaucouver recently calling on his brother Hector, of the Colonial. Later both returned to Victoria in connection with some important business, an announcement of which is expected in a short time.

VANCOUVER TICKET TAX.

May Levy Twenty Per Cent. of Value on Tickets.

Victoria, B. C.—The provincial government has recently had under consideration the levying of a tax on theater tickets, under arrangements similiar to those obtaining in the three other provinces where such a tax is in force. It is understood that the present intention is to tax theater tickets at the rate of one, two and three cents each, which presumably will amount to a tax of twenty per cent. of the value of the tickets. It is stated that such a tax would return to the government a sum approximating $125 a day, from the city of Vancouver alone.

Moving picture men as a whole are against the plan, and interviews have recently been had with Premier Bowser regarding the matter. Exhibitors declare that the tax would be unconstitutional, and that to levy it would simply result in strong objection on the part of theatergoers, and great inconvenience to all parties concerned.

A Benefit Every Month.

Chilliwack, B. C.—The management of the Imperial theater is giving the house on one night each month for an entertainment in aid of the local hospital. The latest concert, held recently, consisted of a playlet written and acted by local talent, solos, musical selections by the Kelland-Chevalley orchestra, and the regular Imperial bill of moving pictures. This house has just started "The Goddess."

Red Cross Benefit at the Rex.

Esquimalt, B. C.—At a Red Cross benefit given recently at the Rex theater an innovation was introduced in the form of selections by the military band of the 11th Battalion, Canadian Mounted Rifles, in addition to the usual features of these programs.

Patriotic Program at the Princess.

Edmonton, Alberta.—A patriotic program was given on a recent evening at the Princess theater, under the auspices of the Asquith Chapter, Daughters of the Empire. A feature of the program was an address by a returned veteran of the Princess Patricia Regiment.

Theaters Help Baby Welfare.

Calgary, Alberta.—Starting off the Baby Welfare Week fostered by the Naomi Mothers' Society, a Sunday meeting, at which Mayor Costello presided, was held at the Empress theater, where addresses were delivered regarding the proper care of children. On the following Wednesday a showing of special films was given at the Princess theater, where a large audience gathered to view the pictures.

L. A. Rostein Opens Empress Theater.

Vancouver, B. C.—L. A. Rostein, a well-known local man and a resident of this city for the past thirty years, has secured the Empress theater, which has been dark for some time, and will open it on May 29 as a combination house, playing Cort, Shubert and Klaw & Erlanger attractions. The theater will be completely renovated before the opening.

New City Time Confusing.

Winnipeg, Man.—Flood conditions in the Winnipeg district have interfered slightly with attendance at local theaters recently, but normal conditions are now restored.

An hour's change in the city time, in furtherance of a "daylight saving" scheme, is resulting in some slight confusion in regard to starting hours in the theaters, and most houses are now advertising somewhat along this line: "Continuous performance from 10 a. m. Standard Time, or 11 a. m., New City Time, to 11 p. m., Standard Time, or 12 p. m., New City Time."

Need an Appeal Board

British Columbia Law Makers Discuss Motion Picture Act—Liberals Want An Appeal Board—Conservatives Think Censor Is Raising the Moral Standard of the Films—An Election Near.

By E. C. Thomas, Special Correspondent, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The discussion in the British Columbia Legislature relative to the proposed amendment to the Moving Pictures Act, affecting the examination and licensing of operators, has developed into a broader question involving censorship and the conduct of the censor's department generally.

Lacks an Appeal Board.

During a recent sitting of the house the amendment was brought up for debate, and H. C. Brewster, Liberal leader, launched into an objection to the extreme power given the censor under the act, drawing particular attention to the fact that there is no appeal from his decisions. There should certainly be an appeal board, said Mr. Brewster, and he cited the example recently set in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, where the new Public Amusements Act expressly provides for such a board. While Mr. Brewster stated that he was in favor of some form of censorship he did not think such sweeping power as is given to the censor should be delegated to any officer of the government, because of his natural liability to err in one direction or the other. He recommended that provision be made for an appeal board to pass on rejected films, the salaries or fees of the members to be paid through costs levied on the film men making unsuccessful appeals.

Premier Bowser in replying to this suggestion argued for the retention of the present system, and said that such a board would be of no value, as it would have to be composed of a representative of the moving picture interests, a representative of the moral forces in the province, and a chairman, who would of course be the censor himself. This, the World hardly need point out, would in no sense constitute an appeal board, as such a body should be entirely distinct from the influence of the censor. With one member of the board suggested judging pictures by purely theological standards, any reconsideration of a rejected film would simply give the censor, with the deciding vote, a chance to decide that his previous rejection was entirely proper, and reaffirm his decision. An "appeal" board such as this would be worse than none at all. Mr. Bowser announced that he, as attorney-general, constituted a court of appeal, but it has been pointed out that as there is nothing in the act making such a provision, the whole matter would be subject to the attorney-general's whim.

"When you see a censor believing, as our censor does," said Mr. Bowser, "in raising the moral standard of moving pictures, there cannot be such a great amount of criticism. I may say that I agree with him and encourage him in his stand for a higher moral standard."

No Need of Any Censorship.

Parker Williams, senior member of the Opposition, objected to censorship in any form, and called attention to the fact that if a moving picture theater should become objectionable through the type of pictures shown, the same steps could be taken against it as against any other undesirable entertainment. It seemed to him that there could be no valid reason for rejecting a film which had been passed in other provinces, and if these rulings were followed there would be considerable reduction in the expense of conducting the department. Mr. Williams caused much amusement at the premier's expense, remarking that it must be interesting to Mr. Bowser, after a hard day's work, to go and have run off for his inspection those films not passed by the censor. He also stated that if the premier was as poor a judge of what might be good or bad for a spectator to see in a picture as he was a judge of political morals, he would not put much reliance in him. Mr. Williams added that he understood that the premier was interested in a moving picture theater (doubtless referring to the Colonial in Vancouver).

H. H. Watson, Vancouver Conservative, came to the defense of the censor and naively remarked that judging from the number of people who attended the moving picture theaters in this province, they appeared to be excellently conducted and well supervised by the censor. In his opinion, the theaters are at present doing a more lucrative business than any other branch of trade. "The only complaint against the censor is when he refuses some highly sensational or immoral picture," declared Mr. Watson. "No good film is ever turned down. For my part I think that the censor is to be congratulated on the manner in which he discharges his duties. It must be gratifying to the people of Vancouver. I go to the movies from time to time, and I have never yet seen anything to offend my idea of what is moral."

The Election Near.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD correspondent, in the course of a conversation with the manager of a local film exchange, remarked on the small number of pictures being rejected at present, as compared with a few months ago. "Yes," answered the exchange man, "but this is simply the calm before the storm. If the Bowser government is continued in power at the general election which is scheduled to take place within a few weeks, we will go back to the same conditions as before, with productions of the highest class rejected on the slightest provocation. In my opinion, the present intention is only to suspend the drastic regulations until after the election." This, it may be said, is the view held by many local men connected with the industry.

Another film man spoke in the same strain. "Don't lose sight of the fact," he said, "that the stringent rules regarding censorship are still a part of the Moving Pictures Act, but are simply not being enforced at present. If the government believes that the present standards are right and proper, let the law be changed so as to make these regulations permanent, instead of leaving the way open for a return to the conditions which formerly existed. If the government is not prepared to make such changes, its intentions will of course remain under suspicion."

"As for the remarks of Mr. Watson," added the speaker, "if he has attended the picture shows from time to time within the past six months, or since the 'Spoilers' fiasco, and has seen nothing to offend, it simply means that the vast majority of pictures previously rejected were so unobjectionable that he has not noticed any difference since films of this class have been allowed to pass. A great proportion of the features shown here at present would have been rejected six months ago, and in fact, many which were rejected previous to that time have since been approved and exhibited. For corroboration of this statement the members of the House might ascertain how many reels the censor has rejected since the beginning of the present year, for instance, and see how the average compares with that maintained during the past year."

BIOGRAPH.

THE MISTAKE (Reissue—May 22).—The cast: Pardners (Henry Walthall and Charles H. Mailes); the wife (Blanche Sweet).

There in the lonely gold hills the friendship between the two men was staunch and true. A letter came announcing the coming of the wife on the next stage. "It will make no difference," declared the husband. "You will like the wife."

But the friend in thinking it over began to fear the woman and the restraint her presence might bring. He concluded to go away and left a note behind surrendering his share of the claim to the other. Once in the mountain he realized his fears were foolish and returned to the home where he was fast being forgotten. Then the wife's attention to the friend for her husband's sake aroused jealousy, and one day when the husband started out to dispose of their diggings over the mountains, Indians attacked the shack.

With the wife the friend sought safer quarters. The jealous husband returned to find his home empty. Then came the fearful mistake. He pursued what he thought was the eloping pair and in his jealous rage shot at his friend. However great his repentance might have been he could not bring back the life of his friend.

WHO'S LOONEY NOW? (Two Parts—May 23).—The cast: Prof. Mozart Von Clef (Dave Morris); Octavius B. Flat (S. Aitken); Dr. Ludwig Guggenheimer (Wm. Sloane); Charlie Knickerbocker (Bud Ross); Bill O'Fare, waiter (Heywood Mack); Officer Nabem (Hector V. Sarno); Guards (Tom Wallace and George Pearce); Mrs. Von Clef (Kate Toncray); Mrs. Guggenheimer (Clairettê Claire); Birdie (Miss Busby); Mr. Guggenheimer's daughter (Gertrude Basbrick).

Mrs. Von Clef becomes suspicious of her husband, Professor Mozart Von Clef, when she finds a hair on his coat. Von Clef leaves to rehearse his orchestra, and Mrs. Von Clef decides to follow him. Birdie, an escaped lunatic with a mania for placing wreaths on the heads of everyone she meets, is charmed by the music from Von Clef's orchestra, and goes in, placing a wreath on Von Clef's head. Not suspecting Birdie of being a lunatic, Von Clef makes an appointment with her to meet him at the summer garden, when he sees Mrs. Von Clef coming. Mrs. Von Clef indignantly shows her husband the hair, but he explains that it is only a fiddle string. Charlie Knickerbocker, another lunatic, escapes from his keepers. Dr. Guggenheimer plans a party for his daughter, Lena, and calls on Von Clef to arrange for the music. Charlie Knickerbocker "flits" into the summer garden and flirts with Birdie, who has given up hope of seeing Von Clef. Von Clef sees an opportunity to get away and leaves with Dr. Guggenheimer. Mrs. Von Clef sees her husband leave Dr. Guggenheimer and go in another direction, and disguised with a heavy veil, she decides to follow him.

Von Clef reaches the summer garden and gets a shock when he finds Birdie drinking lemonade with Charlie. Von Clef upbraids Charlie and sends him away, crying. Mrs. Von Clef sees Charlie crying and sympathizes with him. He takes a great fancy to her, and Mrs. Von Clef does not suspect him of being a "nut."

Birdie leaves Von Clef, and Mrs. Von Clef flirts with her husband. He is easily deceived and Mrs. Von Clef is pleased with the result of her scheme. Von Clef tries to kiss her, and gets a shock when she raiser her veil. In order to save himself, Von Clef decides to take a fit. Alarmed at his condition, Mrs. Von Clef summons Dr. Guggenheimer. The doctor tells Mrs. Von Clef he thinks her husband is a lunatic, and that he will have to "bleed" him. Von Clef soon recovers when he hears this and makes his escape. He jumps into a barrel, not knowing that it is filled with water, and gets a ducking. Charlie accompanies the Von Clefs home and offers his assistance, but when Von Clef recovers he puts Charlie out.

Von Clef leaves to engage musicians for the doctor's party, and Charlie again joins Mrs. Von Clef. Octavius B. Flat, a flute player, is engaged at the Musical Union, and Von Clef tells him to call at seven o'clock.

Charlie and Mrs. Von Clef are merrymaking when Von Clef returns. Von Clef enters unobserved and is puzzled at his wife's affection for Charlie. Von Clef goes out again and rings the bell, and Mrs. Von Clef hides Charlie in a closet. Von Clef enters in a towering rage and drags Charlie out of the closet, giving him at the same time an exhibition of his marksmanship. Charlie takes flight, and when Octavius B. flat comes in, Von Clef thinks it is Charlie returning and shoots at him.

Everything is in readiness for the Guggenheimer but Von Clef keeps them waiting for the music. Von Clef upbraids his wife, warns her against Charlie, and before leaving locks her up in the closet. Charlie hears Mrs. Von Clef's cries for help and with the aid of a ladder, he rescues her. Von Clef and Octavius on their way to the Guggenheimers stop in a restaurant and Von Clef again meets Birdie.

Von Clef is insane with jealousy when Charlie and Mrs. Von Clef enter the restaurant. He disguises himself as a waiter and plans to be revenged. Mrs. Von Clef does not recognize her husband and shows plainly her love for Charlie. When they leave, Von Clef thinks his wife is eloping with Charlie and he gives the alarm. Birdie is caught and is on her way to the "House of Nuts" when Von Clef solicits the aid of the keepers to help him catch his wife who is eloping with Charlie on a tandem bicycle. Mrs. Von Clef and Charlie lead their pursuers a lively chase and are overtaken at the asylum gate. Von Clef and his wife learn for the first time that Charlie and Birdie are lunatics, and order is restored in the Von Clef household.

LUBIN.

"OTTO THE HERO" (May 22).—The cast: Otto (Davy Don); Clarence (George Egan); Mr. Prunes (Bernard Siegel); Mrs. Prunes (Florence Williams); Patsy (Patsy De Forest). Written by Jack O'Neil. Produced by Edwin McKim.

Mrs. Prunes is the keeper of a boarding house. She has a charming daughter, Patsy, with whom Otto and Clarence, two of the boarders, are in love. Clarence is a member of the militia and on account of his uniform is in the lead of the race for the heart and hand of the fair Patsy. When Otto proposes he is promptly rejected by Patsy who informs him that she is determined to marry nobody but a hero.

While nursing his woe Otto chances to read a newspaper account of a band of highwaymen being put to flight by the timely appearance of a famous football star. Otto decides to hire a couple of yeggs to hold up Patsy and Clarence so that he may rescue them and reveal himself as a gallant hero.

The deal is made but just before the hour for the fake holdup the highwaymen send him a letter demanding an increase in wages for their job. Otto loses the letter and it is found by Clarence who makes a hasty call on the highwaymen and engages them on his own account to holdup Otto and Patsy with Clarence playing the hero role.

Otto, however, has followed Clarence and from concealment overhears the bargain by which the yeggs are to hold up the auto containing Otto and Patsy. The latter then sends her father and mother out on an auto ride over the designated route while he and Patsy in another auto speed to a minister's house to be married.

The highwaymen hold up the other car, but Mr. Prunes puts up a stiff fight. Mrs. Prunes faints and Clarence hurries away to get a minister with the intention of stealing a march on everybody by marrying Patsy. At the minister's house he finds Patsy and Otto hand in hand. Mr. Prunes arrives a moment later and assaults Clarence. In the mix-up a lamp is overturned and everybody escapes from the house but Patsy, who has fainted.

Mr. Prunes, finding his daughter left behind, frantically calls for a hero. Clarence sees the opportunity and makes the rescue, and "so they were married and lived happily ever after."

PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE (Three Parts—May 25).—The cast: Walter Stanley (Alan Forrest); Dean Carroll (Cecil Van Auker); Maude Carroll (Adda Gleason); Trained Nurse (Lucy Payton); Earl Bond (George Routh); Theda Henderson (Evelyn Page); Mr. Henderson (Ben Hopkins). Written by L. V. Jefferson and Josephine McLaughlin. Directed by Melvin Mayo.

Walter Stanley, a young minister, is a worker among the slums. Maude Preston is his assistant and Stanley falls in love with her. She meets Dean Carroll, a struggling young physician, who, with his partner Earl Bond, has an office on the outskirts of the slums. A mutual love springs up between them which is followed by a wedding which is performed by Stanley. Bond has met Theda Henderson through an accident to her father, an old millionaire and has married her. Bond lets his profession slide and when his father-in-law is taken seriously ill, he realizes that he is unable to handle the case.

Bond calls in his old partner to take care of Mr. Henderson. After days and nights of fighting, Carroll, worn out with fatigue, takes a chance of leaving his patient in the care of Bond and the nurse while he snatches some rest. He mixes two bottles of medicine, one a deadly poison and gives explicit instructions to the nurse. Bond and the nurse carry on a flirtation in the sickroom and when the half-hour arrives to administer one medicine, Bond pours from the wrong bottle. The nurse gives Mr. Henderson the dose, and he dies immediately.

Terrified, Bond throws the blame on the nurse, who, seeing Carroll's medicine case, conceives the idea of refilling the poison bottle and throwing the blame on Carroll. Bond does this, while the nurse awakens Carroll. Bond tells him that the dose of poison was too strong, and that when he went to administer the other medicine, he found Henderson dead. On examining the bottle, Carroll finds it apparently untouched, and on finding the bottle in his case half-empty he believes he must have been guilty of giving an overdose. In his weakened condition, Carroll goes to pieces. Bond advises him to go away immediately. Hastily Carroll writes a note to his wife to be delivered by Bond. He puts on Bond's coat and boards a train going West. Bond takes his friend's coat, vest, etc. and leaves them on the bank of a river to start the belief that the physician has committed suicide. The nurse gives the alarm at the right time, and Carroll is accused of the death of the millionaire. Stanley reads the news and hurries to the side of Maude, who is overcome with the shock.

A year passes. On the desert, Carroll lives in solitude—tortured by remorse, afraid to return as Bond writes him it will not be safe. Maude has taken up the work of helping the poor and she and Stanley are fast becoming sweethearts. Bond, stung with remorse, has taken to drink and Theda disgusted with him treats him with contempt. A quarrel occurs, during which, Bond is shaken into a semblance of manhood and leaves the house, determined to atone somehow for his crime. He goes to Maude and Stanley, pleading to be allowed to help with the sick poor, and they gladly install him in their little hospital office. There he sees the growing love between the two but is unable to help matters without incriminating himself.

Bond contracts diphtheria from a sick child and dying writes a confession, giving it to Stanley together with Carroll's address. Stanley has professed his love to Maude, and she has returned it, when the story of the dying man comes. That night, Stanley passes through his Garden of Gethsemane, but his better self triumphs and he resolves to get Carroll and bring him back. He sees Maude, who by her open love for him, makes his sacrifice so hard he leaves her abruptly.

Stanley finds Carroll and gives him the confession; the former physician, broken and grey, is overcome by the news that he at last is free. Stanley tells him his wife is waiting for him and Carroll makes eager preparations to go to her at once. Maude, lonely and sad, is suddenly startled by the appearance in the garden of Stanley. With a glad cry, before he can stop her, she flings herself against him, protesting her love. Carroll waiting eagerly to go to her, is a witness of the meeting and realizes that believing him dead, his wife has grown to love the minister. When he makes himself known Maude, startled at his reappearance, runs away. Alone, Maude makes her decision. She returns to the two men, and Carroll leading her to Stanley, joins their hands. The minister and the wife lock fingers and looking into each other's eyes read there the visions of happiness that might be theirs; then Maude looks at her wedding ring. Stanley has read her decision and stands with bowed head as she goes to Carroll, laying her hands on his shoulders. She has made her sacrifice.

OH, YOU UNCLE! (May 27).—The cast: Billy Hodges (Kempton Greene); Uncle Oscar (Francis Joyner); Cutey (June Daye); Mazie Gay, an actress (Lenore Peacock); Stenographer (Edithe Pierce). Written by Bide Dudley. Directed by Clay M. Greene.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

Billy Hodges, living in a boarding and rooming house in New York, is about twenty-eight years old and is employed in an office at $25 a week. He is badly in debt. Billy remembers just after receiving a lot of bills by mail, that his uncle, Oscar Hodges, of Pickwick Corners, Ind., wrote him recently to the effect that when he (Billy) decided to marry he'd send him $10,000 as a wedding gift. Billy decides that he'll have to get married at once in order to pay his debts.

He is very fond of Mazie Gay, an actress, and she cares for him. He calls her up and proposes. She accepts. Then Billy writes his uncle that he is to wed and suggests that the $10,000 be sent him. Uncle Oscar is an old bachelor of perhaps fifty-five. He is, to put it mildly, something of a sport, but has managed to conceal the fact from his nephew. He decides to drop in on his nephew suddenly.

Billy has always believed that Uncle Oscar was a quiet, religious man and Uncle Oscar has thought the same about Billy. Therefore, when they do meet, each is prepared to treat the other as a quiet, religiously inclined person, albeit Uncle Oscar was a bit skeptical. Billy has been playing poker in his room all night when Uncle Oscar arrives. Uncle Oscar first meets Cutey, the landlady's daughter.

Uncle and Billy give each other "quiet" presents and Billy starts out to entertain his relative simply and modestly. There is a dinner with chorus girls who are told to act modestly, etc. Finally Uncle Oscar and Billy discover that each is really a sport at heart and they then proceed to have a high old time. As a finish Billy marries Mazie and receives his $10,000 and Uncle Oscar surprises them by marrying Cutey, and telling Billy that he could have had twice that amount if he had been on the level with Uncle.

KALEM.

THE MASTER SWINDLERS—Sixth Episode of "The Social Pirates" (Two Parts—May 1).—The cast: Mona (Marin Sais); Mary (Ollie Kirkby); Harry the Hun (B. Furey); Melnotte, the art dealer (Thomas Lingham); Crogan (Edward Clisbee); Mr Watson (Frank Jonasson). Direction: James W. Horne.

Mona and Mary, out of funds, are spending their last coin in a bakery for rolls when Harry the Hun enters to telephone. Harry is a clever art thief who really possesses genius as a painter. A tattoo mark on his hand arouses Mona's suspicions as to his identity and the girls follow him to the Art Gallery.

Harry, posing as a serious art student, is engaged in painting a copy of the famous Monna Vanna. The girls later follow him to the store of Melnotte, a crooked art dealer, and they are convinced that some sinister plan is on foot. Mary uses a clever ruse to secure employment in Melnotte's store, while Mona keeps her eye on Harry. The girls have their finger in the pie therefore when Monna Vanna is stolen and an old copy substituted, while the conspirators arrange to sell the original to a wealthy art patron.

By clever wits that keep the girls always a step in advance of the plotters, they succeed both in securing the large reward offered for the return of the Monna Vanna and in bringing Melnotte and Harry to justice.

HAM AND THE MASKED MARVEL (May 2).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); The girl (Norma Nicholls). Directed by Harry Edwards.

Ham and Bud fall victims to Norma, but they run afoul of hubby, six foot two and big and broad. Hubby seeks revenge but Ham and Bud are fleet of foot. So a plan is concocted by which Ham is induced to put on the gloves in a finish bout with the Masked Marvel.

Ham and Bud believe in preparedness, so they examine the stage beforehand and find a trap door under one of the corners, through which, it is arranged, Bud will slip Ham a glove loaded with a brick. Ham almost quits when the Marvel removes his mask and is disclosed to be the wrathful hubby. But he manages to live through the first round and is all set for the big plan when the Marvel forces him to exchange corners.

Bud, unsuspecting, slips the loaded glove on the Marvel's hand. What happens to Ham is too sad to tell—but it makes a funny finish for this one-reel comedy.

ROMEO OF THE COAL WAGON (May 3).—The cast: Ethel (Ethel Teare); Jack (Jack MacDermott); His substitute (Victor Rottman); Ethel's father (Gus Leonard); Her brother (Freddie Fraelick). Written by S. A. Van Petten.

A newspaper account causes Ethel to boastfully declare "Burglars are not intelligent or they wouldn't be caught. I'll wager I could rob a house and not get caught." Her friends take her up on the bet and brother Fred suggests the house of Jack, a wealthy bachelor, as a likely victim. Ethel goes off to prepare for the job while Fred telephones Jack who leaves the window conveniently open, dons a rough garb and hides on the lawn in waiting for his visitor.

After Ethel has entered Jack follows—and in a minute Ethel has covered him with his own revolver saying "How dare you attempt to rob my home." She phones for the police but Jack works on her sympathy and promises to reform so she gets him a job as coal-heaver in her father's company. Jack gets a substitute to hold the job for him and as the "sub" is possessed of both a wife and dishonest ways the complications that follow before Jack and Ethel win happiness may be seen to provide many an opportunity for laughs.

THE DUMB HEIRESS (May 5).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); Rube (Frank Minzey); Silent Sam (Henry Murdock); Uncle Goldcoin (Richard Purdon); Aunt Goldcoin (Mary Taylor-Ross); The cousins (Arthur Albertson and Mary Kennedy). Written by Edwin Ray Coffin. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Pending the settlement of her uncle's estate Sis, the heiress, goes off to visit the Goldcoins, her city relatives. A palmist warns her that the first man she speaks to in the city will be her life's mate, so Sis, true to Rube, becomes dumb the minute a man approaches. Fortune hunters flock around her at the reception at the Goldcoins home, but through all sorts of mix-ups Sis never utters a word.

Suddenly a telegram arrives stating that the homestead, which comprises the whole of Sis' inheritance has been burned to the ground, so Sis flies to the train without the regrets of the fortune hunters. She arrives home to find that Rube faked the news in the telegram through fear of losing Sis to "one of them city fellers," and there is a joyful reunion.

THE HUMAN TELEGRAM (No 78 of the "Hazards of Helen" Series—May 6).—The cast: The operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Superintendent Purdy (P. Pembroke); The discharged operator (H Schum); President of the Western Railway (G. A. Williams); Mine foreman (Roy Watson). Directed by James Davis.

To prevent a three mile journey around the mountain the telegraph wires at the construction camp have been strung over the precipice from the station on the mountain top. The operator is discharged when the superintendent suspects him of treachery and Helen is transferred to the station.

Later, after the former operator has enlisted the aid of crooked brokers to use his knowledge in ruining the value of the road's stock, he receives an opportunity to get revenge on the superintendent. A car loaded with lyddite has been shipped to the camp to aid in the construction work and while the superintendent is inspecting it the operator rolls the door shut and starts the car and engine off around the curve.

Helen, from her post up on the mountain sees that a collision with the president's special is certain. She conceives a daring plan and grasping a heavy length of chain climbs the telegraph pole and starts the long slide down the wires. The nerve gripping scenes end when she finally reaches the tracks and climbing out on a rope is just in time to drop to the top of the runaway car which is quickly brought to a stop.

VITAGRAPH.

A LUCKY TUMBLE (May 15).—The cast: Freddy (William Dangman); Landlady (Florence Natol); Janitor (George O'Donnell); Burglar (William Lyttell, Jr.); Girl boarder (Lucille Crane); Widow (Jean Hubbell); Policeman (Harry Mayo). Author, James A. Stiles. Director, Frank Currier.

Freddy gets himself into a heap of trouble, and then unexpectedly gets out again. With no job, no money, no prospects of getting either, and the landlady kicking for the two weeks' rent which he owes, things look pretty gloomy. He is accidentally locked out of his room, clad in a pair of pajamas and a gloomy expression. It seems to him that every girl in the world is in the house, and he has some job dodging them. He runs up to the roof to seek refuge there, but finds the air too chilly for his comfort. He sits on the chimney and thus keeps himself warm. The smoke is forced through all the rooms in the house below and the tenants come up to learn the cause.

To hide from them, Freddy hides in another chimney and, losing his hold, tumbles down. He lands in a room where he sees a burglar struggling with a woman and trying to relieve her of her jewels. He lends his able assistance and soon has the thief yelling for mercy. He is handsomely rewarded for his bravery and proclaimed a hero by those who had come to lynch him for stuffing up the chimney. He makes the landlady happy by paying her the two weeks' rent he owes her, and then treats himself to a much-needed bath, for chimneys are not the cleanest places in the world.

SCENES IN ICELAND (On same as foregoing).—Wonderful views of the stately ice-topped mountains and deep ravines of this frozen country are shown on the same film as the above.

MORE MONEY THAN MANNERS (May 19).—The cast: P. Oodles (John T. Kelly); Mrs. Oodles (Kate Price); Lucille Oodles (Jewell Hunt); Nutty Oodles (Ed. Dunn); The Duke de Luxe (Templar Saxe); Duchess de Luxe (Genevieve Russell); Butler (Dan Hayes); Hector McMush (Hughey Mack). Authors, G. Graham Baker and Lawrence Semon. Director, Lawrence Semon.

Money is the only thing necessary to break into society. At least that is the impression of the Oodles family, who, having an abundance of the coin of the realm, decide to test the truth of this belief. They invite the Duke and Duchess de Luxe to their home. Here they treat them to an exhibition of table manners as they should not be. The Duke, enraged at this insult to his dignity, demands satisfaction in mortal combat. The duel starts and father soon thinks he is fighting against fifty men instead of one.

Just as he is about to "give up the ghost" and is saying his prayers, Hector, a suitor for the hand of Oodles' daughter, who had previously been ejected, enters. He decides to square himself and starts to rescue father. Another bloody battle follows and Hector is saved from being nailed to the wall by Oodles' son, who emerges from behind a couch, where he had been hiding, and battles with the Duke. Between them they subdue the duelist and lock him in a cupboard with the Duchess. The cupboard is then thrown into the river and the royal pair are left to work out their own salvation. Hector returns to the house, where he is hailed as a hero, and is given the hand of Lucille Oodles as his reward.

MISS ADVENTURE (Broadway Star Feature—Three parts—May 20).—The cast: Bess (Mary Anderson); Aunt Jane (Anne Schaefer); Harold (Webster Campbell); Doctor Hayes (Otto Lederer; Gloria (Corinne Griffith); Morsaline (Carmen Philips); Mrs. Hayes (Mrs. Buskirk); Arthur (Jack Mower); Tom (William Weston).

Everybody picks on poor little Bess. Bess is a good little soul but very capricious and her little practical jokes get her and all concerned into a mess of trouble. By substituting smallpox for grippe germs she has the whole town quarantined and incidentally causes her rich aunt Jane to leave in a huff. Her sisters return from college, but have no smile nor friendly greeting for Bess. After graduating from high school, Bess enjoys fond dreams of college, which she is soon forced to abandon when mother says that all their money is needed for sister's clothes. Then Jack arrives, and Bess's two sisters try to outdo each other to capture him. The poor fellow is between two fires. He samples hugs and kisses from both but is still undecided.

Little Bess gets even with her sisters by continually butting in on their loving. She puts Jack in many an embarrassing position by such pranks as falling into his lap from the top of a high tree and interrupting him when he is pleading his love to one or the other of the girls. She tricks him out rowing on the lake with her and upsets the boat. Once on shore, she laughs heartily at his humiliation. Jack's fighting blood is aroused and he decides to make Bess pay for her caprice. He runs after her, and after a fierce struggle, plants a kiss on her ruby lips. To further humiliate him, the family appears on the scene and catches him in the act. Jack leaves in haste and after he has gone, Mary is unable to forget the kiss he gave her. It isn't very long before Jack returns, this time to claim little Bess for his own. Her sisters fall in soft, too, and capture two unfortunate males. Perhaps after the nuptials Bess will settle down and discard her toys and become a real young lady.

THE COST OF HIGH LIVING (May 22).—The cast: Jack (Wm. Duncan); His Sister (Corinne Griffith); The Girl (Carmen Phillips); Her Father (Edgar Keller); The Cook (Anne Schaefer). Author, Jos F. Poland. Director, William Wolbert.

Jack, at college, runs low on cash, as college boys are wont to do, and wires his father for funds. The latter, tired of reimbursing his son, refuses the request and notifies him that he had better cut out the gay life. He also writes to his daughter who lives near the college, and tells her to get him interested in some girl so that he will buckle down and start to save. When sister tries to carry out her part of the contract, Jack balks and disappears when she tries to introduce him.

That night, the boys, out for a wild time, try to rip the roof off the town. Jack smothers one of the fellows in a blanket and leads him around the village. When the unlucky one is finally released, he lets a yell out of him that's loud enough to wake the whole town. The new cop on the beat sees a fine chance to distinguish himself and starts after the merrymakers. Jack seeks refuge in the first house he sees and is mistaken for the new butler. As luck would have it, this is the home of his sister's girl friend. He "buttles" very amateurishly to be sure, but he gets along. As the cop has assumed a policy of "watchful waiting" outside the door, Jack is forced to remain under cover.

Everything goes fine until Jack finds himself waiting on his own sister who is calling on her friend. Explanations and apologies are in order and Jack removes his apron and joins the crowd. Jack has inadvertently pleased his father by falling deeply in love with his sister's fair friend and the prospects point to Jack giving up the high life.

THE BATTLER (May 26).—The cast: The Battler (Hughie Mack); The Champ (Ed Dunn); The Villain (Billy Baxter); The Girl (Claire McCormick); The Trainer (Danny Hayes); The Crook (Doc Donohue). Authors, C. Graham Baker and Lawrence Semon. Director, Lawrence Semon.

Although the use of gas bombs has, so far, been restricted to the use of the fighting forces in Europe, a villainous inventor shows the champ that he can use them to good advantage in his fistic battle with the battler, who is offering $50,000 if he fails to knock out any ten men in ten minutes. The champ decides to be one of the ten, but has no intention of taking the count, therefore the gas bombs are welcomed. The villain's girl falls in love with the battler, tells him of his opponent's plan, and gets a supply of the gas bombs for him.

On the night of the fight, the champ's gang is on hand to watch him walk away with the dough. The battler with the aid of the gas bombs, knocks out nine men in a row and is now ready for the champ. Seeing that their game is up, the gang rushes into the ring and a "free-for-all" follows. A shot is fired and explodes one of the bombs. This sends the whole crowd into oblivion, except the battler and the girl, who had forethought enough to seal their noses with clothes pins. When the air is once more clear, they remove the clothes pins, seat themselves on the pile of unconscious gangsters, and leisurely count out the $50,000.

"THE PRIMAL INSTINCT" (Broadway Star Features—Three Parts—May 27).—The cast: Irma Ford (Miss Leah Baird); John Easton (Mr. Don Cameron); Louis Tilden (Mr. Jack Ellis); Mrs. Easton (Miss Leila Blow); Dr. Gray (Mr. Van Dyke Brooke). Author, Mrs. Owen Bronson. Director, Mr. Brooke.

Having tasted life in a hovel, Irma enjoys every moment of the day, as companion of the wealthy Mrs. Easton. Many times she feigns that the large estate is hers and entertains her imaginary guests lavishly. Mrs. Easton's health is fast failing and Tilden, her lawyer, is plotting to get her fortune by fair means or foul. He tells her that her only son, John, died in a shipwreck, and she changes her will leaving the bulk of the estate to Irma. This is just what Tilden wants and he now sets out to win Irma for his bride so that the fortune shall be within his grasp. Just as Mrs. Easton is breathing her last, John enters the room, and although she sees him, the end is near and she is powerless to change her bequest.

In the course of time Irma and John fall in love with each other and Tilden sees the fortune slipping from his grasp but is powerless to prevent their marriage. After the marriage John continues to carry on his charitable work with the assistance of Irma. With Tilden, who is posing as a friend to the couple, they visit the slums where they see the lowly condition of the children. Knowing her love of luxury, Tilden instills the fear of having her children live in a like fashion in Irma's heart. The latter laughs it off, saying that with her fortune she need never want. He tells her that at the rate her husband is spending her money for charitable purposes, the fortune will not last long. His words have the desired effect and the germ of uneasiness is born within her. She tells her husband that he must stop spending her money for charitable purposes as she believes charity begins at home.

From that time she hoards her money and is in constant fear of poverty. While she is entertaining some friends at home, Tilden got John under the influence of liquor and Irma sees him in this condition. Tilden then asks her to divorce John and marry him, a request which she sternly refuses. John learns of Tilden's treachery and still in his drunken state he starts out for Tilden's apartment with a revolver. He is about to shoot him when Irma enters and restrains him. Irma's views have now undergone a decided change, and she and John take great pleasure in watching their little adopted kiddies romp playfully around the lawn.

THE RICH IDLER (May 29).—The cast: Mary Brown (Mary Anderson); Freddie Myles (Webster Campbell); Marion, a friend of Freddie (Corinne Griffith). Author, Joseph F Poland. Director, Dave Smith.

When Collector Dugan fails to collect the rent from Mary Brown, owner of a little notion store, Freddie Myles, his employer, decides to do it himself. When Freddie appears at the store, Mary thinks he is applying for a position and employs him. Although he has never worked before, Freddie can see that it will be a pleasure to work under such a boss and keeps up the deception. They get along famously together, and although she had only hired him for two days, she is forced to retain his services when a sprained ankle incapacitates her. When the sick member is once more fit for service, she returns to the store.

One day, after her return, Dugan comes in and demands the rent, but when Freddie appears on the scene and gives him the high sign to vanish, he does so with alacrity, after tendering his apologies to the astonished Mary. Mary sees Freddie with one of his girl friends, gets jealous and refuses to speak to him. Freddie leaves and Mary grieves. Next day she receives a letter signed "The Landlord" demanding either the rent or her hand in marriage. "The Landlord" follows close after the letter, with his face hidden by his coat collar. She goes to get the rent and when she returns, is astonished to see Freddie confronting her. Explanations follow and Mary sells her store.

THE TEST OF CHIVALRY (Three Parts—May 22).—The cast: Eve Wilson (Fritzi Brunette); Pauline Grey (Vivian Reed); Jack Ashton (Edw. J. Piel); Willard Grey (James Bradbury); Jim Wilson (Wm. Scott); Robert Morris (Wm. Clark); Mrs. Grey (Lillian Hayward). Directed by Wm. Robert Daly. Written by Elizabeth R. Carpenter.

Jack Ashton is in love with Pauline Grey, but Pauline's parents are of the opinion that Jack's position in life is not high enough to give him the honor of the hand of their daughter in marriage. Pauline's father explains this to Jack, who sacrifices himself for the supposed future happiness of the girl, and accepts the position as mining engineer in the West. Robert Morris, aged and wealthy suitor, wins the hand of Pauline through the urgencies of her parents.

Ashton in the West, meets Eve Wilson, the unfortunate wife of a cruel husband. He gains the love of Eve, because he has rescued her from her husband's abuse. When his cruelty becomes too great for Eve to bear, she leaves her husband and goes to Jack's home where she is employed as a housekeeper. Morris speculates in stocks to retrieve his fallen fortunes and loses. With the loss of his money, he takes his own life.

Pauline has never forgotten Jack Ashton and upon the death of her aged husband, she writes him, telling Jack that she is waiting for him to return. Jack receives this letter, but appreciating that Eve loves him dearly, that he has sheltered her, he writes to this effect to Pauline. Just as he completes the letter, he is notified of an explosion in the mine. He rushes to aid in rescue work, and then it is that the letter he leaves behind is read by Eve.

Eve finally learns that Jack Ashton loves another. She resolves not to stand between him and the woman of his choice. She writes him a letter containing the fictitious statement that her husband has sought a reconciliation with her, and she has agreed to join him. Eve then wanders homeless out into the world, while Ashton freed, joins Pauline.

A FIVE THOUSAND DOLLAR ELOPEMENT (May 27).—The cast: Tom (Tom Mix); Vicky (Victoria Forde); John Gilmore (Joe Ryan); Bad Bill (Sid Jordan); Sneaky Sam (Chet Ryan). Written by Cornelius Shea. Produced by Tom Mix.

Tom, a cowboy, is in love with Vicky, daughter of John Gilmore. Gilmore refuses to give his consent to their marriage. Gilmore has a mortgage due, and draws $5,000 from the town bank. This money is seen by Bad Bill and Sneaky Sam. Tom plans to elope with Vicky that night, while the crooks plan to rob Gilmore of his gold.

They take the money and place it in a covered wagon in which Vicky has already secreted herself, believing the wagon belongs to Tom. She realizes too late she is in the power of two desperate characters.

Tom arrives to meet Vicky, is discovered by Gilmore, who thinks that Tom has robbed him. However, Tom proves by footprints and wagon tracks that others have robbed Gilmore of his money, and have abducted his daughter. Tom and Gilmore, after a sensational pursuit, overtake the crooks and rescue Vicky. Then it is that Gilmore, pleased at the return of his money, gives Tom and Vicky the parental blessing.

IMP.

WHEN SLIM PICKED THE PEACH (May 16).—The cast: Slim Hoover (Victor Potel); Mrs. Slim Hoover (James Bernoudy); The Peach (Babe Sedgwick). Written and Produced by Roy Clements.

Mrs. Slim Hoover, snubbed by her neighbors because she does her own housework, insists on Slim engaging a house servant. Slim protests, but Mrs. Slim wins out in the domestic squabble which follows and Slim visits an employment agency and engages "The Peach," a very pretty and vivacious maid.

When Slim brings "The Peach" home Mrs. Slim's suspicions are aroused and the discovery of floured hand prints on Slim's coat coincident with "The Peach" being engaged in making biscuits, starts a real war in the Hoover household.

At the height of hostilities the father and mother of Slim arrive for a visit, and when Mrs. Slim tells of Slim's domestic duplicity, Hoover, Sr., goes to the kitchen to fire "The Peach." He comes back with damning hand prints on his coat and his wife rushes him home.

Mrs. Slim decides to settle the matter herself and after throwing "The Peach" and her belongings out of the house, dons her work clothes and decides that she prefers the neighbors' snubs to having another woman in the house with her impressionable Slim.

CLAUDIA (May 21).—The cast: Claudia (Edith Roberts); Sylvia (Sydell Dowling); Dan (Stanley Walpole); Billy (Paul Kelly). Written and produced by Robert F. Hill.

Daniel Remington is in love with Sylvia Saunders, a young actress who is posing for him while he is painting her portrait as the Duchess of Gainesborough. She tells him that marriage is out of the question, as it would ruin her career. The scene then shifts to the street in front of the studio building where Scotti and Peter, two of Dan's chums, meet two young women, Claudia and Tabithia. They pick up their luggage and lead them into the studio.

Dan greets Tabitha, who introduces her friend, Claudia. Sylvia is inclined to be jealous of Claudia until Dan explains that there is no need of an introduction, as she surely can be no other than his maiden aunt and cousin, Miss Claudia Knott, whom he has not seen since she was a little girl. Presently Billy McGee, a cub reporter, comes forward and is introduced to Claudia.

An afternoon tea is improvised in the course of which Claudia pats Dan's hand affectionately, causing Sylvia to look daggers at her, and in a fit of jealousy, Sylvia puts on her furs and leaves the room. Later Billy conspires with the others during Dan's absence to arrange the studio for a wedding. He goes out and engages a minister for the occasion. The only difficulty is how to procure a license. Billy finally decides that he and Claudia will have to get a license in the name of Dan and Sylvia.

While all this has been going on Dan and Sylvia have been reconciled and decide on an immediate marriage. They go to the county clerk's office and procure a license for that purpose. Bill and Claudia arrive shortly and request a license, substituting the name of Dan and Sylvia for their own. The town clerk, surmising that there is some joke under way, good-naturedly fills out the paper.

Meanwhile Dan and Sylvia get married and drive to the studio building in a car intending to keep their marriage a secret for the present. In the studio, there is so much marriage in the air that Billy finds it difficult to suppress his inclination to propose marriage to Claudia. Everybody gets flustered when Billy announces from the window that Dan has just driven up with Sylvia in the car. Claudia runs up to Dan when he enters the studio and kisses him. Sylvia protests at this and tells Claudia to keep away, without betraying, however, that she has been married to Dan.

Claudia has apparently tried to arouse Sylvia's jealousy with a purpose as she says to Sylvia. "Well, then, why don't you marry Dan?" Billy immediately brings forth the requisite license and produces the minister. Then without further ado, they place Sylvia and Dan side by side for the ceremony. The minister takes out his prayer book and asks Dan for the ring. Dan and Sylvia look very much embarrassed. Billy and Claudia come down all swelled up with the surprise they have sprung on them.

The minister asks Dan if he will take Sylvia to be his lawful wedded wife, and receiving no response repeats the question. Then Dan puts up his hand, protesting that the cermony must proceed no further, saying: "I can't do this because I have been married once already to-night." There is an expression of surprise on the faces of Scotti and Peter, while Billy and Claudia are simply non-plussed at the failure of their matrimonial experiment.

As the others are congratulating Dan and Sylvia, Claudia turns to Billy and holding out the license to him she says: "Billy, you exchange that license tomorrow." This meets with Billy's approval and thus it's a case of "all's well that ends well."

BIG U.

NADINE OF NOWHERE (May 19).—The cast: Grant Pearson (T. D. Crittenden); John Pearson (J. Edwin Brown); Nadine (Mme. Bourgeois); Lois Lamay (Edith Hoskins); Little Robert (Clara Horton). Written by William W. Farmer. Produced by Paul Bourgeois.

Grant Pearson listened to the story of the past as it fell from his dying father's lips. Nadine, he learned, was a nameless waif, who had come in the Pearson family on a happy wedding night in the long ago. The last request of old John Pearson was that Grant should make Nadine his wife. Grant could not say no and yet he knew that his heart belonged to Lois Lamay, a society butterfly.

Nadine loved Grant and it was the brightest moment of her life when he asked her to be his wife. She did not know he had made a sacrifice to please his dying father. Grant penned a farewell note to Lois that aroused her jealous spirit, and with his wife he departs for South Africa.

Eight years roll by. Grant still thinks of the proud beauty who had won his heart. Nevertheless Nadine is such a model wife and little Robert, their first born, such a comfort, that Grant finds real happiness in his jungle home.

Meanwhile Lois arrives in South Africa and becomes a teacher in a mission. In an unusual manner Nadine is stricken blind. Grant goes to the trading post for a doctor. He meets Lois face to face and their love is reborn. Nadine, writhing in an agony of pain, is forgotten temporarily. Later Grant awakens to a realization of his duty and sets out for home with a doctor. The doctor holds out no hope that Nadine will recover her sight.

The weeks roll by and Grant's frequent trips to the post do not arouse the suspicions of his blind wife. One day, in the absence of Grant, little Robert wanders into the jungles and is lost. Nadine misses him and in desperation plunges into the beast infested underbrush in search of her child. Robert, surrounded by the wild beasts, frantically cries for help. The blind mother hears him and in her efforts to reach him falls into a trap set by Grant. She struggles to free herself in vain. Prayer is a last resort and she learns that God has not deserted her, for she suddenly regains her sight. She escapes from the trap and rescues her child.

Meanwhile Grant and Lois find mutual pleasure at the mission. Lois, in a fit of anger, boxes the ears of Beppo, a little negro boy. Beppo swears revenge and incites the natives against the whites. Lois desires to see the woman that had robbed her of a husband, and Grant, knowing his blind wife would not suspicion his infidelity, takes her to the cabin, but finds Nadine absent, and they proceed to dream over the happy past. Nadine arrives and discovers Grant's perfidy. She decides to leave him and sets out for the post.

Meantime the enraged natives attack the mission and set fire to it. Bawamba, a little negro boy, learns that the natives are going to attack the Pearson cabin and goes to give warning. He meets Nadine, who is tempted to leave the unfaithful to their fate, but her love for Grant wins and she returns to defend her home.

In the struggle to defend their home against the enraged natives Nadine and Grant fight side by side, while Lois crouches in the corner in abject fear. Grant observes the coward at his feet and the brave woman by his side and the love he bore for Lois turns to contempt. The spirit of the new love gives him renewed courage and he plunges into the fight. Little Robert, realizing the danger, slips out the back of the cabin and, banishing childish fear, he plunges into the beast infested jungle in search of aid.

Ammunition gone, Nadine at his feet, exhausted from the tension of the fight, and Lois, a raving maniac, clinging to him in terror, Grant waits for the natives to batter down the door. Little Robert arrives at a critical moment with the soldiers and the natives are driven away. Nadine is revived and the little hero is clapsed in the arms of his parents. Lois slips out of their lives, as she realizes that Grant loves the better woman.

CORPORAL BILLY'S COMEBACK (Two Parts—May 25).—The cast: Billy Safford, G. A. R. (Thomas Jefferson); Cyril Naughton Webster (Antrim Short); Mrs. Honora Kelly (Mrs. Geo. Hernandez). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by George Cochrane.

Captain Billy Safford was the sole surviving member of the Grand Army of the Republic residing in Ophirville, Cal. For over forty years he had regularly been chosen as the Grand Marshal of the Memorial Day procession. Always the Mayor, the town clerk and the other officials of the small village met in the town hall to confer on the plans for the celebration. Always had the plans been the same. There was the morning procession, including the G. A. R. (in recent years represented solely by Uncle Billy Safford), the Ophirville Silver Cornet Band, the local fraternal order and of recent years the Spanish-American War Veterans. And always the procession had been headed by Uncle Bill.

But the year in which this story is laid there came a change. Uncle Billy's nephew, "Captain" Cyril Naughton Webster, a boy of twelve years, was sent to Ophirville to visit his mother's brother. Now, Uncle Billy was a cobbler by trade, a man of peaceful nature, who lived much in the past. The youthful enthusiasm of Cyril proved too much for the aged cobbler, for Cyril lived in a world of boyish romance. A reader of valorous fiction, the harmless Indian family residing near Ophirville were to the lad a band of redskins doomed to bite the dust. Cyril was a Captain of Boy Scouts, and as such believed it to be his duty to guard the town from the dark-skinned wards of Uncle Sam. And when he shot at Joe Two Head and his law-abiding family, the Sheriff added his protests to those of Uncle Billy. This was the night before Memorial Day. Cyril was admonished to leave his .22-calibre rifle at home, but on special pleading was permitted to carry Uncle Billy's harmless war pistol.

On this eventful evening Uncle Billy donned his worn Grand Army uniform and followed by his nephew strode up the main street to the town hall. On the way he met Mrs. Honoroh Kelly and they exchanged complimentary greetings as they had always done on each successive Memorial Day eve. Mrs. Kelly was the widow of Corporal Kelly, woh had served in the Civil War, and as such she had alwals attended the committee meetings as the sole surviving member of the Ladies of the G. A. R. Both anticipated a quiet evening, formal but the same as always, ending with the appointment of Bill Safford, late of the 23d Indiana Infantry, as Grand Marshall of the Memorial Day Procession. But they were doomed to a shocking surprise. Sergeant Sam Gates, of the 1st California Volunteers and member of the Spanish War Veterans, was nominated and elected.

The next day Uncle Billy kept within doors,

Cyril being allowed to go forth, carrying the army pistol. When the parade marched past, Old Uncle Billy bowed his head in sadness. Hours later there came sound of horses galloping—then came men running down the street yelling. Uncle Billy learned that a murderer had escaped from the penitentiary—a huge negro—already reputed to have killed a ranchman and his family while making good his escape. The sheriff formed a posse. Uncle Billy hurried to the town square and volunteered, but was told that he was not needed. Humiliated and heartbroken, he turned for home when Cyril plucked up his sleeve and bade the old man follow him. With fearsome heart he followed the lad to the edge of the town, through a patch of woods and to the edge of an embankment where he saw a sleeping negro, in prison stripes—the escaped murderer.

Uncle Billy still had his saber strapped to his belt—and when Cyril commanded him to jump down upon the negro and make him prisoner, he nearly wilted. But the lad's words of encouragement and praise for his unquestioned valor, were too much, and he jumped. The negro was more frightened than the old veteran—and with the pistol, handed him by Cyril in one hand and the saber in the other, he marched his captive to town. They arrived just as the posse returned. Uncle Billy was the hero of the hour!

THE THREE WISHES (May 17).—The cast: Daisy (Mary Fuller); Vincent (Augustus Phillips); Granny (Mrs. Ford). Written by Samuel Grenier. Produced by Lucius Henderson.

The life of Daisy, the little dressmaker, would have been blank had it not been for her sunny disposition and her canary. She makes barely enough to support herself and her invalid granny, but she is ever singing, ever happy.

But winter and hard times come. Granny falls very sick and the canary dies. So she decides to apply for help.

She goes out and as the first thing she encounters is an automobile, she stops it and hauls Vincent, its owner, to her home. Her sweet simplicity fascinates the society man. He falls in love with her and marries her.

Soon we find her fixing up a room for the expected first-born. The child is born dead. She, who wanted lots of children, is not to have even one. Aware that the truth would kill her, they substitute another baby.

A month later Daisy is told of the substitution. She is pluckier than they expected. But when she visits the little grave, the ranking pain within her is more than she can stand and she falls ill.

In her delirium she cries for the child. They press a big doll into her arms and she calms down.

Daisy recovers her health and her spirits. The years roll by, and, when she grows again aware of the signs of approaching motherhood she is seized by a terrible fear that she is destined to give birth to another dead-born child.

She takes a vow before the crucifix that if the child lives she will neither kiss nor fondle it for a whole year.

At last the year is at an end. At the end of the last minute she experiences for the first time the velvety pressure of the infant's lips against her own.

THE WOMAN WHO FOLLOWED ME (Two Parts—May 23).—The cast: Harry (Ernie Shields); Marcia (Marcia Moore); lover (Juan De La Cruz); the woman (Gladys Brockwell). Scenario by Robert G. Leonard. Produced by Robert Leonard and David Kirkland.

On a summer night Ernie is seated in the outdoor garden of the Cafe Maupan. The orchestra is playing a Venetian air. The music brings back memories of a night in Venice a year ago. The rays of the moon make a path of shimmering silver on the grand canal, down which his gondola is lazily floating. The tinkle of a guitar murmurs its soft accompaniment to the ardent song of a lover, whose lady is listening from the balcony above. From her outstretched hand falls a white rose as a reward to the singer, who presses it to his lips as he waves his farewell from his departing gondola. But suddenly the stillness of the night is broken by the sound of a scuffle, a strangled scream. The lady of the balcony has been attacked by a band of ruffians. Ernie rushes to the rescue and justifies his pugilistic training by throwing one of the bravos into the canal and putting the balance to flight. The lady, in a passion of gratitude, declares that she will be his forever and will follow him to the ends of the earth. She persists in her devotion, notwithstanding the fact that he protests he does not desire her love.

Ernie, sitting at the table in the garden, sighs with relief at his escape from so embarrassing a situation. As he turns his attention is attracted by a veiled lady in black. As he looks again, trying to place the lady, she lifts her veil, disclosing the features of the languorous beauty of Venice. Following this Ernie's life becomes a living nightmare, as his footsteps are dogged by the lady in black. His wedding day with Marcia is approaching, but the lady of Venice always hovers near, ready to pounce on him at an unguarded moment.

His wedding day comes. He is still haunted by the lady in black. That evening he and his bride come to their new home. His bride has fallen asleep. Ernie falls asleep at the table in the living room. To him comes the lady in black, dagger poised. She decides to wreak her vengeance upon the bride who has stolen her beloved from her. She goes into the next room and looks down upon the little bride, sleeping peacefully. As she raises the knife the bride awakes and grasps the hand as it descends. They struggle into the other room, where Ernie is sleeping. The bride wildly seeks to escape, but in vain. The fatal dagger descends, and Ernie awakes, horrified to find his bride dead at his feet. In a frenzy of horror and rage he seizes the mysterious woman and is throttling her into insensibility—when he awakes and finds that it was all a dream, while his bride is calling him from the next room.

ELEANOR'S CATCH (May 2).—The cast: Eleanor (Cleo Madison); Eleanor's mother (Lule Warrenton); "Flash" Dacy (William V. Mong); Spike (Ed. Hearn); Jennie (Margaret Whistler); Joe (Ray Hanford); Man (Harry Mann). Written by William V. Mong. Produced by Cleo Madison.

On a hot summer day when Eleanor is toiling over a steaming washtub her mother, Mrs. McGrady, a good-natured old washerwoman, is lugging a heavy basket of clothes toward her shanty home and is accosted by "Flash" Dacy, a dandy of the tenement district, who volunteers to relieve the old woman of her burden. "Flash" is in a happy state of intoxication, and arriving at Mrs. McGrady's home, is soon helping with the day's washing. An organ grinder is called in and a private impromptu dance is arranged among the tubs and clothes lines.

"Spike" McGuire, a hard-working plumber and Eleanor's "steady," happens into the back yard while the dance is in progress. "Spike" becomes jealous of the dandy and demands that Eleanor choose between them. Eleanor, attracted by "Flash's" large roll of money, his tailor-made clothes and his affable and liberal manner, turns her back upon "Spike." She permits "Flash" to provide a home for her mother and herself, and for awhile lives in ease and comfort, ignorant of the fact that "Flash" is a pickpocket and confidence worker, and that his real intentions are to make her his accomplice.

"Spike," in the meantime, has continued to labor hard and earnestly as a plumber and as a student at a night school. His efforts are rewarded. Returning home one night he meets Eleanor's lost sister and induces the wayward girl to return to her mother's home with him, where he finds Eleanor getting the worst of a rough-and-tumble fight with "Flash." Upon rescuing her he learns that "Flash" has brought a wealthy farmer to Eleanor's home and demanded that she help fleece him.

The ends of justice have been met. Eleanor's sister is restored to her loved ones, and "Spike," improved by his hard work, his books and the night school, is able to provide a comfortable home for Eleanor and her family.

RED FEATHER.

HALF A ROGUE (Five parts—May 22). The cast: Richard Warrington (King Baggott); Anna Warrington, his aunt (Lettie Ford); Katherine Challoner (Clara Beyers); John Bennington (Joseph Castellanos); Mrs. Bennington (Mathilde Brundage); Pattie Bennington (Edna Hunter); Daniel McQuade (Howard Crampton); ex-Senator Henderson (Henry Otto). Scenario and production by Henry Otto.

Dick Warrington, a successful New York dramatist, receives a visit in his apartments from Katherine Challoner, an actress whom he has "made." She shows him her engagement ring and tells him that she is soon to be married, as the stage never really fascinated her, but she refuses to tell the name of the man she is to marry.

As Kate is about to leave the butler announces another caller and Dick requests her to remain in order to meet John Bennington, as he and John are great chums. Kate protests that her presence in his room so late at night might cause embarrassment and leaves to enter the butler's pantry.

John finds a pair of white gloves which Kate has left behind her. He put them in his pocket surreptitiously. The two men sit down to smoke and chat, and John tells Dick that he is going to be married, and wishes him to act as his best man, but must withhold the name of his fiancee for the present.

After John's departure Kate comes out of the pantry and Dick helps her to look for her gloves. Kate tells him that John Bennington is the man she is to marry, and that he bought the gloves for her that very morning. Failing to find her gloves, and realizing that Bennington had probably taken them away with him, Kate falls in a faint. The next morning Dick escorts Kate out of the apartment. The janitor sees them enter a cab and drive off, fully aware that the actress has spent the night in Warrington's flat. Some days after Dick returns to his native town, Herculaneum. John Bennington's marriage to the actress, Kat Challoner, has caused considerable gossip in Herculaneum. One of the scandal mongers says, "That actress and Richard Warrington have been very intimate, and you know Warrington's reputation."

The honeymooners return a day sooner than expected. Shortly after their arrival Dick meets Senator Henderson, the boss of the Republican party, who tells him that he wants him to run for mayor of the town at the fall election. McQuade, the boss of the local Democrats, is determined that Mayor Donnelly must have another term. At the Republican convention Warrington is nominated for mayor. After Dick's nomination McQuade sends Bolles, one of his henchmen, to New York to dig up some "dope" on Warrington's metropolitan career.

A month later Bolles returns from New York and informs McQuade that he got what he went after, as the janitor he interviewed there had told him about Kate passing the night with Richard Warrington in his apartment. McQuade keeps this information as a trump card until the night before election. Then he goes to the editor of the local Democratic paper, which he controls, and forces him to publish this bit of scandal in the election day issue.

Pattie Bennington's sister reads the scandal and rushes to the conservatory to find her mother and Kate. When Kate reads the article she becomes excited. Dick, who has meanwhile read the attack on him, comes over and meets Kate in the parlor. Dick tells her that John must be made acquainted with the truth. Kate protests, fearing that it will cause her to lose her husband's love, but Dick throws open the parlor doors and, as John enters, shows him the article. After reading the scandalous attack carefully, John, who is a large-minded man, emphatically declares that he does not believe it. Then, pulling out Kate's white gloves from his pocket, he turns to her and adds: "Even with this evidence I never doubted you."

Dick rushes to McQuade's office and insists on knowing who is responsible for the scandal. Bolles comes forward and says that he unearthed it in New York. Dick promptly knocks him down and says defiantly: "Miss Challoner did remain in my apartment one night, but there was a nurse and doctor in attendance until I escorted her home next morning."

After Dick has returned to his library he learns that Donnelly, his opponent, has the plurality vote in nine districts. Later Pattie phones to the editor of the Republican paper and is told that Warrington has the plurality of over 700 in fifteen districts heard from so far, which assures his election. Pattie then calls up Dick and informs him that he is elected. Dick embraces Pattie and they walk, hand in hand, down the path as the scene fades out.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

PEG O' THE RING (Second Episode—"A Strange Inheritance"—Two Parts—May 8).—The cast: La Belle and Peg, her daughter (Grace Cunard); Flip, the clown (Pete Gerald); Dr. Lund, the younger (Francis Ford); Dr. Lund, owner of circus (Marc Fenton); Mrs. Dr. Lund (Jean Hathaway).

Dr. Lund, Jr., on board the circus train en route for the next town, with the unconscious Peg in the arms of Flip, the clown. About to enter the coaches in search of Peg, Lund is seen by some of the ring crew and not recognized as the owner's son, he is forced off the train, despite his urgent attempts to convince them of his identity. out another effort to see the strange girl he had asked to marry him, Lund, Jr., starts out to walk to the next town.

In the coach Peg regains consciousness but is unable to remember anything that has taken place. Flip, realizing Peg's strange inheritance, is becoming more anxious and tries to warn her, and watches her even more closely than before. Dr. Lund, Sr., unable to join the circus himself for fear of his wife, sends his man, a rough-neck and former employe of the circus, to watch Peg and try to get the letter from Flip, which he is sure will establish Peg's identity as his child.

His wife, recognizing Peg as La Belle's daughter, sends a hired thug to get her out of the way, fearing that Peg will cheat her son out of some of his interitance. Both rough-necks arrive at the circus at the same time, each ignorant of the other's identity or mission. Peg and Flip, in the practice ring—Peg with her big white horse and Flip watching her with loving pride, are ignorant of the destiny in store for them.

In the meantime Dr. Lund, Jr., succeeds in getting to the circus grounds at the finish of the night's performance and makes another attempt to see Peg, but meets with the same reception he received in the morning. The rough-neck sent by Dr. Lund, Sr., seeing him, tries to force him from the grounds. In the meantime the thug sent by Mrs. Lund succeeds in getting into Peg's room and tries to kidnap her. It is twelve o'clock, just when the change comes over her. Peg, in a rage, tears the clothes off the man. Her screams reaching young Lund's ears, he knocks the rough-neck down and catches Peg in his arms in time to forestall the thug. He is about to take Peg out of the tent when Flip and the others come in. They ask her what is wrong and she turns on Lund and accuses him of trying to kidnap her—as the episode closes.

PEG O' THE RING (Third Episode—Two Parts—May 15).—Peg, unconscious in the arms of Dr. Lund, Jr., in the strange house, slowly comes to as he tries to escape with her, but to no avail. At the circus they miss her and start in pursuit, arriving at the house just as the ruffian tries to get Peg away from Dr. Lund, Jr. Flip and the others, after a hand-to-hand fight with the ruffians, succeed in getting Peg away on board the train. Peg accuses Dr. Lund, Jr., of kidnapping her while in one of her fits.

In the rescue Dr. Lund, Jr., is left behind with the ruffians, who hide him in a box car. The gangster sent by Mrs. Lund follows the circus and Peg. In the box car Dr. Lund, Jr., succeeds in getting loose and escaping. He catches the circus train as it passes the box car he is in by jumping from the side door on to the moving train. Safely in the same train with Peg, and knowing that everyone thinks him guilty after Peg's insane accusation, he keeps under cover by hiding behind some baggage.

Mrs. Lund's hired ruffian succeeds in boarding the circus train as it leaves the freight yards, in another attempt to get Peg. Peg has regained consciousness, but is unable to remember anything that has happened. Flip, fearful for her safety, stays close with her, not allowing her out of his sight. The ruffian, seeing this, and playing for time, sneaks through the train. Coming to the cage containing the animals, he fiendishly hits upon the idea of turning the animals loose in the train, thereby causing a panic and affording him an opportunity of getting Peg in the excitement. Watching his chance, he sneaks to the animal car and, loosening the locks, hides.

The episode closes as the wild animals make their death dash through the cars.

PEG O' THE RING (Episode No. 4—Two Parts—"The Circus Mongrels"—May 22).—Peg, left by the ruffians in the den with the lions, discovers Dr. Lund, Jr., in the water-filled pit below, and tries to find a way to rescue him. The ruffian and his gang feel that they have both Peg and Dr. Lund, Jr., away, and he leaves to report to Mrs. Lund. At the circus Flip and the circus people are frantic over the loss of Peg, but have to stay with the show, feeling that she may get away from her captors and return to the circus.

In the dive, Peg succeeds in rescuing Dr. Lund, Jr., from the pit, and together they escape from the dive and start for the circus. Still following the circus, Pete, the man sent by Dr. Lund, Sr., to get the letter from Flip, tries again to gain possession of it, but to no avail. Flip, seeing Pete spying on him, substitutes a blank paper for the letter and hides the original. Pete succeeds in getting the false letter and leaves to report to Dr. Lund, Sr.

Both ruffians report to the Lund home at the same time, Marcus telling Mrs. Lund that Peg is safe with the lions with "some guy who got fresh." She, thinking he meant Flip, is pleased and about to dismiss him, when they overhear a roar from the doctor in the next room and discover that Pete has returned with the false letter. Listening further, she sends Marcus to get the letter for her and he leaves to do her bidding. Pete asks leave to make another attempt to get the letter for Dr. Lund.

Marcus, arriving at the circus, bides his time and begs a ticket for the performance, entering the ring just as Peg's old horse is brought on. He watches with intense interest to see who is to ride her horse. Staring, he cannot believe his eyes, as Peg herself runs into the ring and starts her act. Things go around in Marcus' head, as he sees the girl he thought dead with the lions, safely riding before him. Leaving the crowd he goes around to the dressing room to make sure, as Peg comes out. After watching a few minutes he sees her come out and run into the arms of the man who should be drowning in the pit, Dr. Lund, Jr.

MR. FULLER PEP—HE DABBLES IN THE POND (May 25). It was the first warm day of spring, and Mr. Fuller Pep was out for a walk. Near a pond he came upon a heap of boy's clothes, and discovered their owner bathing in the forbidden waters. "If you don't come out, I'll take your clothes," said Mr. Pep to the small boy, who yielded to superior force. But Mr. Pep himself succumbed to temptation. The water looked so cool, that he could not resist, despite the warning sign.

Along came the village school marm out for a walk, and sat herself down under a tree beside the pond. In vain Mr. Pep dived and dived to keep out of her sight. The small boy returned at the moment, and seeing Mr. Pep in the water, promptly stole his clothes. Now Mr. Pep was in a hole. A large bee stung him on the top of his bald head, and a submarine turtle got him by the toe. His antics revealed him to the school marm who fled for the police.

Mr. Pep went on a hunt for some trousers. He entered the cemetery, and read the headstone of a prominent citizen wondering if he were buried in his pants. Along came a huge negro carrying a barrel. Mr. Pep saw his chance, and, scaring off the negro, took possession of his wooden trousers. Outside a kitchen window he is mistaken for the ash barrel, and a panfull of hot cinders sets fire to his beautiful wooden garments. He seeks refuge in the dog kennel.

The old mammy brings the dog's dinner, which Mr. Pep devours, scaring her into a fit by his imitation of the dog. The farmer appears just as Mr. Pep is walking off with the kennel as clothes and shoots him in the rear. Mr. Pep comes to a stone-pile where blasting is going on. A big husky man is guarding the place. The explosion hurls them both into the air and they fall into the hole. Mr Pep falls on top, and takes the chance to steal the other's clothes and run off in them. "You wear the dog house!" says Mr. Pep.

JUVENILE DANCER SUPREME (On, same reel as foregoing).—Little Lena's first dance is an Egyptian one, to the music of Auber's "Crown Diamond" overture. In her classic costume she performs the slow measures and plastic poses of the ancient dance. Then the music changes to the "Cricket's Serenade." Lena comes running on in the costume of the classic ballet, and performs a pas seul upon her toes. The last number is given to them usic of Liszt's "Liberstraum." It is the Dance of Grief Lena wears a white Grecian robe and goes through the slow movements of the dance with an expression of resigned sorrow on her childish face. She closes the number with a kneeling pose, full of pathos and real feeling.

STORMING THE TRENCHES (May 27).—The cast: Frank and Gordon, two brothers (Frank Butterworth and Gordon Griffith); Irma, their sweetheart (Irma Storter); Ernest, the traitor (Ernest Butterworth).

Irma is the sweetheart of both Frank and Gordon, who are rivals for her favors. One day they decide to play war, Gordon to be a captain of one side and Frank of the other. Irma stays out of the game to play with her dog. The boys chose sides, and finding a ditch, turn it into a trench. They need ammunition, and just then the farmer's car comes along, with plenty of vegetables, which make fine missiles. The boys hide and wait for the enemy to come along Then they fly at them. The others are taken by surprise, but they must have something to throw, so they make off with a case of eggs from outside a store nearby.

Then there is a hot fire from both sides. The eggs are storage eggs, and Captain Frank is forced to surrender to their superior strength. He is made prisoner and put in the barn, tied fast to a ladder. Gordon places one boy, Ernest, on guard. Irma comes up. She is sorry for Frank, and determines to help him. She goes around the corner, and puts her dog under the barn Then she comes back and says to Ernest that she can't get the dog out. He goes to get it, and Irma sets Frank free.

The boys return, and finding Frank gone, they accuse Ernest of being a traitor, and say that they will shoot him. He is blindfolded and placed against the wall. Then they throw an egg into his face. The boys go off laughing, but Ernest vows revenge. The robbed farmer and grocer have met each other, and Ernest sees them together. He tells them where their property went. They drive to the home of Frank and Gordon and tell their mother of the robbery. When Frank and Gordon return there is a heavy reckoning for them to pay, but Irma intercedes for them and saves them a whipping.

BISON.

THE WEDDING GUEST (Two Parts—May 27).—The cast: Sheriff (Harry Carey); Panchita's father (Wm. Canfield); Panchita (Olive Fuller Golden); Jose Del Barra (Joe Rickson); Faro Lamie (Peggy Coudray). Scenario written by Bess Meredith. Produced by Jacques Jaccard.

The sheriff of the county is elected by men who call him the "squarest sheriff alive." Panchita Garcia, the flower of the town, loved by all, leaves home for a walk, passing through the town, where all the cowboys come out to meet her. "Bad" Pedro, a native, sees her and follows. He overtakes her and tries to kiss her. The sheriff, who has been passing by and has given Pedro's wife money to buy food for the starving children, hears her and runs to her assistance. He takes as a remembrance her shawl which she drops.

A week elapses and Jose Del Barra, a handsome Mexican, is caught stealing cattle by Jim Stephens. Stephens recognizes Jose, who escapes. Jose goes to his paramour, Faro Mamie, who keeps the roulette hall, and tells her what has happened. Meanwhile, Stephens rides for the sheriff and he returns with Stephens. They attack the roulette hall and in the fight Stephens kills Mamie and Jose in turn kills Stephens. Jose and the sheriff fight and Jose hits the sheriff on the head, causing amnesia. He forgets all.

A year elapses and the sheriff still worships at Panchita's shrine. He calls to see her and four other sullen cowboys call at the same time. Panchita runs out and leaves them. Jose, returning to his old haunts, is startled by Panchita falling over an embankment at his very feet. He picks her up and finds she has only fainted. It is a case of love at first sight. The sheriff, returning angry and hurt, sees Panchita in Jose's arms, but does not see Jose's face. That night the sheriff determines to see Panchita again and goes to her house to find Panchita in Jose's arms. Jose does not see him but suddenly the sheriff remembers all and recognized Jose.

Panchita pleads with the sheriff to let her elope with Jose as she says she loves him. Without telling her about Jose, the sheriff lets her go. Returning to town he hears shots in the saloon and, rushing in, finds a posse formed to go after Jose. The posse has received a telegram from the Albuquerque police, telling them of the murder. The sheriff takes a warrant and says he will go alone. He intends to prevent Panchita's marriage by winning her himself. He rides all night and arrives at Los Levos at dawn. As he rides up to the church Panchita comes out with Jose and informs the sheriff, joyfully, that they are married. The sheriff is dazed, but then gamely tells Panchita that he has brought her a wedding present. He deliberately tears up the warrant and leaves them. Heartbroken, he takes off his badge and rides slowly back along the trail.

JOKER.

A STAGE VILLAIN (May 27).—The cast: The landlady (Gale Henry); her husband (William Franey); the leading lady (Lillian Peacock); the leading man (Milburn Moranti); Heinie (Charles Conklin). Written and produced by Allen Curtis.

After a leap year proposal Gale and her husband, Bill, become settled in their boarding house. Bill has got the worst of the bargain and spends his time in menial duties. A circular advertising a dramatic company is thrown on the boarding house porch and Gale takes possession of it. She is immediately struck by the handsome appearance of the manager, whose picture is shown, but does not like the leading lady. She tears off the portion of the poster with the leading lady's picture, and it is picked up from the floor by Bill. He falls in love with the woman and is given a calling down by his wife when she sees him admiring the picture.

A few days later the troupe comprising "The Innocent Girl" company arrive in the town, and seek lodgings at the only boarding house—namely, the one conducted by Gale and her husband. Business has been bad with the troupe and both finances and appetites are in need of replenishing. Gale finds more to admire in the manager's real self than she did in his picture, while Bill can hardly remove his eyes from the pretty leading woman. The troupe are assigned to their rooms and informed that all bills must be paid in advance. Bill tries his best to flirt with Lillian, the leading woman, and she, having a sense of humor, responds to his clumsy efforts. Bill escorts the girl to her room. The first thing that meets her eyes is a large sign on the wall announcing that bills must be paid in advance. Gale meanwhile has taken charge of Moranti and the company and she shows them to their rooms. Moranti sees the attraction he has for Gale and decides to have a little fun with her while indulging in a mild flirtation. He is shown the "paid in advance" sign and almost has heart failure, knowing that their funds are exhausted.

Gale leaves to make out the bill and Moranti and his companions try to think of some way out of their difficulty. One of the company suggests that he play up to Gale, and Lillian, running in at this time seconds the motion. She says that she will use her arts on Bill and try to get their credit extended. Bill, captivated by Lillian, receipts the bill he has brought her, and uses his own money to give to the wife. Gale is flattered by Moranti and is finally persuaded to give him credit. As a mark of his good will he presents her with a pass to the show that night. Bill, too, has received a pass.

When the crowd assembles for the performance, Gale and Bill occupy front seats. They have a good house, and the company are in high spirits over the money they will make. The play is so thrilling that Bill and his wife have become wildly excited. Bill because of the tribulations of the leading lady, Gale, because of the cruel nature displayed by the leading man. When the leading man attempts to murder the former sweetheart of his wife, Bill can stand it no longer, and wildly rushing on the stage, he saves the honest country boy from an untimely death at the hands of the villain. The company all bawl Bill out for disrupting the performance. Gale has come onto the stage to protect her newly-found affinity from the wrath of the irate husband. The company all join forces against Gale and her husband, and the two are kicked out of the theater without further discussion.

Gale decides that her husband is good enough for her, while he decides that there'll be no more leading ladies for him.

HER CELLULOID HERO (May 22).—The cast: The actor (Eddie Lyons); his steady (Betty Compson); "Red" (Lee Moran); the director (George French); the leading lady (Ethel Lynn). Scenario and production by Al. E. Christie.

Eddie starts for the moving picture studio one morning and on his way stops at his best girl's house to tell her that he is starting a new picture that morning but has not been cast. Upon reaching the studio Eddie is told by the director to make up as a crook and to visit the tenderloin to get the correct makeup.

Eddie does so and meets "Red" and his pal who have just made a haul. Eddie carefully studies "Red's" garments and then procures an exact duplicate of the latter's makeup. Late that afternoon "Red" and his pal hold up a man but are seen by an officer who starts in pursuit, the officer finally overtaking them. "Red," after beating up the officer, makes his getaway, the officer following closely behind him. The officer finally stops at a patrol box and 'phones headquarters to send out a general alarm.

Working late and wanting to be in time for his appointment, Eddie decides that he will not return to the studio but will return home in his makeup. Arriving home he discovers that he has left the key at the studio and tries to get into the window, but is seen by an officer who grabs him and takes him away with him, Eddie loudly protesting.

"Red" meanwhile is dodging the officers and finally backs into Betty's apartment. She mistakes him for Eddie and kisses him. The officer arrives at the police station and Eddie explains about his makeup. The officer 'phones Betty, who is startled when she learns her mistake. The two struggle, Betty screaming as "Red" makes off. An officer, hearing her screams, runs on and the two start hunting for "Red." Suddenly she sees Eddie, who has hurried from the station. She thinks it is "Red" and she and the officer start after him, while another officer is pursuing "Red." Finally, after much fighting, the two are brought together and "Red" is hurried off after a fierce struggle. The two lovers are at last left together.

LOVE AND BRASS BUTTONS (May 26).—The cast: O'Toole (Harry Rattenberry); Bridget Mahoney (Bess Alexander); Tim O'Sullivan (Neal Burns); Mollie O'Sullivan (Billie Rhodes); Patrick O'Toole (Ray Gallagher). Written by A. E. Christie. Produced by Horace Davey.

O'Toole, who is one of the biggest and finest men on the force, is smitten with the charms of Bridget Mahoney, who is the Police Commissioner's cook. O'Toole's beat embraces the district in which the commissioner's house is located, and he is to be found frequently in the commissioner's kitchen. There is a transfer in the department and O'Toole is assigned another beat.

Some time later the commissioner finds O'Toole in the kitchen and orders him off the place. The commissioner has a lovely daughter and O'Toole has a handsome son. The two are very much in love, but the commissioner objects to having a policeman's son hanging around and the two young people have to do their loving on the sly. Shortly after O'Toole receives his walking orders, he meets his son and the two are sypmathizing with each other when the commissioner's daughter comes along and tells Pat that as her mother and father intend going to the theater that night it will be a good time for him to call.

At eight-thirty the coast was clear and Pat and his lady love have the parlor to themselves. O'Toole has taken advantage of the tip and he and Bridget are having a glorious time in the kitchen. With the many schooners of beer and the warm room, O'Toole gets sleepy and goes to sleep in the chair, while Bridget, sitting upon his knee, leans her head against his shoulder. Unknown to his father, Pat is imitating his old Dad. His girl sits upon his lap and the two are in the throes of a love spasm when they suddenly hear the commisioner and his wife returning.

Pat takes refuge in a closet, and Mollie, running into the kitchen, discovers O'Toole and Bridget fast asleep. She tells them of the arrival of her parents, and while O'Toole tried to hide behind the stove, Bridget fusses around as if she was very busy. The commissioner greets his daughter fondly while the wife goes upstairs to take off her wraps. As she opens the closet door she finds Pat therein. She screams and faints. The family think it is a burglar, and all rush upstairs, but none are brave enough to enter the closet, and rout the burglar. O'Toole, hearing the commotion, thinks he will play the hero, and win the good graces of the commissioner. When he hears Bridget scream he rushes upstairs to capture the burglar, not knowing it is his own son. The excited family tell him the burglar is in the closet, and O'Toole bravely opens the door and orders him out.

It is a surprised father who confronts his cowering son, and they realize that it is necessary to do some quick work. O'Toole begins beating the wall, firing his revolver, and while the family run out, panic-stricken, to get help, Pat is enabled to escape. When the family return with assistance they find a very disheveled O'Toole, and he is complimented on his brave action. He apologizes for not capturing the criminal, and tells his auditors that there were five of them, all of them desperate. The commissioner congratulates O'Toole and promises him promotion for his brave work, and also allows O'Toole the freedom of the kitchen twice a week.

BEAUTY.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN'S FIANCEE (May 17).—The cast: Billy Van Deusen (John Steppling); Bob White, Billy's friend (John Sheehan); Bessie, Bob's sweetheart (Carol Halloway). Directed by Archer McMackin.

Billy Van Deusen sits and ponders over his various escapades. He comes to the grand conclusion that woman is the cause of all his worries and decides that he had better cut the acquaintance of all women in general. He is so engrossed in his thoughts that he does not notice Mary Brawne and her fiance, who are practicing for a tennis match nearby. Mary hits the ball and it lands near Van Deusen who does not see it. The ball is an autographed one, and an urchin, realizing its value, decides to make away with it if he can. He is seen by MacLaffin, Mary's fiance, and in an endeavor to get away the urchin slips the ball into Van Deusen's pocket. When Mac collars the youngster, he informs him that he saw Van Deusen pocket the ball. Mac calls Billy to task and surprises him when he takes the ball from his pocket. Mac threatens to cause serious trouble if Van Deusen ever crosses his path again.

At home Billy receives a letter from his pal, Bob, who requests that he visit him at his "skirtless Arcadia." Billy smiles and opens another letter. It is from his aunt and informs him that she is coming to visit him with two of his childhood sweethearts. Bob's invitation becomes his first thought and he leaves immediately for the place of rest.

Bob meets him at the station and takes him home. Billy sees all evidence of bachelordom and is highly pleased. But when the servant taps the dinner gong and from all sorts of uncanny places beautiful girls appear. Billy is taken back. He wants to make a hurried departure, but the eyes of beautiful Bess hold him. Bob informs him, however, that Bess is his wife-to-be, and the only hope in Billy's heart is smashed. He threatens to do dire things, but Bob gives him a bright idea. He suggests that Billy announce that he is engaged! Billy makes the assertion so that all can hear—even a newspaper lady who happens to be in the neighborhood—and the result is a full Sunday supplement. Mary Brawne happens to be a convenient name and Billy uses it without a second thought. The fact that she is the woman tennis champion does not enter his mind.

Wishing to carry the joke on, Bob has the cook claim that she is Mary Brawne. It looks like bliss for Van Deusen, but the real Mary Brawne and Mac chance across the Sunday supplement and evince anger and surprise when they see that the man who tried to steal their tennis ball is now laying claim to a love affair with Mary. They make a quick departure for Bob's place and their arrival on the scene causes much consternation. Billy tries to explain matters and force Bob to confess, but they are all taken with stage fright. Bess tries to tell them that Billy has been treated shabbily and that she loves him, but Billy sees the only way out of the difficulty is a flight, and while the bunch argue Billy makes his getaway.

TWENTY MINUTES IN MAGIC (May 21).—The cast: Presto (Orral Humphrey) Maji (John Gough); Omalery (Rea Berger); Eileen, his daughter (Lucille Ward).

Presto, a bartender, imagines himself a clever mystic as well as a juggler. He practices his art with beer glasses much to the chagrin of Omalery who owns the place. Omalery's daughter, Eileen, is an interested spectator to the antics of her loved one. Omalery can't see the art and Presto is roughly impressed with the news that he must look for another job. Being an industrious chap he soon learns that Maji, an East Indian fakir, is in need of an assistant and Presto applies for the position.

Maji impresses his power and it is a sad and nervous assistant that undertakes his duties. Even the statues that guard the entrance to Maji's apartments are under his mystic spell. An unwieldly tough enters the place and almost starts a rumpus when Maji proves to him that the "chicken" with whom he has been keeping company, is untrue, but the Mystic's subtle power averts the crisis. Maji goes out for a stroll and leaves the apartment in the care of Presto, who, while snooping around, finds the source of the mystic's uncanny power—a box of pills, one of which taken every twenty minutes endows him with his magic.

Presto takes a chance and a pill, and finds to his amazement that he is as good a mystic as the Indian. Taking the box of pills for future use he starts on his merry way to the Amalery liquid dispensary that he might blind them with his magic and force them to terms. On the way he is seen by Maji who scenting trouble causes the pills to return to his care. Presto goes on unknowingly and arrives at the bar where he does things to please himself. Furnishing a minister, a license, and a ring, all in a jiffy, he starts a marriage ceremony. He is about to fulfill his fondest hopes when the clock strikes the fatal minute and like a haze his power fades away. He feels for another pill but finds the box gone. Omalery comes out of the trance and hands Presto a lesson and a start into the street, a sadder but wiser man.

ADJUSTING HIS CLAIM (May 24).—The cast: Ino Eatt (John Steppling); Irun Carr (John Sheehan); Veggie Tibbles (Carol Halloway); Dick Rosson (Dick Rosson); Boss of Cafeteria (Mary Talbot).

Ino Eatt is a cashier in a busy cafeteria. He is in love with Veggie Tibbles, beautiful dispenser of edibles behind the counter of the same food emporium. Veggie has not yet arrived, having stopped to chat with her friend, Irun Car, the motorman, who sees her safely to work every morning. Irun also has a warm spot in his heart for Veggie. The conductor on the car has a love for duty and suggests that they "cut out the chatter" and move along. Veggie leaves to assume her duties.

The lunch hour arrives and the "bread line" falls into formation at the cafeteria. Irun being relieved, comes to worship at the shrine of Epicure and also Cupid. His amorous advances to Veggie halt the line of "food seekers" and Ino is called upon to put a stop to the mushy stuff. The argument causes him to realize that Veggie is falling for the brass buttons of the conductor's uniform and that if he would have a chance he must have money.

Engrossed in evil thought he reads where a certain party was awarded much money by a jury who decided that a street car company must pay heavily for the loss of a common person's fingernail. Ino gets the idea into his bonnet that it would be simple to let a street car hit him and collect many shekels thereby.

With firm-set teeth he walks upon the car track and the very car which Irun runs hits him a smack on the back. Ino lies like one devoid of life and he is rushed into liniment and bandages. Thereafter Veggie becomes his nurse and companion and Irun loses his job pending an investigation. The company's adjuster cannot come to an agreement with Ino and it looks bad for Irun. The conductor calls on Ino and has reasons to believe that he is "faking." He reports to the president of the company who informs him that he will reward him handsomely if he can prove that certain unscrupulous persons are trying to "beat" the railroads.

Irun undertakes the job but is at a loss to devise ways and means of proving Ino's plot. A movie company who are just in the finishing touches of a fight scene gives him an idea and he enlists the services of the director and the camera man. From a closed cab they watch as Irun engages Ino in controversy. The result is a fight and while Ino proceeds to hammer the tar out of Irun, the camera man turns off the fatal proof of his healthy mien. Irun finally gets away, rushes to the cab and rides out before the panting Ino can suspect anything.

The next day Ino received a letter from the car company, whose president suggests that he call to adjust his claim. With the help of Veggie he arrives at the office and is greeted with open hands. Before they settle with him, however, they suggest that he step into the next room and see an interesting picture of some of the railroad's activity.

The room is darkened and he does not notice Irun, who hides behind one of the chairs. On a sheet in the background is flashed the pictures of Irun's fight with Ino. The more he sees the more nervous he becomes, and when the lights finally go up he has completely disappeared. Irun is congratulated by the president of the company and handed a check—also another one from the "movie" company, who inform him that they have written a wonderful story around the fight scenes. Veggie taken back, decides she loves Irun, and he accepts her into his arms as his future wife.

THE PORK PLOTTERS (May 28).—The cast: Sliggers (Orral Humphrey); Mrs. Sliggers (Lucille Ward).

Sliggers, a successful stockholder, was having breakfast at home one morning when he read the startling information that "pork" was steadily dropping and the bottom was not in sight. The news was a blow to Sliggers, who had invested all his money in pork pending a looked-for rise. He kept the news from his wife, however, wishing to spare her the bad news. She had had news of her own, when the butcher sent in an order of bad meat and she admonished Sliggers to bring some pork chops home or there would be no dinner. Sliggers was worried and fearful that he would forget his wife's errand, so he jotted "Buy pork" on his cuff.

Traffic held no bothers for Sliggers on his way to the office and in his turbulent state of mind he looked not where he was going and finally found himself atop a lumber wagon, with his automobile still running. Luckily he awoke in time to avert an accident and went on to his office. Here he found a memo from his broker informing him that unless he flanked his investment with margins he would be wiped out by evening. Sliggers was "broke" and had visions of the poorhouse, his wife taking in washing, himself begging pittance from former friends. Troubles come in bunches and so did callers come that day to Sliggers' office. In the midst of their business, however, they made hurried departures and Sliggers could not understand. When the stenographer, then the clerk, and finally the office boy deserted him, he imagined that they had surmised his impending ruin and were leaving him while the leaving was good.

Like a balloon pork suddenly took a jump on the market and orders came in right and left. Sliggers' broker called him up and informed him that the sudden rise had netted him a fortune. Sliggers could hardly believe it and rushed home full of "pep" and happiness. On his arrival his wife immediately asked him if he had brought the pork and then Sliggers' brain commenced to clear. He realized for the first time that "Buy pork," the little legend on his cuff, had been the cause of the day's eventful happenings.

Sliggers laughed—loud and long—and took his wife to a regular "feed" where they had a nicely roasted suckling "pork."

CENTAUR.

HIGHLIGHTS AND SHADOWS (Two Parts—May 20).—The cast: John Hilliard (William Clifford); Anne Hilliard (Marie Gavette); Nannette (Margaret Gibson); Jacques (Jack Nelson).

A Breton fishing settlement, on the French West African coast, was the place selected by John Hilliard to find inspiration for his brush. He had but just arrived, accompanied by his wife, when his artistic eye fell upon the beauty of Nannette, a pert little miss of the colony. Nannette was the village coquette, aware of her maidenly charms and led Jacques, who was madly in love with her, a miserable existence by her many flirtations. She really and sincerely returned Jacques' affection, but delighted in teasing him and seeing his outbursts of jealousy.

The artist offered to pay her handsomely if she would consent to become his model but fearing the effect it would have upon her lover, she refused and told the circumstances to her mother. This thrifty dame saw a source of income escaping her hands and promptly ordered her daughter to accept the work.

Hilliard spent more time than necessary in the company of his model which caused gossip among the villagers. As the weeks lengthened into months, Hilliard not only gave little time to his wife, but became almost brutal when she remonstrated with him, while Nannette, forced to continue her employment by the greed of her mother, went about with a heavy heart, shunned by her friends and neglected by her young lover.

Hilliard surprised Nannette in such a mood one day and thinking to cheer her up, suggested that they seek the forest for a background for his canvas. On their way to the forest they were intercepted by old Gaspard who warned Hilliard not to go into the jungle unarmed, relating how his brother had forfeited his life thru the self-same follhardiness.

Unfamiliar with the danger from the proximity of wild beasts, Hilliard disregarded Gaston's warning and with Nannette proceeded on his way and in selecting a suitable spot for his picture they entered the forest further than was safe. That morning, Hilliard had been cruel to his wife and when she witnessed his departure to the forest and his loverlike attitude to his model, the broken-hearted woman decided to end matters by seeking peace in the sea.

When at sunset, the fishing fleet returned, the village gossip lost no time in reporting Nannette's absence to Jacques and further inflamed his jealousy by suggesting that the trip to the forest was to screen Hilliard's lovemaking from prying eyes. Wild with rage, Jacques lost no time in securing his rifle determined to have the life of the man who had stolen his promised wife. Nannette had not spent a pleasant day; her thoughts were of Jacques away at sea and her mother's anger if she disobeyed. To make her discomfort the greater Hilliard attempted to force his attentions upon her, which resulted in his receiving a piece of her mind.

As dusk came on, the jungle inhabitants approached nearer the settlement to prey upon the flocks of the villagers, which was the cause of Hilliard and Nannette encountering several lions on a foraging expedition. Hilliard made a noble fight with only his easel as a weapon, while the frightened girl fled, pursued by a savage beast not to be denied his prey, and only foiled by the accurate aim of Jacques, who was seeking a different victim for his weapon.

The artist, now in mortal hand to hand combat with his lion, was rapidly giving way in the unequal battle and Nannette was unable to induce her vengeful lover to go to Hilliard's assistance, seized the rifle from Jacques' hand and dispatched the lion who now had the artist on the ground. They bore the badly lacerated man to his cottage and there left him while they went to seek a doctor.

Hilliard's punishment was to be more complete. Calling for the wife he had driven insane with grief, he received no answer and eventually found the brief note she had left stating her purpose. The village gossip had seen the unhappy woman enter a small boat and drift out to sea. All night long the fisherfolk searched, while the husband stood upon the beach, a dazed and broken man. When day broke, he was led to meet the returning searchers, fully expecting to receive the lifeless body of his wife, but fate was kind—they had found her in time and John Hilliard had been taught his lesson.

THE KAFFIR'S GRATITUDE (Two parts—May 27).—The cast: John Melbourne (William Clifford); Margaret Carlyle (Margaret Gibson); "Bill" Harrison, Melbourne's neighbor (Frederick Montague); Tom Dixon (Jack Nelson); Kala, a grateful Kaffir servant (O. Bigelow).

John Melbourne has carved a fortune in South Africa. At the time the story opens he can look proudly over his magnificent ranch and estate and feel that he has toiled unremittingly to success. He hastens to write to the girl that he has left behind him, as now he feels his fortune is sufficient to give her all that she has had as the daughter of wealth and a butterfly of society. He fails to take into consideration that she will have to live on the veldt, which he has grown to love, and that this may be a hardship to her. Margaret believes that she loves him enough to go to Africa and marry him and be happy. Her society friends who know her temperament laugh at the idea, and especially Tom Dixon, a man in love with her. He is a society parasite.

Margaret finds the terrors of the jungle and the loneliness of the veldt maddening and it causes a breach between herself and husband. Especially as he has to give his whole attention to his land and cattle, a scourge attacking the latter. Tom Dixon, in the meantime, finds it necessary to adjust his resources and, thinking of the woman he loves, decides to go to Africa as a good field, as it will bring him in touch with her and there are as many chances for wealth there as any other place. The psychological moment is at hand for him to have influence over Margaret, coming as he does from her sphere. John also welcomes him into his home, hoping he will soothe the loneliness of Margaret.

In the meantime, Bill Harrison, a neighbor of Melbourne's, has discovered diamonds found on John's land and together with a band of crooks plans to change the boundry line between them. Tom Dixon is aading to the discontent of Margaret in subtle ways, but he is desperate on account of the state of his finances.

Meanwhile Harrison and his band succeed in stealing considerable of Melbourne's diamonds and they make for the jungle to hide the stuff. Melbourne is called away to town on important business and in his absence Dixon approaches Margaret on a plan to elope. She hesitates and finds that she has a greater love for her husband and sees the folly of her actions with Dixon. This angers Tom and he finally abducts her when she is unconscious. The faithful kaffir sees what is going on and hastens to find his master.

As Dixon is guiding his victim through the jungle they come across the crooks who are headed by Harrison and are burying the stolen diamonds. The posse in search of the crooked gang come in on the scene and Tom, to save himself, opens fire on them with the result that he is shot from his mount and killed. The shooting attracts John and the kaffir and they hurry to the scene. The dishonest neighbor, who has been the man higher up, is exposed. Margaret realizes her folly and truthfully promists John "Your home shall be my home."

Mae Marsh and Robert Harron in A Child of the Paris Streets

Triangle Releases for May 21st

The TRIANGLE-Fine Arts Picture to be released this week will be Mae Marsh with Robert Harron in "A Child of the Paris Streets"—a picture that is bound to reach right down to the hearts of your patrons and "get" them.

There's an indefinable charm about the little lady who plays the part of her own mother in this latest TRIANGLE PLAY—first as the wife of the stern judge who sent an Apache to the gallows, and later as his daughter, stolen by the queen of a band of crooks as revenge for the deed of her father.

They brought her up a master pick-pocket, capable of extracting a pocketbook under the most trying circumstances—with her teeth if necessary—but always able to "prove" her innocence by her winning manner and honest smile.

But when they tried to ill-treat her, and threatened her with the same punishment as another member of the gang had received she ran away—to Bobby Harron.

TRIANGLE PLAYS

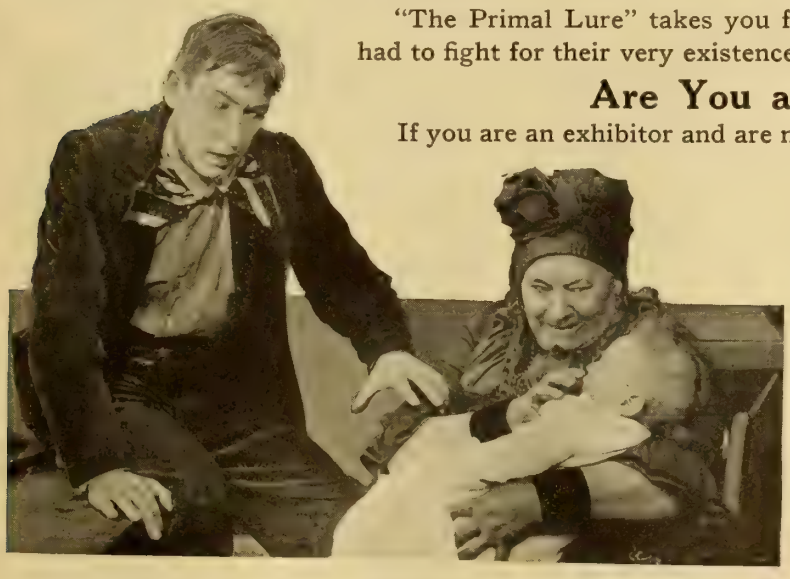
Robert Harron Found Her

Far in the corner of his room huddled up on a couch he found her fast asleep, the picture of radiant beauty. He couldn't understand why she was there and when in the morning she had disappeared the mystery was deeper than ever.

Your patrons will enjoy every moment of this picture —right from the start through to the end.

W. S. Hart in "The Primal Lure"

Then there's this TRIANGLE-Ince Picture to be released the same week. Here W. S. Hart repeats the success he has made in "Between Men," "The Disciple," "Hell's Hinges," and other TRIANGLE PLAYS. Men, women and children alike all love to see Hart in a picture play—they love to watch his expressive features and the cool manner in which he handles exciting situations.



"The Primal Lure" takes you far north into beautiful Alaska when men had to fight for their very existence.

secures the position. He is immediately put to work cleaning up and is supplied with pail and brush, but misunderstands his instructions and at once proceeds to scrub a costly and highly polished piano.

The manager interrupts Dome in his ruinous occupation and sets him to work washing the show windows. He gets into difficulties with his long handled brush and the passing pedestrians. He is subsequently sent out with the piano tuner to assist him on a job and which happens to be at the home of the proprietor of the piano emporium.

Upon their arrival the lady of the house leaves in order to escape the horror of the incessant banging incident to the tuning of the piano. They start to work and M. T. Dome having an ear for music takes command of the job, creating havoc to the piano case with his careless handling of the tools. The daughter of the house, not able to stand the discord, disregards her mother's instructions and goes for a walk and then the fireworks begin.

M. T. Dome falls into the upright piano and emerges amidst a tangled mass of wires and other wreckage. Not table to get at the works to his satisfaction, he opens a way with saw and axe. About this time madame returns and finds her piano on fire, Dome having carelessly thrown a lighted match in the works. The boss is phoned and arrives on the job in double quick time and hastily and forcibly fires Dome from the premises.

Picking himself up, and after running several blocks to escape his infuriated employer, he observes the daughter approaching and in rubbering after her witnesses her run down by an auto. Inspiration comes into his bonehead and he rushes to the rescue, commandeers a passing auto and takes her home, where he is forgiven by father and mother and handsomely rewarded.

PREPAREDNESS—May 26).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Colonel (Louis FitzRoy); Bessie, his daughter (Clair Alexander); Captain (Jefferson Osborne); First Cop (George George); Major (Harry Jackson); Second Cop (Arthur Mund); Third Cop (Robert Kenyon); Fourth Cop (Gordon McGregor).

Jerry falls in love with an army officer's daughter and although the Colonel protests vigorously, the girl and Jerry steal away and are having a pretty love scene when a policeman's attention is attracted. The cop is also smitten with the beauty of the young woman and he decides to scare Jerry away so that he may make up to the girl. An argument follows and Jerry slips away and gets a long rope, which he throws over the telegraph wires overhead, tying one end to the cop's belt. Jerry then hoists the bluecoat up in the air, fastening the end of the rope to the pole and leaves the guardian of the law suspended between heaven and earth.

A squad of brother officers arrive and they promptly release their commander and give chase to Jerry, who seeks refuge in an abandoned fort, and hides himself behind the half broken-down walls. Jerry's ammunition consists of a lot of bricks. When the cops swoop down upon him, firing at random, Jerry responds with volleys of bricks, and one by one the policemen are knocked unconscious. The Colonel passing by sees the fracas and admires Jerry for his bravery and after hostilities cease he congratulates him and as a reward he promises to permit Jerry to marry his pretty daughter.

They proceed to the Colonel's home and there Jerry is announced as the prospective son-in-law. Everything runs along smoothly until the Colonel is stricken with the gout and Jerry's clumsiness gets him in bad. A shower of blows upon his head and body dealt out by the Colonel causes Jerry to throw the old man in a rolling chair and dash out into the street with his captive. In and out among a mass of automobiles he rides the Colonel until at last a collision takes place and the enraged soldier is thrown into the gutter. A policeman witnesses the event and prevents Jerry's escape and arrests him. A squad of officers escort the Colonel to his home and Jerry is denounced. All chance of his marrying the pretty daughter is upset and while the girl makes love to the policeman that started the first argument with Jerry, the little fellow who had but a few hours previously established himself so solidly with the Colonel for his brave work against an army of policemen, is made an outcast and locked up in jail.

FALSTAFF.

POLITICKERS (May 22).—The cast: Oscar (Claude Cooper); Conrad (Frank E. McNish); Major Mannering (Riley Chamberlin); His Granddaughter (Gladys Dore).

Major Mannering is a veteran of the Civil War. His household is small, consisting of himself, May, his granddaughter, and an old negress housekeeper. Oscar and Conrad, two middle-aged lawyers, are almost daily visitors at his home. They are rivals for May. May, however, is in love with Frank. The Major is opposed to her marrying Frank, because in his opinion no man who is less than fifty can make a decent sort of husband.

The Major is such an enthusiastic student of the strategy of war that when he begins to relate some of the terrible events of the war he utilizes the ornaments in the room to demonstrate the effects of battle. During these harrangues, the lawyers and May are wont to slink out of the room without the Major noticing their absence.

One day Conrad rushes into the Major's library with joyful news that he has been nominated for mayor on the Republican ticket. The Major hates politicians and Conrad is told to leave immediately. Strange to relate, however, the reception given to Oscar when he announces that he has been nominated for mayor is quite the opposite that accorded Conrad. Oscar and Conrad get an opportunity to propose to May in the park. May gets rid of Conrad by urging him to resign in favor of the Major—something which Conrad wouldn't do for the sake of any woman, and of Oscar by putting him off till election day.

Election day arrives and the Major is returned the winner. He is so happy that he is willing to grant May anything. She seizes the occasion to broach the subject of her union with Frank, and the Major in an outburst of joy insists on their immediate marriage. That evening the Major sees himself serenaded and when he bows from his window to his admirers, he feels like a conquering hero. His imagination is brimful with visions of political grandeur. If a mayor, why not a president? Yes that is his ultimate aim.

The next morning he kisses May farewell and sees her and Frank off in their automobile on their honeymoon. He then returns to the library to peruse the glowing eulogies that the papers are sure to pour out upon him. What then is his amazement when the headline informs him in staring capitals that a recount has given Conrad the election by a small plurality. Seething with rage the Major falls back in his chair. If he could only murder somebody!

Just at this moment Oscar and Conrad enter, both rigged out in their best togs, each carrying a box of candy and an enormous bouquet under their arms. Both offer the Major their heartfelt sympathy and ask for May. Five minutes later they leave very much the worse for wear while the Major is breathing with a sense of relief as he contemplates the scattered debris of candy and flowers.

SAMMY'S SEMI-SUICIDE (May 27).—The cast: Sammy (Walter Hiers); His Sweetheart (Francis Keyes).

Sammy and May are sweethearts. Both are employed in the same office—he as bookkeeper, she as typist. Whenever anything goes against him, it is his wont to dispose without delay of all his belongings in the form of gifts to his friends and to make preparations to kill himself. At the critcal moment something always happens to set his design at naught.

One of his recent suicidal attempts is caused by the fact that his employer refuses to raise his salary before Christmas. He immediately sets out for the bank of a lake with the intent to drown himself. But just as he is about to precipitate himself into the deep, there rises in his mind's eye the vision of his sweetheart learning of his death and suffering agony untold as a result thereof. So no suicide act is "pulled off."

A fortnight later, May gives a birthday party—in the course of which she devotes too much attention to another gentleman. Sammy decides that she does not love him. Death then be his refuge! Indignant at his conduct the guests decide to call his bluff for once and concoct a little scheme which they immediately put into operation. Armed with revolvers and pebbles they follow Sammy to where he intends to execute his design—this time by shooting. Sammy has no sooner pressed his revolver against his temple than he calls up a vision of his entire family dying at a stroke when they learn of his suicide. He unselfishly decides to live—for the sake of his family.

At this moment the conspirators fire their pistols into the air and cast their pebbles at him. The suddenness of the uproar and the impact of the pebbles convinces Sammy that he has committed suicide, and the thought thereof causes him to faint with fright. When he comes to, he is alarmed by hearing a newsboy (fixed by the conspirators) yell forth the news of his suicide. He rises to follow the boy and comes upon two of the guests buying a paper of the boy. They immediately burst into tears and start out eulogizing the nobility of the deceased one's character. In vain does Sammy protest that he is very much alive.

When the girl he loves hears the news she faints. In vain does Sammy rush from one to the other, a living refutation of his death. Nobody pays any heed to him. The guests leave, in order to afford May the consolation of solitude. Only one gentleman remains—on purpose—and Sammy. May immediately casts sorrow to the winds and—to the infinite mortification of Sammy—enacts a love scene with the gentleman who brazenly declares that Sammy could have done no better than get out of his way. Sammy collapses in a chair, whereupon the loving couple immediately occupy the same chair, just as if it had been vacant, and continue their flirtation. The gentleman then suggests how glorious it would be for them to get married at once. In vain does Sammy protest. The girl consents, and they immediately set out by auto to the minister's home. Sammy has slipped into the auto and finds himself seated between them—which in no wise prevents them from continuing their flirtation right across his body, as though to them he was non-existent. They get to the minister's, but as they shut the door quickly, Sammy is spared the agony of witnessing the marriage ceremony—which, of course, does not take place. A few minutes later some friends of his arrive. He pours out to them his tale of woe, but they pay absolutely no attention, and when the newlyweds appear, they give them a rousing send-off.

Sammy is seething with indigantion. Had they at least accorded him burial instead of permitting him to roam around as a ghost—witnessing such heart-rending spectacles! He totters home and collapses, exhausted on his bed. He falls asleep. The next morning he is startled out of his sleep by his mother, who shows him the clock and warns him that he has overslept. At the sound of the familiar voice and the sight of the familiar face he is convinced that he is alive after all, and all his experiences have been the creation of a morbid imagination. To make assurances doubly sure he hastens to the office to discover if May is still in her accustomed place. When he finds her there—working away as usual—he feels deeply ashamed of himself and takes good care not to mention a word about his nightmare so as not to make a laughing stock of himself. He merely gets hold of May's hand and slips an engagement ring on her finger—as a token of his reformation. Sammy never has another suicidal fit.

THE MAN WITH THE HOD (May 16).—The cast: The art student (Madge Kirby); her hubby (Arthur Tavares); the man with the hod (Henry Kernan); his affectionate mate (Alice Neice). Directed by Rube Miller.

Madge is an art student who seeks a big, strong model. Those which the art school can offer are not satisfactory. In search of the right kind of a model, she comes upon the man with the hod, and prevails upon him to return with her to pose for her painting. While she is arranging the pose, her husband returns, and, finding his wife with another man, forcibly ejects the intruder, thereby arousing Madge's anger.

Discovering the absence of his hod, the man returns to Madge's house for it. Meanwhile, neighborhood gossips have discovered the strange man in Madge's study, and hurry to tell the hod carrier's spouse of the actions of her husband.

Madge prevails upon the hod carrier to pose in skins. Her husband returns as the picture is about to be started, and starts after the hod carrier with a gun. Alice, the hod carrier's wife, enters through a window, and attacks her husband. A chase ensues, which ends with a ducking in a mortar box, with the two women, Madge and Alice, spraying water over their trouble makers with leads of hose.

CHINATOWN VILLAINS (May 21).—The cast: The villian (Jack Connelly); the secret service man (Jack Gaines); Hop Head Joe (Paddy McQuire); Rena, an heiress (Rena Rogers); her sweetheart (Arthur Moon); her father (Edward J. Laurie). Directed by Jack Dillon. Scenario by Robert A. Dillon.

A villain engaged in smuggling opium reads in the paper that a millionaire, the father of the girl he seeks to marry, is going to bequeath a million for the suppression of opium smoking. For revenge at the millionaire's interference in his business, the villain kidnaps his daughter with the aid of Hop Head Joe, and take her to the opium den and hold her prisoner.

At this time Secret Service Sam, a government detective, is on the villains' trail, and, in looking over his den he falls through a skylight and lands in the hop joint, just as Rena's sweetheart, disguised as a Chinaman, has found her in the den. The detective is made a prisoner also. Eventually the heroine is rescued and married by the hero, while the villain is captured by Sam.

RIVAL ROGUES (May 23).—The cast: Limpy Joe (Rube Miller); Artful Art Arthur Tavares); The Alley Belle (Alice Neice); The Lady (Madge Kirby). Produced by Rube Miller. Scenario by Thomas Delmar.

Artful Art is the real noise with the belle of the alley, until one day he tries to take a purse from the lady. Limpy Joe interferes and prevents him from doing so. The belle happens to be watching him at the time. Art resents this and gets trimmed. The belle admires Joe, and takes him over to meet the gang Art gets the gang to mob Joe, and he trims them all.

Both Joe and Art would like to be the big noise with the belle, and tell her so. She likes jewelry and says that the one who gets her the most jewelry she will have. Both go off to rob a house, and both select the same house, which happens to be the home of the lady. Both get caught, and as Joe has saved the lady's purse, she believes him when he tells her he has come into the house to prevent Art from robbing her. Art is taken to jail. Joe goes to the alley and gives the belle the jewelry. When she asks for Art, Joe tells her that he is in jail. She goes there. The lady is there and sees the jewelry. The belle is questioned. Joe is caught. Art and Joe are thrown into the same cell, where they fight out their difference.

NATIONAL NUTS (May 28).—The cast: Strikeout Murphy (Paddy McQuire); A Substitute Pitcher (Ben Turpin); Lord Crawford Rawsberry (Arthur Moon); The Baseball Nut (Ed Sedgwick); His Daughter (Rena Rogers); The Umpire (Jack Gains). Directed by Jack Dillon. Scenario by Robert A. Dillon.

Strikeout Murphy, sensational pitcher of the Big League, comes to the ball grounds for his morning practice. His ingenious curving of the ball and his ability to strike out the hard hitting sluggers of the opposing teams have made him famous and he is admired by thousands, among whom is Rena, in love with little Jeff, a substitute pitcher on Murphy's nine.

Jeff calls at Rena's house, and succeeds in inducing her to go to the ball park, despite the objections of her rich father, who wants her to marry Lord Rawsberry, a fictitious nobleman. At the ball park Rena is fascinated by Murphy, and her love for Jeff wanes. Murphy cleverly has the ball thrown in the direction of Rena, and in this manner works his way into her confidence, while the other players laugh at the jealousy of Jeff.

Rawsberry finds this out, and after many attempts finally induces the umpire to aid him in causing Murphy's downfall. At the opening game of the season, the umpire, faithful to Rawsberry, and inclined to be vindictive to Murphy, rubs arsenic on the ball as the strikeout man wets it with his saliva.

This effects Murphy, and he gradually falls before the onslaught of his opponent's bats. Meanwhile little Jeff, who has been instrumental in defeating some nefarious designs of Rawsberry, has been kidnapped and makes his escape from the den in which he has been held a captive. Arriving at the ball park just in time to go in the box, he is able to demonstrate his ability by saving the game. The umpire, who is assailed by the fans for calling every ball, Jeff threw a strike, confesses under pressure, that Jeff bribed him to do it, and instead of being a hero, Jeff was chased from the park, while Strikeout Murphy became a hero when the duplicity of Rawsberry and the umpire was exposed. He married Rena and is the idol of thousands, while Jeff is a mascot now in one of the Bush Leagues.

AMERICAN.

THE PRETENDER (Two Parts—May 15).—The Cast: Roberts Arnold (Robert Klein); Phyllis (Lizette Thorne); Stuart Kendall (Edward Coxen); Charlston Lane (George Field).

Phyllis Arnold is the daughter of Robert Arnold, still active as one of the big men of the wheat pit. Stuart Kendall and Phyllis are engaged at the time Charlston Lane becomes associated with Arnold in a particularly big deal. Having heard about Phyllis' influence with her father he is most careful to make a good impression on her and is successful in doing so. Only, as time passes, and Phyllis learns that her father is becoming more and more deeply involved through Lane's advice she begins to distrust the man. Lane, who has not yet made his big play, realizes that he is slipping and seeks some way to regain his lost standing.

At this time the young set, of which Phyllis is a member, becomes interested in a mystic who has been most successful in readings for some of them. With her friends Phyllis is induced to go to him, and he surprises her by requesting her to return again alone when he will have more to tell her. As an adventure she goes back to him again.

The mystic person, who is known as the Oracle, is operating through Lane who, with his knowledge of prominent people, tips him off. It is Phyllis whom he wishes to influence and the Oracle works towards this result. Through the large amount of information Lane has given him he appears really psychic and tells her a number of facts from her past life that convinces Phyllis of the sincerity of his powers. Meanwhile, Lane continues to stay close to Arnold and endeavor to win him over to a big plunge to corner wheat. Stuart notices Phyllis' growing coolness and tries to find out the cause but she denies that there is anything wrong.

Arnold's decision as to whether or not he will go into Lane's pool trembles in the balance. Lane again has the Oracle send for Phyllis and this time the Oracle comes out boldly and warns her of her connection with Stuart. She returns to her home and that evening breaks off her engagement, refusing to give Stuart any satisfactory reason. Stuart suspects that Lane is somehow concerned in the matter. He finds him at the club at dinner and watches him during the course of the evening. Stuart follows Lane to the home of the Oracle but is unable to find out what happens there. However, to safeguard himself, he bribes the maid in Phyllis' home to let him know when her mistress is going out. The maid agrees.

The following day the maid reports to Stuart at his club that Phyllis is going to the house of the Oracle for a final appointment. Stuart goes direct to the house of the Oracle and forces his way in. He has just time to give the mystic warning that, unless he comes clean and tells Phyllis the truth, there will be serious trouble. As Phyllis is announced Stuart steps into the alcove, covers the mystic with a revolver and draws the curtain about him. Phyllis enters and takes her place in front of the Oracle.

Lane hastens to the mystic's home to tell him the time has arrived to convince Phyllis. He enters as usual by another way and comes upon Stuart standing in the alcove covering the Oracle. He overpowers him from behind, then takes his place and signals the Oracle that all is all right and to go ahead and convince Phyllis that she must advise her father according to Lane's wishes. The Oracle does so, tells Phyllis of the grave danger to her father unless he takes sides with Lane and convinces her that haste is imperative.

Phyllis picks up the telephone under the Oracle's guidance and tells her father that she has reasons to believe that Lane is playing square and that she suggests he go in with him. Lane, satisfied that there is nothing now that can stop him, hurries to Arnold's office to complete the arrangement. As Lane leaves, Stuart manages to free himself and confronts the surprised mystic, a struggle follows as Stuart fights both the mystic and his servant whom he summons. Lane, meanwhile, is on his way to Arnold's office.

Stuart puts the servant out of the way and forces the mystic to tell Phyllis the truth. She now realizes the game that Lane has been playing and hastily tries to get her father on the phone at the office. He has left for the bank with Lane. A chase follows wherein Phyllis and Stuart arrive at the bank at the moment Arnold and Lane are about to enter. Surprised at his daughter's sudden appearance Arnold inquires the cause; she tells him briefly that there is something more important on hand than a matter of a stock deal, she will see him about that later. For the present she wants him to come along with them, she and Stuart are going to be married right away. Lane sees the game is off as Arnold assents to his daughter's imperative demand. As they climb into the car to drive away to the minister's, Lane turns and walks away, to recoup his fortunes as best he can.

Billy Carrington, millionaire and idler, is notified by his family physician, Dr. Howard, that he is afflicted with a new and incurable disease, hamora, and that at the best he has but four months to live. Billy takes the news philosophically, and, through the reading of a book dealing with the problems of the poor, and through catching his valet, Fordham, in the act of opening up his safe, there comes to him an inspiration. He notifies his lawyer, Johnson, of his plan and swears him to secrecy. To the first deserving person or cause that he can find, he determines to leave his entire wealth. His home closed, and having allowed the report to be spread that he has left for a tour of South America, he takes up quarters in a distant part of the city under an assumed name.

Chance leads him to the office of the Woman's Redemption Society, and to investigate its worthiness, he succeeds in obtaining a position as secretary for the society. But Buffum, the president of the home, has more than a charitable interest in fallen women, and others connected with him, for instance Hazel, a vulture of the tenements, and "Mug" Mullalay, with a lengthy police record, are not of the religious type. Billy leaves his position, and informs the police that it would be well to investigate the society's business. Detectives are put on the case immediately.

In the same tenement where Billy lives, there rooms a young girl by the name of Bess, who has come from the country to undertake a literary career. "Mug" Mullalay, also living in the same tenement, sees her and sets her down for his victim, while Billy also meets her and considers her as a candidate for his wealth.

One night Billy informs Bess that he was once the valet of Billy Carrington, the millionaire, and that he knows the combination of the Carrington safe. Without giving her a chance to declare herself, he leaves her with a key to the house, and also a diagram of the room, and the combination of the safe, and departs. Bess angrily tears up the paper. Fordham, Billy's discharged valet, reads that Carrington is supposed to be touring South America, and he plans to open the safe himself. But when Billy finds the safe opened, and the bit of paper that he left in it, he at once logically concludes that Bess must have done the work. The paper that he had left in the safe reads: "Perhaps some day you will learn that honesty is not only the best policy, but also the only policy—William Carrington."

Mullalay and Hazel drug Bess and take her to Mullalay's room. Returning to the tenement, Billy is about to enter his room when he hears Bess, now beginning to recover from the effects of the dope, pleading with her captors. He knocks at Mullalay's door and demands admittance. Mullalay and Hazel hurriedly shove Bess into a closet, with a gag over her mouth, and admit Billy. He tells them that he is going to look in the closet for her after they have stated that they have seen nothing of her, and in attempting to prevent him, Mullalay draws a gun. Billy struggles with him, and in the scuffle the gun is discharged. The landlady hears the report and policemen are summoned. Billy finally opens the door of the closet, and Bess, wounded by the bullet, falls into his arms. The police arrive, Bess is sent to the hospital, and the others taken to the police station. That same night sufficient evidence has been obtained to raid the Woman's Redemption Society, and in this raid Fordham and Buffum are caught.

At the police station the note that was left by Billy in the safe is found on Fordham, and when Billy recognizes his former valet, he realizes that it was he, and not Bess, who opened the safe. Billy goes to the hospital and finds that Bess's wound is only a slight one, and begs forgiveness from her for the proposition that he made, stating that perhaps she will understand later.

Leaving the hospital, Bess is informed by Johnson that all the wealth of the millionaire Carrington has been turned over to her. She rushes to break the news to Billy. He congratulates her warmly. While at this point Johnson discovers an item in a newspaper and dashes to find Billy. He finds Bess with him. Billy reads that the well known Dr. Howard has been found insane, having a mania for pronouncing his patients to be afflicted with a new and incurable disease, and giving them but four months to live. Bess turns to Johnson, tells him that she guesses that she will not accept the Carrington wealth, that she would rather be just a poor girl, but here, Billy discloses to her that he himself is William Carrington, and that he is willing to have his estate returned but only on condition that she comes with it, and to all of this Bess agrees.

MUSTANG.

THE BLINDNESS (Two Parts—May 19).—The cast: Joe (William Stowell); Sal (Dodo Newton); Jim (Roy Stewart); Anna (Rhea Mitchell); Mexican (Warren Ellsworth).

Joe and Jim are partners in a mining claim. With the opening of the school session, Joe, who is a widower, takes his little daughter, Sal, to the schoolhouse, where he meets Anna, the new teacher. He falls in love with her, and later proposing to her, is accepted. Jim has also become infatuated with Anna, but conceals his feelings when he learns of her engagement to Joe.

The mine is paying little, and Jim suggests a trip across the desert, in search of a lost mine, the finding of which would mean a fortune. Joe agrees to the proposition, and a few days later finds them in the desert. A sand storm blows up, and the two men become separated. With the morning Jim finds Joe. He sees that he is sand blind, and he realizes that he could never live to find his way out of the desert alone. He leaves him, returns back to Anna, and informs her that Joe became lost in the storm, and that when he found him he was dead. But some Mexicans find Joe, and take him to their abode on the edge of the desert. There after weeks of fever, he recovers to such an extent that he begs the Mexicans to take him to his home. They consent but one of them informs him that he will never be able to regain his sight.

Meantime, Jim has been pleading with Anna to marry him. Joe arrives at the cabin and overhears their conversation. He listens as Anna tells Jim that some day she may marry him. Silently Joe leaves, concluding that it would be the best thing for Anna never to know of his return. Aimlessly wandering about, he comes to an edge of a cliff and is almost about to step over it when he is rescued by a doctor who has been summoned from a nearby ranch. The doctor hears his story, and after having examined his eyes, tells him that he is only sand blind and that he can fix him up in a few hours. Joe then consents to accompany the doctor to his office.

That night Jim learns from the Mexican that he has brought Joe back. He hurries to Anna's cabin, and is perplexed when he finds that Joe has not yet arrived there. He increases his attentions to Anna, finally telling her that she must leave with him that night. Terrified, Anna manages to write a message for help on little Sal's white dress, and then sends the child to the neighbors. She pretends to consent to accompany Jim, and begins to pack up her belongings. Jim becomes suspicious when he misses Sal, and insists that she come at once. Joe, his sight restored, enters the cabin. He sees the packed valise and will not listen to Anna's attempts to explain. Joe tells Jim that only one of them can have Anna, and the two men fight. Sal arrives at the neighbors and they read the call for help on her dress. Joe has overpowered Jim when the neighbors and Sal arrive. He still believes that Anna intended going with Jim, but when he sees her message on little Sal's dress, he becomes convinced and begs for forgiveness.

THE RECLAMATION (American—Five Parts—May 25).—The cast: Gordon MacLeod (Clarence Purton); Robert Powell (Franklyn Ritchie); Louise MacLeod (Winnifred Greenwood); John Phelan (Dick La Reno); Edith Phelan (Margaret Nicholas); James Kirby (Harry McCabe); Walt Reid (Roy Stewart).

A vigorous character, Gordon MacLeod, represents the faction made up of small ranchers, and John Phelan is at the head of the powerful monopoly seeking to control the entire water supply of the Esperanza valley. Louise MacLeod is private secretary to Powell, who is the right hand man of Phelan. Louise is really in the service of the ranchers, to whom, through her father, she is furnishing information of the plans of Phelan. Louise becomes impressed with the native principles of Powell, though she cannot reconcile his character with his actions. She at length begins to exercise a peculiar influence over him, unconsciously, and he commenaces to realize that the ranchers have rights on their side.

While a lawsuit is pending regarding the water rights, Louise keeps her father informed of every important move made. Later on, when it has been decided to blow up the slide, at the head of the Esperanza, and form a new ditch robbing the settlers of their water supply, Louise informs her father and the ranchers get ready to resist the attempt. About this time Powell's conscience becomes active and he wavers in his loyalty to Phelan. Phelan badgers him and Powell suddenly resigns.

Through Louise, Powell joins her father's forces in the defense of the slide. There is a dramatic situation in which both sides line

Bing's Home Entertainer

Here's a little machine, simple in its construction, and easy of operation, for which there is a place in every home.

It projects motion picture film as perfectly in the home as is possible in the average theatre.

Light is provided by a baby arc, supplied with current from the ordinary electric light socket, controlled through a special rheostat.

The baby arc develops 800 candle power, with about six amperes of current. The rheostat supplied is suitable for 110, 150 or 220 volts.

Pictures projected are 6 x 8 feet in size and splendid results are possible with a throw up to twenty-five feet.

Standard size film is used, making every film exchange in the country a constant source of supply for subjects. Reel boxes are of 1,000 feet capacity.

Set up and ready for use, the machine measures 31 inches long, 31 inches high, and 10 inches broad. The lamphouse is 10 by 6. Weight of machine, complete with arc and rheostat is 24 pounds. Packed for shipment, the weight is 55 pounds.

There is absolutely no fire risk—"Safety First" has been the watchword in construction.

THE OVERCOAT (American—Five Parts—May 8).—The cast: Belle (Rhea Mitchell) Maurice Norton (William Stowell); Sharp, a detective (Perry Banks); Stephen Norton, Maurice's father (Clarence Burton); Jack Wayne, son of the manager of a sweatshop (Warren Ellsworth). Scenario written by J. Edward Hungerford. Directed by Rea Berger.

Belle, a girl of the dance halls, is seated at a beer table in the notorious "Turkey Trot" dancehall. Maurice Norton, a cast-off rich man's son, just released from prison, thinly clad and minus an overcoat to protect him from the winter's cold, wanders into the saloon. Belle strikes up an acquaintance with him and he arouses her admiration when she realizes he has offered to spend his last three dollars on her.

Sharp, a detective, seated nearby in the dancehall, has recognized the ex-convict. He follows the pair when Belle takes Maurice to her home and makes a note of the address. Belle tells her new found friend how as a sweatshop girl she was made the mistress of her employer's son and later cast off, taking up the life of the dance halls and streets, because of her love for fine dresses and good food. She shows Maurice her bankbooks and tries to give him money to buy an overcoat. He refuses to take it.

After vainly seeking work for several days, Maurice, still making his home with Belle, gets a job as a street laborer. Later he is promoted to foreman of the same gang. Belle deserts her old life of the dancehalls, and takes up the drudgery of a workingman's wife. His father, longing for his son, seeks to find him and in the search hires a detective agency to locate him. The agency is the one employing the detective Sharp. When called in he tells the father he thinks his son is living with a girl of the half world and takes him to Belle's home.

Maurice comes home from work and finds his father there. The father implores his son to once more become the rich man's son. But Maurice scornfully turns the proposal down. Belle, thinking he is making the sacrifice for her, tries to make it appear that he is only a passing fancy with her and that she is anxious to return to her old life. Maurice sees through her motive and she breaks down and sobs out her love for him, while the wealthy father looks on with disgust.

The son tells Norton, Sr. he will not give up the woman who has slaved for him, and made a man of the "damned, depraved, idle spawn you gave birth" and denounces his parent for striving to make him do so. Maurice tells Belle he will make her his wife legally in the morning. As the father leaves, the scene fades out, with Belle and Maurice clasped in each other's arms and the bankbook showing her earnings of the old days of the dancehalls burning in the glare.

THE COURTESAN (American—Five Parts—May 18).—The cast: Mayda St. Maurice (Eugenie Forde); Glenn Manley (Hal Cooley); Bayard Vance (Al Fordyce); Betty Howard (Nell Franzen).

Mayda St. Maurice is a courtesan, who has sacrificed her whole existence that her son may advance in the world. Glenn Manley, her son, believes that his parents died in Alaska, leaving him an estate which paid an income sufficient for his education and needs. In order that her boy should have no inkling as to the source of his money a specified sum is paid each quarter to Bayard Vance, an elderly lawyer, who turns it over to Glenn, who is studying in the same profession.

Mayda tells Vance about her early life—how she eloped with Jim Brice, a gambler, but was deserted before her child was born. And she had been compelled to lead an immoral life in order to support herself and her son. Glenn is in love with Betty, who has been studying abroad, but is returning home.

Murdock Grandby, Sr. the political boss of the city, has obtained through fradulent means a contract for public construction. To head off any possible investigation while the work is being done he decides to have his son elected District Attorney. The taxpayers' league is aroused and Glenn is persuaded to run for the office in opposition to Murdock Grandby, Jr.

Grandby, Sr., alarmed at the progress that Glenn is making, sets his henchmen to work to discover some dark spot in the young man's past. Glenn is shadowed to Vance's office.

An agent of Grandby calls on the old lawyer and makes inquiries into Glenn's early life, but Vance puts him off. While Vance is answering the telephone the man notices two receipts—one showing that Glen Manley has received a certain sum of money from Mr. Vance and the other that Vance has received the same sum from Mayda St. Maurice. The henchman jumps to the quick conclusion that the courtesan is contributing to the campaign fund of the would-be prosecutor and he pockets the receipts.

These he turns over to Grandby, Jr. Murdock shows Mayda the receipts and promises her immunity from vice raids if she will make an affidavit that Glenn has accepted money. She pretends to fall in with the plan, but as soon as she obtains the receipts she hurls them into the fire.

Murdock now bribes Mayda's maid and is in the act of searching her trunk when he is cornered by Mayda and at the point of a pistol is compelled to relinquish possession of a photograph of his father and a document that would prove that Mayda is Glenn's mother. He orders that Mayda be shadowed day and night.

Murdock is unable to obtain legal evidence against Glenn, who is elected by a small majority, but he finds small comfort in his victory for it has cost him his sweetheart. In the meantime Vance had followed Grandby, Sr., to Palm Beach and he proves that the political boss was known as Jim Brice, and that he was the cause of Mayda's misfortunes. Vance obtains an agreement by which Grandby sets aside a sum of money for Mayda's use and he also recognizes Glenn as his legitimate son.

Grandby, Jr., attempts to circulate a recall petition and events move rapidly to a startling climax. Glenn is lured to his mother's illegal residence by a bogus note and Betty is also phoned for. Mayda protects her boy as long as she can, but is finally compelled to admit that she is his mother. "Yes, and that man," said Vance pointing to Murdock, "is your brother!" The excitement is too much for Mayda and she succumbs to an attack of heart failure. Lawyer Vance explains everything and Betty and Glenn are reconciled.

NANCY'S BIRTHRIGHT (Signal—Five Parts—May 22).—The cast: John Martingale (Murdock MacQuarrie); Nancy Levine, his daughter (Edythe Sterling); Nancy Levine, his granddaughter (Edythe Sterling); Leslie Warner (Nobert A. Myles); William Preston (Millard K. Wilson); Jack Levine (V. T. Henderson). Directed by Murdock MacQuarrie).

Jack Levine and his wife, Nancy, are the occupants of a room in one of the tenement houses of the slums. Nancy presents her husband with a baby girl, but he refuses to have anything to do with it and deserts her. Nancy becomes delirious and threatens to kill the child, is restrained by a youth, Leslie Warner. Nancy is dying and, realizing this, directs a note to John Martingale, head of the iron works, which is delivered by Leslie. The note reads, "I leave my baby to the care of your god." Leslie then goes to his home, where he lives with his widowed mother, and they decide to adopt the baby girl.

Sixteen years later Leslie Warner has become a prosperous business man. Nancy has been well educated and is a beautiful and good girl. Leslie finds that his affection for the child has grown into a love for the woman. In the meantime Jake Levine has become a criminal and leader of a gang in the underworld. He tells them he has a plan on foot whereby they can secure a big sum of money. He has learned that John Martingale, a wealthy manufacturer, had, years before, cast off his only daughter after she had eloped with a married man. Some two years later Martingale received a note from his daughter telling him she was leaving him a legitimate grand-daughter and that she, herself, was dying. Martingale has been unable to find the girl and, therefore, decides to adopt an orphan girl from the slums and leave his wealth to her. Jake's plan is to provide a girl from the slums whom they can control, and to split the old man's money between them.

As they are talking William Preston, manager of the Martingale factory (of whom Leslie Warner is assistant manager) enters and joins in the scheme. Leslie and Nancy are engaged to be married and one morning after leaving home in his car Leslie turns his head to wave goodbye and accidentally runs down a man. He is carried into Leslie's home, where it is found he is not seriously hurt. He tells Nancy he is an orphan and she in turn explains to him her own position. This man is the double of Jake and tells Jake and the gang about Nancy. They agree that she is just the girl they want. Jake goes to Leslie's home, recognizes him and discovers Nancy is his own daughter. He entices her to the rendezvous of the gang, proves to her that he is her father, and tells her their plan. He tells her her grandfather was a murderer, her father a thief, and her mother a rich man's daughter who became a dope fiend in the slums. Nevertheless, Nancy refuses to have anything to do with the plot. Jake locks her in the room and leaves.

Meantime, Leslie has been searching all night for her, but without success. The next day Nancy tells Jake she is engaged to marry Leslie. The gang arranges with Preston to get Leslie in trouble. Preston leaves a package of money in Leslie's care, but later returns himself and removes it. Leslie is accused of the theft and arrested. Jake then tells Nancy what they have done and says unless she will do as they want, Leslie will be sent to prison. She still refuses. He then sends one of his pals into the room, a hideous hunchback, but Nancy's beautiful nature conquers his evil heart and wins his support. He assists her to escape that night.

Meantime, a discharged employee observed Preston take the package of money from the safe, and goes to Martingale's home and informs him of this fact. Leslie is at once released and Nancy also returns and warns Martingale of the danger he is in. Martingale comments on Nancy's likeness to his own lost daughter and it is discovered that she is his granddaughter. He adopts her to avoid embarrassing explanations. At a meeting of the gang Jake tells them that Nancy has escaped and that he is through with the life he has been leading. The hunchback unexpectedly sides with Jake, and in the fight which follows they are the winners. They leave their old haunts and go to Martingale's residence, arriving there at the time of a reception given in honor of Leslie's engagement to Nancy. His identity is made known to Martingale, who at first refuses to have anything to do with him, but later yields to Nancy's pleas. Later Jake and the hunchback are given good jobs at Martingale's factory, of which Leslie is made manager following Preston's discharge.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 35 "Atlanta, Ga." —May 10).—The metropolis of the South is the subject of this release, and the Traveller takes us through the busy railroad yards and terminals of the most important transfer point south of Mason's and Dixon's line. The extensive manufactures of cotton, fertilizers, patent medicines, car wheels, flour and iron are shown running at full capacity. The huge warehouses for the storage of cotton and tobacco are pictured, and for students of history the existing landmarks that show the vigor of Sherman's siege are very instructive.

"As an Umpire, Nosey Ned Is an Onion" is the title of the animated cartoon that makes up the balance of the reel. We can very well understand and appreciate the troubles of the gentleman who attempts to umpire a game without the proper mental and physical equipment. That's what Ned tries to do—we'll leave the rest to your imagination.

REEL LIFE NO. 2 (May 14).—This offering shows the Blackfeet Indians photographed in their own homes near the Glacial National Park in Montana. The region which they now use as reservation was the favorite hunting ground of their ancestors. Two-Gun-White-Calf, the hereditary chief of the tribe is seen marshalling his people and he proudly occupies the center of the stage. Three-Bears, the oldest living chief, runs his superior a close race for the honors.

Squaws, braves and maidens are shown in numbers. A demonstration of the Indian sign language as it has been used for centuries is given with such vividness that the trend of the conversation can be understood by those who have never left the city. The Blackfeet are in constant danger of floods and as a consequence they pray to the Under-Water God. This ceremony is shown with great attention to the details in order that students may have an accurate basis for opinions.

Other customs that are shown are the young braves dancing in competition for the hand of a maiden, a real war dance and the medicine elk ceremony that is held for the benefit of the sick.

As subsidiary numbers of the same reel are views of a cuttle-fish and a colony of ants. The cuttle-fish has ten arms with which it envelopes its prey and then eats the animals caught in its toils. For protection the animal has an ink bag, which squirts india ink, a dense, black fluid, and which hides it from sight. Naturally whenever the camera man attempted to "sheet" the beast, the pesky thing started squirting and it was only after many efforts and many spoiled feet of negatives before the picture was satisfactorily taken.

"ARMADALE" (Three Parts—May 25).—The cast: Neal, a lawyer (John Mackin); Alan Armadale, Sr., adopted son of the Armadale family (Henry W. Pemberton); Mrs. Armadale, his wife (Lucille Taft); The Doctor (Harry Chira); Miss Blanchard, later Mrs. Armadale (Kathleen Butler); Maid, later Miss Gwilt (Iva Shepard); Inglesby (Robert Clugston); Rev. Decemis Brock (James Levering); Alan Armadale, son of the disowned son (John Reinhard); Ozias Midwinter, son of the adopted Armadale (Alexander Gaden); Major Milroy (Charles A. Travis). Directed by Richard Garrick.

The story opens with Alan Armadale, Sr., on his death bed. With him are his wife, his infant son and family physician. They have been travelling but are forced to stop through the serious condition of the senior Armadale. Calling for a lawyer, that his confession may be legal, Armadale tells the following story:

At the age of twenty-one he had taken the name and become sole heir to the Armadale fortune. The legal son of the house had been cast out because of disgrace he brought upon the family name. The adopted son falls in love with a Miss Blanchard through her photograph. At the same time he meets a young chap called Inglesby, who in reality is the blood son of the house of Armadale. The two men become friendly, and Armadale, in a burst of confidence, tells Inglesby of his infatuation for Miss Blanchard. Shortly afterwards Armadale is stricken with fever.

Upon Armadale's recovery he learns that his friend Inglesby has gone away. The young lover leaves shortly for Madeira, to meet and woo the unknown Miss Blanchard. He arrives at the home of the girl only to learn that Inglesby had been there before, and that the two were now husband and wife. The outlawed son, Inglesby, had recognized the foster son, Armadale, and had, through stealing from him the girl of his choice, repaid in full measure the loss of his own fortune and name. Meeting Inglesby, Armadale learns that he has married the former Miss Blanchard under the name of Armadale, the girl thinking him to be the foster son and heir. The two men exchange cards and a duel is arranged.

In the meantime, Inglesby confesses to his wife the truth of his assumed inheritance. The wife accompanies him in quick flight aboard ship. When Armadale arrives at the beach chosen for the duel he learns that Inglesby has taken flight. Quickly pursuing him, in a swift yacht, he arrives to find the ship carrying the fleeing Inglesby, his wife and her young maid, a victim of a big storm at sea. Armadale, in the pursuing boat, gives quick aid to the passengers, rescuing Mrs. Inglesby and maid among the first.

Inglesby returned to the cabin to find his wife's jewels. Armadale followed him there, and locked him in the stateroom. Inglesby thus perished. His wife and her maid escape and drop out of the life of Armadale, who marries later and has a son. This is the confession of Armadale. It is followed by his dramatic death.

The story then deals with the fortunes of the son of the adopted Armadale, known as Midwinter, and the son of the disinherited Armadale of the earlier story who now enjoys the name of his forefathers as well as Armadale fortune. Legally, Midwinter should have the position. Mrs. Armadale, ne Blanchard, has been a party to the crime of her drowned husband in failing to disclose the proper heir to the millions. She is devoted to her son, but endures a fearful menace in the person of a mysterious veiled woman who pays her visits frequently to collect hush money. The veiled visitor is the erstwhile maid who had been Mrs. Armadale's companion on the fateful sea flight when the husband was drowned.

Armadale, the son, is out riding one day when he chances upon a stranger, hungry and exhausted. The former takes the stranger into a nearby inn and cares for him. Upon the latter's recovery he tells his benefactor that his name is Midwinter. Armadale gives his name. Midwinter recognizes in his friend the man who is keeping him out of his rightful inheritance, but because he knows, too, of his own father's share in the death of Armadale's father, Midwinter decides to allow his friend uninterrupted enjoyment of his wealth and position. Midwinter becomes a guest in the Armadale home. Mrs. Armadale recognizes him, but fears to make her discovery known. One night, from his room, Armadale sees the figure of a woman dancing gayly and with abandon on the moonlit lawn of a neighbor's home. He is vastly attracted to the girl and makes an effort to meet her. She vanishes however, leaving a gauzy veil in her trail. The following day Armadale calls upon his neighbor in the hope that the fair dancer may have been the daughter of the house. Instead, she is the governess, known as Miss Gwilt. Armadale is deeply infatuated.

In the meantime his mother has died, and with her one link that might bind the boy to the secret of his false position. Midwinter in the meantime has discovered that Miss Gwilt is no other than the young girl who acted as maid to Mrs. Armadale on the sea voyage when the deception as to legal rights was practiced. That she is a schemer is plain to Midwinter but Armadale will hear nothing against his promised wife. It is at this point that Midwinter finds his big opportunity to repay to the son the debt he owes him. Midwinter captures the fancy of Miss Gwilt and is caught by Armadale leaving her bed chamber late at night. Armadale is prostrated by the shock. He has recently drawn up his will, preparatory to his marriage, naming Miss Gwilt as his heiress. The woman knows this, and, in one last attempt to gain the wealth she has struggled so hard to win, attempts to poison the sleeping Armadale. Midwinter frustrates her plan and at the same time unveils to the eyes of the believing Armadale the duplicity of his former fiancee. The sound, lasting friendship that springs up between the sons of the two men who had fought and struggled to injure each other, comes as a pleasant climax to the story.

THE GIRL WITH THE GREEN EYES (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—May 15).—While strolling through the park one evening, Travers comes upon a woman about to throw herself in the lake. It is his sister. She was betrayed she tells him, by a man who is the father of her son, and, unable to endure her destitution, is about to end it all.

Travers soothes her and promises to take care of her and her child. He furnishes an apartment for them and makes frequent calls there, on one of which he is seen and recognized by Mansfield, a clubman of his, who, infatuated with Mrs. Travers, uses this suspicious, though unconfirmed incident in trying to persuade her to give him her love.

Mrs. Travers, made credulous by her insane jealousy of her husband, slightly encourages Mansfield, who, with the bravado of his sort boasts at the club of his affair with her. Travers hears of this and is uncontrollable. He sends for his sister to come to his dressing room in the theatre, and Mansfield, hearing of it, brings Mrs. Travers to surprise him. Here is the big scene of the play wherein Travers demands of Mansfield an explanation of his conduct, and Travers' sister recognizes Mansfield as the man who deserted her. Travers attempts to kill Mansfield who is saved by the police.

Then Mrs. Travers, learning the identity of "the other woman," and ridden by remorse for the jealousy that has made her doubt her husband and lose his love, attempts to poison herself. She is saved, however, and reunited to her husband by a love whose constant light outshines the occasional flashes from her "green eyes."

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 12, "The Haunted Canvas" (Feature—Two Parts—May 15).—The latest episode tells how that mysterious agent for good, "The Laughing Mask," "foe of evildoers," discovers that Janet O'Mara, a poor girl, who has incurred the emnity of "The Iron Claw," is in danger and goes to an artist's studio to aid her. As she is made captive by "The Iron Claw," and his henchmen, who have first overpowered the artist, "The Laughing Mask" stationed behind a canvas of a man holding a gun, shoots poisoned needles at her captors through the gun barrel. Suspecting false play, Margery Golden, Dan O'Mara, (the girl's father) and her fiance come to the studio with the police, but "The Laughing Mask" and the "Iron Claw" make their escape. Margery, in her car, trails "The Iron Claw" to his den, but in making her escape, her chauffeur is killed. However, she learns the plans of the master criminal and reaches the O'Mara home in time to warn them of the explosion of a bomb. "The Laughing Mask" is already there and tosses the missile out of the window, thus again saving Margery. Interesting developments follow in the next episode. It is called "The Hidden Face."

WHO'S GUILTY? No. 2 "The Tight Rein" (Feature—2 Parts—May 15).—This picture tells the story of two wealthy mill owners, one with a high-strung son and the other with a high-minded daughter—who wish to perpetuate the union of their factories through the mating of their children. Now the son of the one man respects the daughter of the other, but there his interest in her ceases; he loves one of his father's mill-hands, and she one of the minor employees in her father's place. When the son marries as his father wishes him to, he is to become a partner in the joint factories. The girl, however, has no escape from the deadly struggle for existence except marriage; and her ideals of marriage forbid this step for selfish purposes.

When the fathers discover that their plans are likely to be thwarted the girl not only is discharged but she is black-listed in the town. Yet she and her mother are dependent solely on her meagre earnings. The son is tied even more closely to dependence on his fatrer by having even his small allowance stopped. Here is fertile ground for rebellion—and rebellion there is. The girl goes to a nearby city where she becomes one of many of a kind. The son searches for her, finds her, and is alone with her but a moment when the man she is dependent on rushes in, and misinterpreting their meeting, shoots both. Who's Guilty?

RECKLESS WRESTLERS (Mittenthal—May 15).—"Heinie," the "masked marvel" who, to convince the lady of his love that he had prowess beyond that of all other men, entered the arena, and from its mat challenged the world. But "Heinie" is far seeing. In collusion with his partner in crime, "Louie," he rigs up a mechanical device whereby "Louie," behind the scenes, at a signal from "Heinie" presses a button that releases a spike in the centre of the floor, which spike punctures the spinal column of the wrestler over it, and so makes him unfit for further dispute. Jack, another aspirant for the hand of the fair dame in the case, also enters the lists. Heinie's stunt works well, and in some screamingly funny bouts he manages to disable four of his most feared rivals. "Louie," behind the scenes, made careless by the easy success of his button pushing work, falls asleep, and when he awakes instinctively pushes the button. But alas! "Heinie" is over the spike at that moment and takes the count. Then Jack puts the other contenders wise, and "Heinie" and "Louie" show better form as sprinters than they have in any of their previous accomplishments.

SIBERIA, THE VAST UNKNOWN, NO. 7 (Pathe—May 15).—The pictures show a round-up of more than 10,000 reindeer. The Siberian natives depend on the reindeer for their very existence, for the animal furnishes them with food and clothing, and is their only beast of burden. The film shows the herds being driven in from the plains, the native woman erecting tents for the herders and building a corral of upturned sleds and tent frames covered with skins. Then the vast herd, moving and nudulating like a great sea, is shown driven into the corral. Like the American cowboy, the Siberian herders are expert lasso throwers. They are shown ehre roping the deer to clip their ears for identification, which corresponds to the branding of live stock in this country. Many more interesting scenes are shown and this entertaining and instructive half reel ends up with a view of the herders at dinner at the end of a strenuous day in which more than 8,000 deer were roped and their ears clipped.

ON THE ISLAND OF LUZON (Philippine Islands—Pathe—On the same reel as foregoing).—The film starts with a picture of the natives of the Philippines observing the festival of St. Pashal Bailen. Throughout the islands, the natives are deeply religious, and church holidays always are times of great celebration. Dealers in articles of religious devotion do an immense business on holy days, and are shown here disposing of their wares. Next is shown one of the quaint native dances that is performed only on the feast days of the church. The palanquin, a hammock slung on a big bamboo carrier, is the favorite method of traveling of the more prosperous natives, whom we see lying back at their ease. Many other interesting scenes are shown, including the primitive methods of the Philippinoes for watering a rice field, a Philippino baby's bath, and "moving day."

HIS BITTER PILL (Keystone—Two Parts, —April 30). The cast: Mack Swain, Louella Maxam, Ella Haines and Edgar Kennedy.

Swain, the sheriff, and Kenneuy, a gambler, are rivals for the affection of Louella, the local belle, with the representative of law and order the favorite. Through a misunderstanding, however, the gambler makes a spurt and comes under the wire first in the race. This he has accomplished by sending a confederate to shoot up a saloon while the sheriff is talking to Louella. Summoned to duty, Swain departs and is gone so long that the lady becomes petulant and willingly accepts the cuit of the devottee of chance.

When the sheriff finally returns to Louella and learns his fate, he departs to his home in tears. In his grief he is interrupted by a hold-up in the distance. Through his telescope he sees Kennedy single-handed holding up a stage coach. At the head of a posse he trails the bandit to the home of Louella. The fugitive departs by way of the chimney, leaving his boots in plain view. Thinking the criminal is still in the boots, the sheriff starts a fire to smoke him out. But Kennedy has gone. Once more Swain hits the trail and shoots his quarry from his horse. The prisoner is about to be lynched when Louella pleads for his life. Her request granted, she sinks into the arms of the sheriff.

THE NO-GOOD GUY (Ince—Five parts—May 7). The cast: Jimmy Coghlan (William Collier); Lucia Andrada (Enid Markey); "Big Malone" (Charles K. French); "Hair Trigger" Jo (Robert Kortman); Francisco Andrada (J. Frank Burke); Hawkins, Jimmy's valet (Walter Edwards).

Jimmy Coghlan is no good. His escapades are so notorious that even his uncle, "Big Malone," a political boss, is disgusted with him. Jimmy goes on the water wagon, but a stop watch wouldn't register the length of his stay, and his uncle's patience is exhausted when Jimmy runs his automobile into a department store on his way home from a cabaret party with several friends. Malone visits him in jail where he has been sent for reckless driving, and on Jimmy's promise to go to work, fixes it with the warden to release him.

Jimmy opens a detective agency and begins to worry for fear he will get a case. Andrada, who represents himself to be a bomb victim, comes with his daughter to retain him to run down the plotters. Lucia's dark eyes influence Jimmy to take the case and he goes into the underworld disguised as a gangster. In the midst of a gang fight he is so numbered by fear that the leader of the victorious gang mistakes his fear of fearlessness and invites him to join the gang. Jimmy is assigned to the job of blowing up a building and finds that Lucia is to be his confederate. She has joined the gang to learn their secrets.

After dynamiting a skyscraper Jimmy and Lucia hit the trail of the man higher up. By following "Hair Triger" Joe when he goes to get his pay for the job they discover that the principal in the case is none other than "Big Malone" himself. Jimmy then discusses the guardianship of his uncle, takes his affairs into his own hands, and Lucia into his arms.

THE GOOD BAD-MAN (Fine Arts—5 parts—May 7).—The cast: "Passin' Through" (Douglas Fairbanks); Bud Frazer (Sam De Grasse); Bob Evans (Pomeroy Cannon); "The Weazel" (Joseph Singleton): Amy, his daughter (Bessie Love); Jane Stuart (Mary Alden); Thomas Stuart (George Beranger); Sheriff (Fred Burns).

An eccentric outlaw, himself ignorant of his parentage, exhibits as the motive for the majority of his crimes his desire to aid unfortunate children. For instance, he robs a grocery store and gives the loot to a little orphan kid. Always cheerful, always smiling, he goes to such lengths as to hold up the Pacific Express to get the conductor's ticket punch.

One day he rides into the alleged mine where Bud Frazer's band of bandits made their rendezvous. Just "Passing' Through," he replies to their queries as to his identity. They send him to the shack of "The Weazel" for shelter and there he finds Amy. It is love at first sight and the stranger doesn't stay long. He doesn't know who he is so he rides away from the girl and shoots up a saloon in Maverick City just because he is in love and doesn't care what happens. A sheriff handy with the rope puts a halt to the proceedings but a United States marshal prevents a lynching. The marshal proves to be a former suitor of the prisoner's mother and from him "Passin' Through" learns that he has a right to hold his head as high as any man's. Bud Frazer coveted her and when he lost her he shot his rival and hounded mother and child until the former died.

Meanwhile Frazer, now known as "The Wolf," has learned the real identity of the stranger. He now covets Amy and she is forced to accompany his band to Maverick City to await the killing of "Passin' Through" and then become the wife of "The Wolf" "Passin' Through," gunning for Frazer, is taken by surprise but escapes when the marshal arives with his posse. Frazer is killed, the bandits are exterminated and "Passin' Through" rides away to the horizon with Amy sitting behind.

A DASH OF COURAGE (Keystone—Two parts—May 7). The cast: Harry Gribbon, Wallace Beery, Guy Woodward, Gloria Swanson and William Mason.

A band of crooks, headed by Harry Gribbon, are on a train when they learn of a telegram sent to a fellow passenger, who is a police commissioner. The wire identifies him as official collector for the Old Cops' Home. A little chloroform does for him and when the train pulls out of his destination he is still on board while Gribbon is posing as the commissioner-collector.

Great preparations have been made to receive the distinguished visitor. The only drawback to the welcome is the sour music dispensed by the police band. The musicians are sent upstairs in the police station to practice some more, and here they are found by Gribbon's associates. A quart of choloroform poured into the base horn stops their discords and while they are asleep the crooks exchange clothing with them.

During the interruption Gribbon has begun his collecting by attempting to rob the safe of the richest man in town. Woodward telephones for the police and the crooks respond. They suggest that he wait until the culprit has the money, which can be used as evidence. Gribbon is then arrested by his own men. Woodward suspicious after a long wait, again telephones to the station and is answered by the real police, who have revived. Their pursuit is complicated by the fact that they are wearing the clothes which belong to the pursued. A combination of thrills and laughs brings the picture to a close.

THE ORDEAL OF ELIZABETH (Vitagraph—Five Parts—May 15).—The cast: Elizabeth Van Vorst (Lillian Walker); Julian Gerard (Evart Overton); Paul Hallock (Denton Vane); Amanda (Ollie Walker); Cornelia Van Antwerp (Mrs. M. Storey); Aunt Rebecca (Kate Price); The District Attorney (L. Rogers Lytton); D'Hauteville (Templar Saxe); The Judge (R. M. S. Putnam); Elizabeth's Mother (Karin Norman); Elizabeth's Father (Walter McGrail). Director Wilfrid North. Author, George C. Hazelton.

At first sight of Elizabeth Van Vorst, Hallock loses interest in her cousin, Amanda, whom he professed to love. Bereft of parents at an early age, Elizabeth was left in the care of a matronly aunt, Cornelia. Now, at twenty, she is a charming young miss. While visiting her cousin, Amanda, she meets Hallock, a wandering artist and musician. Attracted by her loveliness and charm, he forgets his avowed love for her cousin, and becomes infatuated with Elizabeth. Elizabeth's old-fashioned aunt objects to her friendship with a man whose affections are so easily swayed, and forbids her to see him. Piqued at her aunt's objection, Elizabeth continues to see him and he asks her to be his bride. After much pleading, she goes with him to a neighboring town where they are married. Fearing her aunt's ire, she pledges her husband to secrecy. She continues to live at home, while Hallock returns to the city, where he soon forgets his wife.

Through an accident, Elizabeth meets and becomes interested in Julian Gerard, a gentleman from New York. Later, at the home of a mutual friend in New York they meet again. Their interest rapidly ripens into love. A prominent artist paints her portrait and when it is shown, she becomes the belle of the season. She goes to many social affairs with Gerard, and at one of them, is seen by her husband, who determines to use her apparent love for Gerard to his own benefit. In sore straits, he demands that she help him socially and financially, holding their marriage over her should she refuse. Elizabeth, unable to meet his demands for money sells her jewels. When she takes the black mail to him, she is seen by Amanda, who is in Hallock's power. Thinking Elizabeth's relations with Hallock are the same as her own Amanda, in a fierce tirade, upbraids her for coming between them. Gerard, deeply in love with Elizabeth, persistently pleads his suit and is puzzled by her attitude. Although he can see that she loves him, she refuses to give him an affirmative answer, nor will she explain her action. Finally, he demands an explanation and she tells him of her unfortunate marriage. Despondent, he leaves the country to go on a long hunting trip to try and forget his sorrow.

Soon after Gerard's departure, Hallock is found dead in his room, with a bottle of poison by his side bearing mute evidence to the cause of death. Elizabeth attracts suspicion to herself by a display of emotion, is taken into custody and held without bail. The trial begins. In connection with other damaging evidence, the testimony of the maid, who heard Elizabeth express a wish for Hallock's death, seems to nullify her chances of acquittal.

In London, Gerard reads of the murder and the trial of Elizabeth. He leaves at once for America, where, on his arrival, he gives evidence which sways the case in Elizabeth's favor. After hours of deliberation, the jury returns the verdict of not guilty, and Elizabeth is freed. After the trial she is summoned to the bedside of Amanda in a hospital. Here, with her life blood fast ebbing, Amanda confesses to the murder of Hallock telling of the disgrace and humiliation he had caused her. Her confession finished, her lips are sealed forever by the hand of death. After their marriage, Elizabeth and Gerard leave for a honeymoon in the country, where Elizabeth will have an opportunity to blot the terrible ordeal from her memory.

LARGEST SUPPLY HOUSE IN U. S. A.

Written by Chas. T. Dazey. Director, Paul Scardon.

After landing a big "haul," Dave Darcey, a crook, decides to spend part of his booty by holding a dance for his followers. Paddy Burns, leader of a rival faction, decides to settle an old score with Dave by breaking up the affair. On the night of the dance he goes at the head of his gang with the avowed intention to "get" Dave. In the struggle, Dave shoots Paddy and makes good his escape. He is seen by Phillip Brenton, the son of the owner of the steel works, who thinks he is there to rob the house and demands an explanation, Dave explains the whole affair to him, and Phillip gives him a chance to make good by giving him a job in the steel plant. Phillip's father is not so sure of Dave's reformation, and tests him by leaving a large roll of bills exposed. Dave sees the money and a struggle with his other self follows. The new Dave comes out the winner and he returns the money.

The Baroness Von Ehrenstein, a secret agent for a foreign government, learns that the Benton Steel Works have accepted a huge war order for a nation hostile to her own. She gets permission from Phillip to visit the plant on the pretext of getting local color for a novel she is writing. Phillip personally guides her and her accomplices through the plant and they make a thorough study of the place. Phillip has become greatly interested in the Baroness and is neglecting his fiance, Grace. The latter notices his continued absence and asks Dave the cause. The latter, in order to protect Phillip, tells her that it is business. Dave, suspicious of the Baroness, warns Phillip of her and his young employer resents his interference and discharges him.

While Phillip is in a drunken stupor, the Baroness steals his office keys from him and gives them to her confederates who hasten to the steel works. Suspicious of their actions, Dave follows them and sees them plant bombs in the factory. He tries to foil them and a fight follows. Dave is finally subdued and is left, bound hand and foot, by the burning bombs. He rolls himself over to a saw and works frantically till he severs his bonds. He then starts to stamp out the fuses of the bombs, but one of them explodes and he is caught in the wreckage. The watchman, having seen part of the struggle, follows the conspirators. The police arrive at the scene and are closely followed by Phillip and his father. The latter accuses Dave of attempting to destroy his plant, and also charges him with the murder of Paddy Burns. The watchman returns with the real culprits and tells the true story, thus clearing Dave of guilt. One of the policemen then tell Dave that he need not fear of trial for murder, as Paddy is still alive, having been only slightly injured by the shot. Dave is acquitted of the charge of assault which he had to answer to for the shooting and returns to a better job with the Benton Steel Works. Phillip and Grace are reunited.

"KERNEL NUTT WINS A WIFE" (Vitagraph—May 22).—The cast: Mr. Jack (Mr. Frank Daniels); Martha (Miss Alice Washburn); Dotty (Miss Adele de Garde). Author, Reginal Wright Kaufman. Director, Mr. C. Jay Williams.

"Want a wife? They're a fine thing to have around the house." So sayeth the sage, Kernel Nutt, proprietor of a matrimonial agency in his eager search for customers. He finally gets Smith, a poor fellow who wants some one to sew buttons on his vest, to advertise in the Matrimonial Gazete. He receives an answer from a woman in a small town. They correspond for some time, each letter containing more than the one before.

Then Smith gets an unexpected inheritance and decides to call off the marriage with Martha, and live a gay life. Martha has something to say about that though, and comes to the city to bring suit for breach of promise. Smith gives Nutt a bankroll and tells him to take his place when Martha arrives, thinking that his face will scare her off, but when a woman gets as ancient as Martha without corraling a husband, looks don't make much difference and she determines that Mr. Smith shall not elude her. Nutt does a "fade away" but is brought back by a detective, and forced at the point of a gun, to take the old spinster "for better or for worse, till death do us part, etc.," much to his chagrin.

"POLICE" (Essanay—Two Parts—May 27).—The cast: Convict 999, alias Charlie (Charlie Chaplin); The Girl (Edna Purviance); The Cook (Wesley Ruggles); The Miser (Billy Armstrong); The "Cop" (John Rand); Lodging House Keeper (Leo White).

Charles Chaplin, a convict, is given $5.00 and released from prison after having served his term. He meets a man of the church who makes him weep for his sins and while he is weeping takes the $5.00 away from him. Chaplin goes to a fruit stand and samples the fruit. When he goes to pay for it he finds his $5.00 is missing. This results in a battle with the fruit dealer, but Chaplin finally escapes.

He is held up by a footpad and finds it is his former cellmate. He is inveigled into joining him in robbing a house. They put a police officer out of commission with a mallet and stack up the silverware. They then start upstairs to search the upper rooms, but are met by a young woman who implores them to leave because her mother is ill and fears the shock will kill her.

Chaplin's heart is touched but the footpad insists on ransacking the house. This results in a battle between the footpad and Chaplin. While they are fighting, a squad of police arrives. The footpad makes his escape, but the police capture Chaplin. The woman of the house, however, saves him by telling the police he is her husband. She gives him a dollar and he leaves.

He goes to a lodging house and in order to save his dollar from thieves puts it in his mouth, swallowing it while he sleeps. A crook robs all the men in the lodging house but Chaplin takes the money away from him, and also the rings his "pal" had stolen. This starts a battle in which all join. Chaplin flees. In order to do a good turn to the woman who had saved him from the police, he takes her rings back.

THE SUSPECT (Vitagraph—Five Parts—May 29).—The cast: Sophie (Anita Stewart); Paul Karatoff (S. Rankin Drew); Duke Karatoff (Anders Randolf); Jack (Bobby Connelly); Lady Armitage (Julia Swayne Gordon); Sir Richard (Frank Wupperman); Valdor (George Cooper); Mouroff (Edward Elkas); Falk (Albert Rabock); Mouroff's wife (Anna Brody). Directed by S. Rankin Drew.

Mouroff's aim is bad; the bomb which he threw at Karatoff, the butcher, explodes harmlessly many feet away. Karatoff's son Paul, puts spurs to his horse, and chases the nihilist. The latter is elusive, but Paul trails him and enters a house after him. Once inside, Valdor, another nihilist, stuns Paul with a blow from his club and carries him to his apartment.

Valdor would willingly let him die from loss of blood, but Sophie commands him to heal the wound. This, at first, puzzles Valdor, coming as it does from Sophie Karrinini, leader of the nihilists and one who has ample reasons to hate Karatoff and his kin; but in an undertone, she explains. The sight of Paul Karatoff rouses to her mind vivid recollections of the scene, years before, when Paul's father compelled her to stand helplessly by, while her father was tortured to death, and her mother had died from the effects of the gruesome sight. Now what is the one little life of Paul Karatoff? She can find better ways to strike at the butcher's heart, by allowing him to live.

Paul returns to consciousness, and Sophie gives him her most tender care. She listens, apparently horrified, to his tale of the attempt on his father's life. Soon, he is well enough to be moved, and is returned in safety to his father, cherishing in his heart, a love for Sophie. He asks her to be his bride. This being the first step in her plan, she readily consents. Karatoff's son the husband of a nihilist! But then—their child is born—and with the boon of motherhood comes the realization that she loves Paul more than the cause.

Having heard rumors of his wife's affiliation with the nihilists, Paul confronts her with the evidence and she confesses. He leaves to expose her, but is waylaid and stunned by Valdor, who throws his apparently lifeless form into the ice of the river. Mouroff, on the way to the market, finds the body, and seeing signs of life, takes it home with him. When Paul awakes, his memory is gone and Mouroff brings him up as a nihilist. Valdor returns to Sophie and tells her that the police have killed her husband.

Miss ELSIE LECLAIRE

IN THE EXCITING 5 REEL DRAMA

"A WOMAN WILLS"

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY

MOVING PICTURE WORLD—As the story progresses the plot increases in interesting complications and offers not a few situations of melodramatic strength, a sound story interest and artistic workmanship.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS—Elsie Leclaire is the actress who carries away the dare-devil honors. She is very fearless, but she is an equally good actress.

SUNDAY TELEGRAPH—It is the kind of play that has always been popular and remains so.

N. Y. SUNDAY REVIEW—The action takes Miss Leclaire through scenes of modern warfare and involves her in the intrigues of international spies.

under an assumed name, Sophie meets Sir Richard Stanhope, an English nobleman, and they become interested in each other. Karatoff captures a nihilist messenger from whom he learns of a meeting of the band, and being unknown to the members, he takes the place of the messenger. He meets Richard, to whom he is known, and explains the reason for his assumed name. Mouroff receives the call to the meeting and takes Paul along. At the meeting Mouroff recognizes and denounces Karatoff and the true identities of all are established. While Karatoff is greeting his son, a shot is fired, intended for Karatoff, but it kills Paul. The police rush into the place and arrest all present, including Richard who had just appeared on the scene. Little Jack, Sophie's son, is now a Prince. His pleas for his mother's freedom are finally granted by his grandfather, Karatoff, with whom he returns to Russia to fulfill the duties of his heritage. Sophie now leaves her nihilistic tendencies behind, as she travels, in peace, at last, to England with Richard.

KERNUL NUTT, THE FOOTMAN (Vitagraph —May 29).—The cast: Kernel Nutt (Frank Daniels); Mr. Gotrox (John T Kelly); Mrs. Gotrox (Alice Washburn); Stenographer (Adele de Garde). Written by Charles Brown. Directed by C. Jay Wiliams.

"Confidence, that's the stuff in landing jobs." Nutt takes the kind advice and starts out with lots of the requirement to connect wih old Gotrox, but all he gets is a rather strong "request" to vamoose. Seeing an advertisement for a footman, he lands it, though he knows nothing about feet, and is ignorant of the fact that it is Gotrox's house. Gotrox recognizes him but is restrained from kicking him out by the presence of his guests. Nutt helps himself to samples of all the foods and drinks in the house.

Later the host tells a funny story and in laughing, Nutt who is assisting in the serving spills wine all over Gotrox's shortfront. In his hurry to escape, he snatches a wig from Mrs. Gotrox's head and this gives him an idea. He dons the crowning glory, drapes himself in a curtain, poses as one of the female guests—and gets away with it. While they are searching for him, he appropriates various tender morsels of food and kisses the place good-bye. In the park he spreads the food on a bench before him, and rubs his hands in anticipation of a hearty meal. His fond hope goes soaring away when a cop appears on the scene and poor, disgruntled Nutt sulks off, leaving a free meal for friend officer.

GEORGE KLEINE.

LOST IN THE EVERGLADES (Chapter 1 of "Gloria's Romance"—May 22).—The cast: Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke); Dr. Royce (Henry Kohler); Richard Freneau (David Powell); David Stafford (William Roselle); Frank Mulry (Frank Belcher); Pierpont Stafford (William T. Carleton); Lois Freeman (Jule Power).

Gloria Stafford, the young and vivacious daughter of Pierpont Stafford, a wealthy New York banker, goes with her father and brother, David, to spend the winter at Palm Beach, Florida. There Gloria meets and attracts the attention of young Dr. Royce, who is attending Judge Freeman, a friend of the Stafford family, who, with his daughter, Lois, is likewise spending the winter at Palm Beach. David, Gloria's brother, is in love with Lois Freeman and soon discovers that Richard Freneau, a young broker, in charge of the Palm Beach branch office of his firm, is to be his rival for the hand of Lois. Gloria Stafford is under the care of a rather strict governess who insists upon her performing certain tasks each day. Gloria resents the rigid rules laid down by her governess and succeeded in getting Dr. Royce to assist with the problem given her to solve, a task Dr. Royce is glad to assume, merely for the privilege of being near the girl he is learning to admire.

One night Gloria eludes her governess, steals out of her room in the Royal Ponciana Hotel, looks in upon the gay throng in the ballroom of the hotel, and then, noting her brother's big racing car at the curb, climbs aboard and goes for a moonlight spin along the beach, all by herself. While running the car at high speed she loses control of the steering gear and the car rushes straight out into the breakers of the Atlantic ocean. Gloria succeeds in getting safely out of the car, but loses her way when she attempts to return to the hotel afoot, and dawn finds her wandering in the Everglades, a most lonesome and forlorn little maid.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (Chapter Two—"Caught the Seminoles"—May 29).—The cast: Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke); Dr. Royce (Henry Kolker); Richard Freneau (David Powell); David Stafford (William Roselle); Frank Mulry (Frank Belcher); Pierpont Stafford (William T. Carleton); Jule Freeman (Jule Power).

Gloria Stafford, daughter of Pierpont Stafford, New York millionaire, and sister of David Stafford, after losing herself in the Everglades of Florida, while on a midnight lark in her brother's racing auto, finds her way to the hut of a Florida "cracker" where she obtains a bite to eat and a suit of boy's clothing, in exchange for an expensive ring and a gold bracelet. After discarding her torn and tattered Lucile gown, which was ruined by her plunge in the ocean and wanderings through the sword-grass of the Everglades, Gloria dons the suit of boy's clothing and sets out to find her way back to the Royal Ponciana Hotel at Palm Beach, where her father, brother and governess are staying.

The son of the "cracker" sends her in the wrong direction and hours later she wanders into a camp of Seminole Indians and is taken captive. Chief Katcalani, the young brave who has just fallen heir to the chieftenship of the tribe, is much struck by Gloria's beauty and makes bold to propose to her. He offers her a dollar watch, 16 handkerchiefs, 18 shirts and a gay-colored turban with four silver dollars in the band, if she will become his "squaw," but Gloria is unable to accept, having fainted dead away. Just about this time Dr. Royce, who has been searching the Everglades all night long for a trace of the missing heiress, comes upon the scene and at once clashes with Chief Katcalani.

The Seminole chief draws his knife and attacks Dr. Royce, but the husky young physician after a hard struggle succeeds in disarming the chief and mixing things in a regular hammer and tongs fight with bare fists. While the fight is in progress Richard Freneau, also searching for Gloria in the hope of winning the reward which has been offered for her safe return, reaches the little clearing and discovers the unconscious girl. Noting that Royce is too busy to notice what is going on, Freneau bears Gloria away and finally restores her to her anxious father and excited brother. The girl, believing Freneau has really been her savior, is loud in her praises of his bravery and recommends him to her father in the highest terms. Royce, meanwhile, conquers his Indian adversary, returns to find Gloria gone, follows Freneau's trail and arrives on the scene just in time to learn that the young broker has been cad enough to claim credit for a rescue he never performed.

NORTHWESTERN MOTION PICTURE EQUIPMENT CO. INC. MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. U.S.A.

Theodore, while the rightful king, Prince Michael, lives in Paris on the money provided by his rich American wife. Their son, Alexis, is given to idling his time in the Latin quarter, where he has met and loves an American girl, in Paris studying art.

Stampoff leads the militant party in Kosnovis through his control of "The Bloody Seventh," a regiment of butchers. Stampoff causes the death of King Theodore, intending to put the foppish and weak minded Prince Michael on the throne. But Michael refuses to risk assassination and his son, Alexis is chosen by Stampoff to rule.

Going to Kosnovia to be crowned, Alexis breaks down tradition in making a speech to the lawmakers assembled declaring that he will not become their king unless he shall be chosen by election to fill the office. Because Alexis insists that the murderer of Theodore shall be executed, Stampoff plans to have Alexis assassinated, for the new King is too democratic and has in too many ways endeared himself to the populace.

Twice Stampoff's plans to assassinate Alexis fail; and Alexis grows more and more popular with his subjects. One incident that eventually had great bearing upon the future of Alexis and the Kingdom was when he descended from his horse and danced in the street with a poor girl, so unattractive that nobody else would dance with her.

This girl chanced to overhear a third plot to assassinate the King. Knowing that the "Bloody Seventh" would be engaged in the assassination, the girl tries first to have the proper officials checkmate the plot, and, failing in this, she rides a horse from door to door and arouses the people to the defence of their young and idolized King.

When matters reach a crisis, and the assassins' plot for a third time fails, the foppish old Prince Michael is called to take the throne in accord with plans Stampoff has made. Alexis has all along insisted that the American girl he loves should become his Queen, but despite her own love for Alexis she realizes that her marriage with Royalty would be illegal and that she would be wife in name only.

The end of the tangle is a surprise. When Alexis is called upon to either renounce the American girl or his throne, he is quick to chose the girl—and then his American mother makes a confession that brings the story to a happy ending.

WORLD EQUITABLE.

SUDDEN RICHES (Peerless—Five Parts—May 15).—The cast: Robert Crewe (Robert Warwick); Marion Crewe (Gerda Holmes); Suzanne (Clara Whipple); Little Emily (Madge Evans). Scenario written by E. Richard Schoyer. Directed by Emile Chautard.

On his death-bed, old Abner Crewe wills his entire fortune, $5,000,000, to his nephew, Robert. The legacy is made in the spirit of revenge because Robert's father loved and won the girl old Abner himself sought to marry. Then his mother died in giving birth, which was a double reason why old Abner disliked the young man

Robert, an ambitious young architect in New York city, with a fine wife and beautiful child, has everything to live for. In making his will, old Abner chuckles as he tells his attorney: "He has a good little wife and baby—something to work for, eh? We dump these millions in his lap. What happens? Their entire life is changed. They move to new quarters, they plunge into the swirl of gay society. With no need of work, his ambition dies—he becomes an idle, dissipated man about town. Their home life is disrupted, sooner or later will come the crash. Wait and see. I'll give them two years."

When Robert receives the money, all of his uncle's prophesies come true. The young couple move to better quarters and enter society. Robert meets Suzanne, a Broadway siren, with whom he becomes infatuated. He abandons his work and forgets his wife and child. The child, deserted by its parents, is left to the care of servants more and more. Marion becomes infatuated with a society portrait painter, who has his studio apartment in the same building where Robert's mistress lives. After considerable urging, Marion agrees to visit the painter's studio to pose for her portrait. Nothing serious happens until one evening, after receiving a 'phone call from Robert to the effect that he would have to spend the night in the city, Marion, more out of pique than anything else, motors into town to meet the painter in his apartment. The two couples come face to face in the hallway of the apartment house, as Marion is coming in.

There is a scene and both agree to separate Things go from bad to worse. Robert loses a great deal of money in his speculations and while attempting to recover some of the money he lavished on his mistress to help him out, there is a telephone call. It is for Robert. The butler at the Crewe home knew the 'phone number of Robert's clandestine establishment to use in case of emergency. The butler is greatly agitated. The Crewe child is dying and the butler is unable to get Mrs. Crewe, who is attending a ball at a neighboring country club.

He rushes in his motor car to the bedside of his child, then leaves to get Marion. Dishevelled and wild of eye, he brushes aside the doorman and other servants and reaches the ball room. His wife is gayly dancing. Heedless of the sensation he is causing, Robert pushes out upon the crowded floor, tears his wife and her partner apart and breaks the news to her. They both return to their child and watch carefully over her.

The crisis in the child's illness passes, the doctor announces she is out of danger, Marion and Robert, their souls seared by the night of suffering, begin to realize that all their suffering and all their trouble emanated from Uncle Abner's legacy. Beside the bed where lies their feeble, smiling child, the couple tenderly and solemnly plan the rebuilding of their happiness. Upon learning this, the old lawyer, sitting in his office, chuckles to himself, looking at Abner Crewe's portrait, "You had everything figured, Abner, excepting the child."

Founded in 1907

—The First Moving Picture Trade Paper in America.

—The paper that introduced the many helpful departments for Exhibitors which have all been imitated by each and every publication that has since entered the field.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

is the one paper in the industry all others try to follow and the one with which they all compare themselves.

Why?—Simply Because It Leads

MR. EXHIBITOR:

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD costs a little more than some others, but it is worth ten times its cost to YOU. Ask some of our old subscribers of six and seven years' standing and over.

We have the largest staff of the best known, most experienced, and ablest editors and correspondents in the country. Consequently our paper gives the biggest value to all of our readers. It is by far the greatest help to everyone in the industry, but particularly to the EXHIBITOR.

MR. ADVERTISER:

Our circulation among exhibitors and theatre men is in a class by itself. It has all been secured on the merits of the paper and the service it renders. We have paid no fancy commissions to subscription agents. We have never placed outside lists of exhibitors in any part of the country on a free mailing list for a period of several months. Moreover, our paper is promptly discontinued if a subscription is not renewed.

Ours is a circulation that brings results.

"I get 'THE WORLD' whatever else I may get" and "I would rather pay for your paper than get any other for nothing"—such expressions indicate the attitude of a large proportion of the readers of motion picture trade publications.

WE HAVE NOW AND ALWAYS HAVE HAD

The Largest Circulation Among Exhibitors Everywhere

Whether your theatre is large or small you need a FEDERAL Electric Sign

There is nothing better than a crowd and there is nothing better to attract crowds than a Federal Electric Sign. You can run over in your mind all the possible means of publicity you could afford to employ for your theatre and the fact remains that a Federal Electric Sign is by far the most efficient and economical means of attracting permanent and profitable patronage to your theatre.

The wide experience of the designers of Federal Electric Signs enables them to get the maximum publicity efficiency, whether you install a large or small sign.

Don't buy a cheap electric sign. If you wish to increase the line in front of your box office, you want to get in touch with us today. Find out how truly economical a Federal Electric Sign really is. Write now for special theatre bulletin No. 140.

New Panchroma Twin Arc

MODEL C

Used by leading producers all over the United States and adopted as the standard portable lighting unit for motion picture work.

PRICE $70

Price of Lamp complete, with collapsible reflector, rheostat and carrying-case containing all, and separate folding stand, $70.

THE new model C contains a number of improvements, which our experience of the past year indicates to be of additional convenience to the operator. The rheostat is now mounted on the lamp instead of being placed in the carrying case and the whole lamp has been made more rigid and solid. A special oscillating device fitted to the carbon feed keeps the carbons always in accurate contact. 8,000 c. p. guaranteed per lamp.

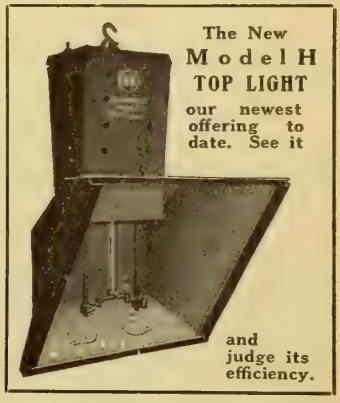
Total weight of each unit less than twenty pounds, exclusive of stand.

WE ARE LIGHTING EXPERTS FOR ALL PURPOSES IN MOTION PHOTOGRAPHY

We outfit operators for studio, transit, commercial and unusual purposes.

Rental terms on request at headquarters.

Lowest cost per operating unit.



The New Model H TOP LIGHT our newest offering to date. See it and judge its efficiency.

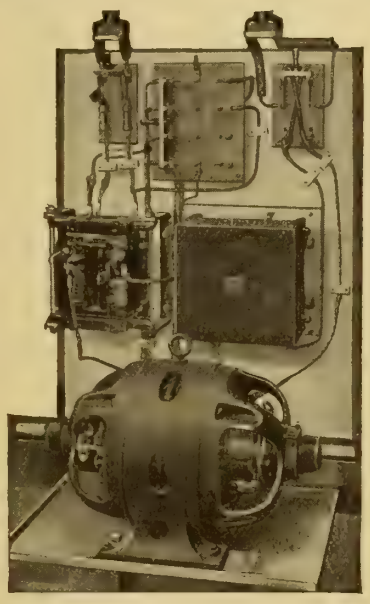
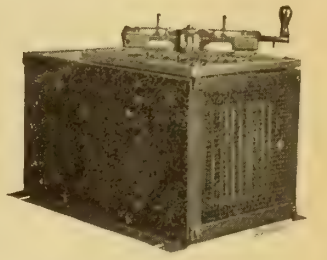
One Move of the Lever

OF THE WAGNER DUPLEX ARC REGULATOR,



Wagner White Light Converter

to change from one arc to another. To the audience it is one continuous reel without interruption even in the intensity of screen illumination. It relieves the operator from complicated adjustments and regulations. It allows him to devote his whole time to other duties.



Wagner Duplex Arc Regulator

The Wagner WHITE LIGHT Converter

This is only one of the features of the Wagner White Light Converter that permit QUALITY PROJECTION. Be consistent! You pay for good films—put them before your patrons right. We all agree DIRECT CURRENT is better and cheaper than alternating current. But the machine you buy must be simple, easily handled, reasonable in price, and above all DEPENDABLE. That last word is the key-note to success.

Simplicity means a big step toward dependability, freedom from repairs. The White Light Converter has one shaft, one armature, one set of coils, two bearings. No fragile parts, no complicated system of wiring or control. First cost is last cost. It is Wagner Quality

OUR FORESIGHT MEANT YOUR PROTECTION!!

Ten days after the outbreak of war we received the largest stock of French-made condensers ever shipped into this country

That's why we are able to offer you now

THE KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSER

at before-war-time prices. Foreign factories formerly engaged in the manufacture of optical goods for the entire world now devote their sole energies to war merchandise for their own countries, thus making possible the distribution of inferior, cheaply made and costly-in-the-long-run-domestic substitutes.

KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSERS are ground from pure optical glass. They do not discolor—no green, pink or purple effects after a brief use. They are the only satisfactory condensers on the American market today. If you are not using them you are not obtaining maximum results from your projection equipment.

PRICES:

Plano Convex
6½, 7½, 8½, 9½ and 10½ inch E. F., 4½ inch diameter $1.25

One Word "If"

You have been paying good money for film destroyed—

If you have been compelled to pay for part of a reel which was lost by fire, SOMETHING IS WRONG.

You know your projection room must have the best equipment; you will find the best in the MOTIOGRAPH.

THERE'S A REASON why the LATE MODEL MOTIOGRAPH has increased its sales 500% in less than six months.

Just one inspection of the MOTIOGRAPH in regard to its projection, simplicity, material used and SAFETY (approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters), will convince you that you should intall a LATE MODEL MOTIOGRAPH.

MOTION PICTURE
HANDBOOK

Published by

THE CHALMERS
Publishing Co.

The third and latest edition of this valuable work has just come from the presses.

It is bigger, better, and more helpful than have been either of its predecessors by the same able author.

In daily touch with practical operators throughout the country by reason of his connection with THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in which his PROJECTION DEPARTMENT is featured, Mr. Richardson is especially well qualified to deal with the problems which are constantly confronting the motion picture mechanics upon whose skill the industry depends so largely for its healthy growth.

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK is a carefully prepared guide to perfect projection.

It is an invaluable help to every single individual in the trade who has to do with the mechanical handling of motion picture film.

There are more than 400 Pages of Text and the illustrations—of which there are many—have been especially devised for this particular publication.

Substantially Bound in Red Cloth $4.00 the Copy.

Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors Fund of America

Exhibitors!

Many Exhibitors throughout America are contributing 10% of the gross receipts of their theatres on dates extending to June Fifteenth. Local conditions in many instances made this necessary.

Exhibitors!

If you have not donated 10% as yet please do so now or before June 15th.

The American public appreciate the worthiness of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors Fund of America and will help by packing your theatres and increasing your receipts on your day.

The Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors Fund Extends to June 15th

The wide range of this campaign and the support given it by the American public is largely due to the enthusiastic co-operation and assistance of Exhibitors in the United States of America. The Executive Committee extends them a hearty vote of thanks and grateful appreciation for their disinterested kindness.

POWER'S
Cameragraph No. 6B

The Perfect Moving Picture Machine

Efficiency is not of a mushroom growth; it is born of hard labor and study—and wisdom which profits by experience.

Power's Cameragraph represents an evolution extending over a period of sixteen years.

It is the result of ceaseless thought and research of a Master Mechanical Mind.

It stands for the elimination of all the crude and inefficient appliances of the past, and possesses every known feature of worth which present day knowledge affords.

It is manufactured throughout, in the largest and best equipped factory of its kind in the world.

It is used by the great majority of exhibitors in America.
